J. B. W., New Orleans, La. Is there anything in the Bible as to the status of infants in heaven, assuming that they do not remain infants?

The only pertinent thing we remember is that incident of David and his infant child (II. Samuel 12: 23), in which he expressed the belief that he would go to him. Evidently he expected joy in meeting the child and expected recognition. Christ made an enigmatical remark about the angels of children (Matt. 18: 10), as if implying that children had angels as their guardians in heaven. Then, too, he took a child and set him before his disciples with the words: "Of such is the kingdom of heaven" (Matt. 19: 14). In the spiritual state, when the body is left behind, there is no question of growth. It is a matter of development. What condition then is so favorable to a beautiful development as the atmosphere of heaven? That must be a very beautiful nature, that having never sinned, has grown up in heaven in such society as exists there.

T., Rahway, N. J. I appropriate every year, one-tenth of my income to religious and charitable objects. In 1906, I gave away considerably more than a tenth. Would it be legitimate to give less than a tenth in 1907, to make matters even?

That is the principle you would act upon in business. If you regard this consecration as a business transaction, it would be legitimate to do as you say. In dealing with God, however, we would advise a higher rule. As Paul said to Philemon, you should not forget that you owe to Him even yourself. Give as God prospers you during 1907, and forget the balance you are proposing to charge against him on account of 1906.

C. L., Parkville, Mo. Christ told the people (John 7: 24), to "judge righteous judgment," and in Matt. 7:1, he told them not to judge at all. How do you harmonize the two?

The remark in the Gospel of John was addressed to the Jews, who condemned Jesus for violating the traditions of Sabbath observance. He showed them their error, and added that their judgment was unjust. They had taken on themselves to judge, and he tells them that they should judge righteously. If he had been speaking to his disciples he would probably have gone further and told them not to judge at all. He did not prohibit their judging in cases where a decision was required of them, but not to cultivate a censorious spirit, finding fault with other people and overlooking their own faults. His own comments (Matt. 7: 3-5) show that that was his meaning.

F. McF., Concord, Tenn. 1. Can a Senator or Representative make his two appointments to the military or naval academy at any time during his term he wishes? 2. How long a time does it take for a steamer to go to Europe and return? 3. What is the comparative naval strength of the great nations?

1. Only when there are vacancies that his district is entitled to fill. 2. The average time for a passenger steamer from America to England is about a week. They usually remain in dock for several days, so the round trip is two to three weeks. 3. The navies of the great nations rank in the following order: Great Britain, France, United States, Germany, Japan, Italy, Russia, Austria-Hungary.

Mrs. B. L., Indianapolis. Living is now so high, that thousands of families who never knew what it was to pinch, are now compelled to practice economy. But how is a housewife, who has just so many mouths to feed, to know where to begin?

The Chicago School of Domestic Science, which seems to take a practical view of the subject, gives the following as the principal causes of extravagance:

Buying provisions by order and telephone, instead of seeing them; buying prepared foods and stuff that has little or no nutrition; buying articles that are high-priced because out of season; taking goods as offered by dealers, instead of insisting on just what is really wanted; loss on weight, wrappings and covers of glass and tin in which food is put up; lack of knowledge of cuts of meat and of how to cook so as to bring best results for the table.

If these suggestions are heeded, it seems to us that economy and greater satisfaction in the average household would be the result.

E. A. A., Coxsackie, N. Y. If God plans our lives, are we not bound to do as he plans? Was not Judas doing as God had planned when he betrayed Christ? and was not Peter doing so when he denied him?

God foresees what a man will do, but every man is a free agent, otherwise he would not be responsible. God would not punish a man for doing what he was compelled to do. You know yourself that when you are thinking of doing something, that it is open to you to do it or not to do it. Judas knew that he was responsible, and he showed it by committing suicide, and Peter showed it when he wept. They did not try to creep out by charging their sin on God's plans.

E. W., Columbus, Ohio. Can you tell me anything of the history of the "Holy Thorn" that grew in Glastonbury, England?

Its history is that of tradition only. Joseph of Arimathea, is said to have been sent to Great Britain by the apostle Philip about A.D. 63. There he settled, with his brother disciples, at Glastonbury, in Somersetshire, England. The local guides to this day show the miraculous thorn (said to bud and blossom every Christmas) that sprung from the staff which Joseph stuck in the ground, as he stopped to rest himself on the hill-top. For centuries this thorn was visited by pilgrims, but it was destroyed in the Cromwellian era (17th century). Grafts of the same variety still exist in various parts of the country. The whole story is legendary, of course.

Reader, Fitchburg, Mass. Who was the author of the "Glory Song," so much sung by Mr. Alexander?

There are several so-called "Glory Songs," but the best known is that which was composed by Charles H. Gabriel, a well-known writer of sacred music. It has been, and still is a prime favorite at revival meetings both in this country and abroad.

Mrs. H. A. M., Leslie, Mich.. Whence came the necessity of releasing a prisoner at the feast? I refer to the time when they released Barabbas and crucified Christ. Where and when was the custom first adopted?

It is stated that it was a custom in Jerusalem, at the Paschal feast, for the governor to release some prisoner as a boon to the people. The custom does not appear to have been of Jewish origin; but probably originated in the desire of the Romans to conciliate the Jewish populace.

A. S. Y., Comus, Md. Is it an unusual occurrence for the moon to full thrice in a single month, as in the case of October last?

It is a common occurrence for two like phases of the moon to occur in a single month, especially in the longer month, but rarely, if ever, in February. There were two new moons in July, 1805, and there will be two last quarters in July, 1907. The phenomenon must occur every year, and can occur twice only.

Valuable Samaritan Manuscripts Brought to England

THERE recently arrived in London two Samaritans, who brought some ancient scrolls, which they wished to sell to the British Museum. One of the men was Isaac, who is next in succession to the high priesthood of the Samaritans. His home is in Nablous, the Shechem of the Bible. The remnant of the Samaritan nation still lives in the shadow of their sacred mountain, Gerizim, and worship as they did in the time of Christ. They number about a hundred souls. A hundred years ago there were several thousand. They are poor, but possess several valuable manuscripts, one of which they say is the Pentateuch, written by the grandson of Aaron. The scroll pictured is the genealogical annals of the High Priests. It shows the lineal descent of Jacob, the present High Priest, from Aaron, brother of Moses. The scroll on another page speaks of the crucifixion of Jesus, in the time of the High Priest Jonathan.

VERY IMPORTANT NOTICE

HERETOFORE, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has, at great expense to itself, and for the convenience of tardy renewals, continued, for a reasonable time, the service of the paper after the expiration of the subscription, in order that the tardiness of the delinquent subscribers might not cause an interruption of the service and loss of several copies.

No More Free Copies After This Date

We would impress upon our subscribers the fact that, owing to the exceptionally strict interpretation of the Postal Laws governing the transmission of second-class mail matter, it will not be possible for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to continue such lenient attitude, as the postal authorities hold that only three free copies may be sent to any one person in any one year.

Renew at Once: If Possible, To-day!

Therefore, it is absolutely necessary for our subscribers to renew with the greatest promptness; and, owing to the fact, that it takes three weeks to change a date on our mailing list, we would recommend that all December and January subscribers renew immediately after New Year's Day.

A RUN ACROSS THE ISTHMUS

By R. A. STARK

SWIFT and progressive movements mark the Isthmus of Panama to-day. What was until recently a centre of political strife and a veritable hotbed of Yellow Jack and malaria, is now the scene of wonderful transformations and reforms in the health department, and in the intelligent effort to bring the colossal scheme to a triumphant end. Here medical and engineering skill are each contending for conquests. Statesman, scientist, engineer, speculator and missionary, all find on this narrow neck of land, a rich field for enterprise and achievement.

To place the Isthmus in a sanitary condition was a stupendous task, which no Latin-American nation was capable of undertaking. No city in all South America can to-day compare with Panama in either drainage or water systems, and Yellow Jack and malaria are destined to be kept in entire subjection.

There are no institutions on the Isthmus more praiseworthy or noble in their ultimate aim and object than the hospitals. In these frame structures, the science of medicine and the art of nursing are nobly and materially assisting each other in their great end—the extermination of disease and sickness on this deadly strip of land. It is some consolation for those who have to live here to know that where it has been impossible to effect an ultimate cure in the deadly diseases, the alleviation of the suffering is attended to by the loving hands of trained nurses and hospital sisters. The health department has made ample provision for the consolations of the Christian faith. Colonel Gorgas, with his army of sanitary assistants and large staff of trained nurses, merits the gratitude of the civilized world for the splendid achievements accomplished. Nothing could be more Christlike than the life and conduct of Colonel Gorgas, the chief of the health department. He has shown more than a personal interest in the religious work carried on by the various denominations.

Again, the new laws enacted on the Canal Zone are raising the moral standard on the Isthmus and making for righteousness. The lottery ticket seller—a common and demoralizing figure on all the railway trains of the Canal Zone—is now prohibited by the canal authorities, and it is hoped that this detestable lottery business will soon be altogether abolished from Panama itself. Rigorous restrictions along the line of high licenses on the liquor trade are being enforced. Hand in hand with these and other beneficent laws for the moral and social uplifting of the Isthmus, free schools are being established.

A run across the Isthmus reveals an immense amount of activity and costly outlay. Everywhere the old dwellings for employees are being completely overhauled or entirely demolished. New houses, hotels, hospitals, and better machine shops are being extensively and rapidly constructed. The old machinery and dredgers that were lying half buried in the jungle rusting, are, wherever possible, being repaired, or thrown on the scrap heap. A double railway track across the Isthmus is being laid down. Through jungle and bush, the Union Oil Co., of California, has laid an eight-inch kerosene oil pipe from Panama to Colon. Huge trains of earth, excavated from the Culebra and other cuts, are on the way to be dumped by the latest chain plough process. Over the whole busy and beautiful scene floats the Star Spangled Banner, the symbol of progress and power.

Isthmian Children Celebrating Independence Day, November 3

"Colored labor" is a burning question on the Isthmus. There is a continual stream of immigration from the West Indies, particularly from Jamaica; and as an evidence that many of the Jamaicans do not forget their parents, wives and children, it is a remarkable fact that three-quarters of the money letters registered and posted at the post-office of the Canal Zone for transmission from the Isthmus, are from this class. As a general rule, the Bible is a well known Book to nearly every English-speaking son of the West Indies. Next in familiarity to his Bible must rank the English edition of Ira D. Sankey's Songs and Solos. On the journey between Colon and Puerto Colombia we were again and again delighted to hear companies of Moravians from Trinidad singing their hymns and songs, and with religious conversation continually on their lips. Consequently, it is very easy to enter into religious conversation with the Jamaican.

A great deal of unskilled, and some skilled, labor is accomplished by the Jamaican on the Isthmus. Through the kindness of Mr. James MacFarlane, superintendent of the floating equipment at La Boca (the Pacific entrance to the Canal), we saw the Jamaican at work as a skilled mechanic. The honor of training these men as blacksmiths, carpenters, riveters, machinists, etc., is wholly due to Mr. MacFarlane, a Christian man. On leaving Jamaica,

Attempted Impossibilities

"Do men gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thistles?"

AN absurd question! Of course a man cannot gather grapes of thorns or figs from thistles, any more than a setting hen can hatch out a brood of twenty chickens when she has only a half-dozen eggs in her nest. We have learned that nature has its laws and that they are invariable. There are certain things which it is impossible for a man to do. And yet we find men everywhere attempting such things. They try to achieve the impossible. I think that a man can have no more valuable capacity than that of knowing what is impossible—impossible in itself, or impossible for him. I would not discourage any one who is striving to accomplish great things, but when once you see that an achievement cannot be won, I urge you to abandon the effort without delay. There comes a time in life when we should "let go," as well as there come other times in life when we should "hang on," and never loosen our grip until success is ours.

A Disappointed Farmer

Some months ago, the time for my summer vacation drew near. Then my old longing to get away from the city, and back, 'way back, into the country, took possession of me. Hardly had we arrived at my summer cottage, than a party of three of us started out on a hunting trip. The wagon was packed with food. The guns and ammunition were put in, and away we went. "Where are you going to take us?" I asked the driver. "To my old ranch," was the reply. After the first day's hunt was over, and we were gathered about the blazing fire, the driver told me this story. First he pointed out some tall eucalyptus trees. "Look at those clumps of trees dotting the mesa here and there and everywhere," said he. "A few years ago, each one of those groves represented a prosperous farm. We had our church, our school, and as fine harvest-fields and lemon orchards as any one might wish to see. We expected the Southern Pacific Railroad to run through this valley. We expected water to be brought from Poma Reservoirs, twenty-six miles away, to irrigate this land. I refused $5,000 for these bare fields upon which we are camping to-night, now uninhabited, save by the rattlesnakes which we heard to-day and the deadly tarantulas. But I did not know when to stop. The Southern Pacific did not come through as we expected. The water was not brought down from Poma Reservoirs. Then came the four or five years of drought. We farmers were literally burned and starved out. Family after family left this region. I was the last to go. To-day there is not living a family for miles around. Here are only the broken fences, the tumble-down houses, the snakes, the poisonous spiders, the rabbits, the birds and the coyotes. But I still hoped—I struggled on for twelve long years. Then, like the rest, I had to leave and go elsewhere. Twelve long years of work went for naught."

Did you ever hear a story more pathetic? For twelve long years that man had worked among those hills. The camp fire that cooked the game we killed that afternoon, the camp fire about which we were chatting that night, was fed by the shingles, the beams and the boards of his old home. The water holes near which we hunted had been dug as reservoirs by his hands. We were camping that night upon the ruins of a dozen long years of labor. Yet as I lay upon the ground, a short time after this story was told, trying to go to sleep, I could not get this thought out of my mind: "How many men there are hanging on to a certain line of work which is unprofitable and doomed to certain failure."

A Disastrous Financial Enterprise

The lesson of those deserted farm lands bids you to let go that foolish real estate, or mining, or stock investment you made many years ago, and into which you are gradually sinking the savings of a lifetime of work. It says to you, "Man, let go that foolish financial enterprise, even though you have spent five hundred, or a thousand, or five thousand dollars in it." It says, "Let go, even though to do it you have to confess that you are not worth a dollar, and are starting out in the struggle of life just as poor as you were twenty years ago, when you left college and went out into the great, wide world to earn bread for yourself and your loved ones." Because a man has been wrong in the past and has made a losing investment, that is no reason why he should continue to be wrong now, and send more good dollars, or more of his savings to be swallowed up in the same way. But though all men should learn financial lessons by a succession of failures, some will never learn that they have their financial limitations, any more than some men will ever learn that they have their mental and their spiritual limitations.

A Trap for a Doctor

Here, for instance, is a good country or city doctor. In the community in which he lives he is universally respected. He makes a good living. He has money enough to meet all his necessary wants. But he makes up his mind he ought to be rich. He feels he can be rich, if he will only invest his savings in the far West, or in the far East, or in some business in which he is an entire "tenderfoot." A broker, or a mining agent hears of his desire, and says to him, "Doctor, we have a mine out in Montana. It is just filled with gold. Why, you can stumble over the nuggets as you can tread upon the horse-chestnuts during the fall time in the East. Give us five thousand dollars and we will make you a millionaire in two years. All that we need is a little machinery to develop the mine." Did you ever hear such nonsense? In cold blood, could you conceive that all the miners who have made mining their life-time business would walk right past that Montana mine, shining with yellow gold, and let a mining broker travel two thousand miles as a philanthropist to make that country physician a millionaire in two years? Yet that country doctor, as some of you are doing to-day, will pour his money into that hole in the ground. Then, because he made a fool out of himself at first, he will keep on, and on, pouring his money into that hole, in order to get back the lost money.

What is true in reference to "wildcat" mining or land or stock speculation, is true in reference to business. Here, for instance, is a man who was a famous baker. By his ovens he made not only thousands, but hundreds of thousands of dollars. He lived in one of the largest cities in the United States. He simply honeycombed the town with his bakery stores. He cooked bread, and pies, and cakes, for thousands upon thousands of daily customers. But after this man had made a fortune as a baker, he decided he would make another fortune as an editor. He bought one of the great dailies of that city. As a newspaper man he was a dead failure. What he cooked in his oven was eaten up by his printing presses. To-day that once great baker has lost his newspapers and lost his bakeries, because he would persist in investing in a business he knew nothing about. What is the practical deduction? To-day, those deserted farm lands of the California mesa cry out: Let go that foolish investment. Let go. When you have uselessly sacrificed your money, let go; do not continue to sacrifice the remainder. Let go. Let go!"

Misplaced Devotion

But my theme teaches another practical lesson. I would have the young men encamp with us upon those deserted California farm lands, as well as the older men. I would especially have the young man view those deserted fields, who, against his better judgment, is being forced, or is forcing himself into a line of work for which he is not adapted, with a reverence for the wishes of his father and mother that does the boy credit, but is fatal to his prospects in life. Come, young man, tell me the ambition of your life. What do you intend to be? "Oh," you say, "I want to be a railroad man. Or I want to be a doctor. Or I want to be a lawyer, or a civil engineer. Or I want to be a musician, or an artist. But I can not. You know, father has set his heart on my being a business man. We live in a small town in a Western State. He started in business there thirty years ago. By frugality and industry he has the largest store in all that region. I am his only boy, and he wants me to carry the business on after he is dead, and come into the store and help him now that he is growing old. But I hate business. Yes, I hate it! But I suppose I will have to do it to please him. Besides, if I do not go into his store, all the lifetime work of my father will be thrown away."

What, have you no inclination to be a business man? "Absolutely none. My desire is to be a railroad man. My playground as a boy was the railroad yards. My music was a locomotive's whistle. But father wants me to go into his store, and I suppose I will have to go." Don't you do it, my brother, don't you do it. I care not how much of your father's business will have to be sacrificed, don't you do it. You cannot afford to sacrifice your brains and your railroad genius and your life. Be what God wants you to be. Be it at any cost and at any sacrifice. By the lesson of the deserted California farm lands, learn that there is a time to let go.

Life in Peril

But the theme has a powerful application to the semi-invalid, as well as to the young man stout of limb and clear of eye. It has an application for the human tree that has spread its roots and is firmly anchored and is matured, but which is being blasted by the east wind, as well as for the young sapling just planted and able to defy almost any storm. I ride down town in the electric cars of one of our large Eastern cities. I alight at the open door of your store. I find intelligent and courteous clerks at the counters. The store is crowded with customers. But so perfect is the system there is no confusion anywhere. I enter your glass office. You are an old boyhood friend. I say, "Hello, Joe! Business is booming. Your store is growing by leaps and bounds. Why, man, you will be a millionaire within a few years. But, old fellow, what is the matter with you? You are sick. Why, Joe, have you seen the doctor lately?" "Yes," you answer, "I have seen the doctor. He has prescribed enough medicine for me to float a battleship. But medicine does no good. He says I cannot live in this climate. I should go to Texas or Arizona, or California. There I would be a well man. But how can I go? This awful cough is draining my life away, but I cannot pull out and sacrifice my life's work. I cannot sell the business for what it is worth. I cannot sacrifice the labor of twenty years." "Yes, you can, Joe. You must sacrifice it now, or give it up altogether within a couple of years. If you pull out now, you can go to a warm climate and start anew and have a long life with your family. If you do not pull out now, they will take you South winter after next, when your two lungs are nearly gone, and then the sacrifice will be too late." "Let go," is the command. "Let go."

Children Neglected

But we must not stop here. Our sermon's theme has an application in a spiritual way as well as in a financial and a physical. And especially are its teachings pertinent to the spiritual lives of our children. Those broken-down fences and that wrecked home, that hard-baked clay of the deserted farm lands of the California mesa resemble the spiritual situation in some of your homes. You have formed habits that you know are ruining you and undermining your relation to God. Let go! The struggle will be hard, but it is for your life. Let go! Some of you have formed associations which are poisoning your spiritual life. They are becoming dear as a right hand or a right eye. Let go! What did Christ say? Cut them off. It is better to enter into life maimed than to keep them and perish. As you value your soul, let go!

I enter your home and what do I find? A beautiful home. Yes, it is a beautiful home. The lawns are well kept. The walls are delicately tinted and have upon them the copies of some of the best masters. The library shelves are filled with rows upon rows of the best books, both of the past and of the present day. The grand piano is in the corner of the parlor. You have a look of pride, as we settle down to a chat after the well-cooked and well served dinner. Then, in a sort of reminiscent mood, you tell me the struggle of your life. "Yes," you say; "I have had a hard time of it. All that I inherited from my parents was good physical health and a big heritage of prayers. I came to this city thirty years ago, absolutely alone and friendless. Now I have this home. My business is growing every day. My family will never want, and I am living on Easy Street."

"Well, well," I say, "is that so? I certainly congratulate you. I suppose you are now a very happy man. What with a home like this, and your children growing up all right, you have not much more for which to sh this side of heaven." With that a shadow passes er your face. Then you say, "Ah, I wish that were ie. But my children are not turning out as they ght. The boys seem to have the wrong kind of nions. The girls! oh, they are so different from that st sweetheart of mine, who was my mother, and my n sisters." "Indeed, that is strange. Why, how uld the boys form the wrong kind of companionships ien you are so much with them? Then the girls. Of urse you have brought them up with the same kind of ligious teaching that made your mother and your ters the noble Christian women they were?"

Pursuit of the Dollar

With that another shadow passes over your face. You y: "To tell the truth, I have had very little to do ith my children. My boys hardly know me. For years y body, mind and soul have been concentrated in the ore. I have not had any time to waste in pleasures. t night I bring home my important papers and go to y library immediately after dinner. There I sometimes ork on until after midnight. If I did not do so, I ould lose thousands upon thousands of dollars each ear." What! you cannot afford to make your boys our companions? What! you cannot afford to give up part of each day for the spiritual development of your ildren? Is the dollar question so malforming your life hat, for a gold brick, you are willing to let the spiritual ves of your children absolutely become a deserted alifornia mesa, filled with the serpents of temptation nd the hideous poisonous tarantulas of sin? Let go hat money!

But if the dollar which stands between the spiritual ves of your loved ones and sin should be sacrificed, how uch more should every dollar, or every position of life hich tends to draw us away from Christ, be willingly acrificed? For say what you will, the mightiest agency or good or evil for the lives of our dear ones, is the xample of what we ourselves truly are in reference to ur relationship to Jesus Christ. Now, my friend, as a sensible man, can you afford to sacrifice the higher spiritual purposes of life to the lower and to the material? Are you willing to sacrifice your spiritual hopes of this world and of the next merely to attain some position of worldly honor which may bring to you only suffering and, perhaps, premature death from overwork? Have you set your heart upon winning an earthly throne, as did the little Princess Marie Antoinette, caring not what the occupancy of that throne may cost you in this life or in the next?

When Mozart was a mere child, he visited the Austrian court and became a pet of the great empress, Maria Theresa. At that time, Marie Antoinette was a little girl. Together the princess of Hapsburg blood and the prince of the royal house of Hamies played day after day. When the time drew near for parting young Mozart said to his little friend: "Good-bye, Princess Marie. I go now. But when I am a grown man, I will come back and marry you." With that Maria Theresa's daughter drew herself up as she replied: "Mozart, are you a king? Are you the son of a king? I am a princess, and when I marry, I must marry a king. When I leave mamma's court as a queen, I shall go to the court of a king." Aye, the haughty young princess, haughty even as a child, had set her heart upon a throne. She reached it. Her home was in the Tuileries. But oh, the suffering and the agony of that palace!

She Reached the Throne

But the throne became the stepping-stone by which she mounted the guillotine. Her lady-in-waiting was changed for the executioner, who touched the fatal button which cut off her head and made it the plaything of a mob and the execrated object of cut-throats. Oh, can it be that some of us have set our hearts upon an earthly throne? Like Marie Antoinette, are we ready to mount it at any cost? Can it be that for wealth or power or fame, we are ready to let our spiritual lives become like the deserted farm lands of a California mesa, filled with the serpents of sin and the tarantulas of degradation, which will sting us with the poison of an eternal death?

The Petrified City

In how many departments of life, alas, we see men and women who are sacrificing the higher life, and letting their spiritual hopes go to waste and to decay. Charles Wadsworth, in one of his wonderful sermons, gives a vision of an eastern city which was being besieged. The night before the attack, a mighty magician changed the whole city into stone. "There stood the pawing war-horses with nostrils distended, caparisoned for battle. There stood the mailed champion, ready to spring to his seat and lay lance in rest for the onset. But alas! the strong arm was cold stone on the neck of the petrified charger. There stood the serried infantry, with armor and plumes and upfloating banners, but each man cold, breathless, lifeless. The eye had a stony glare. Hand, brow, lip, were frozen to marble." When we go through life, we too, often find men with spiritual hearts of stone and spiritual lips of stone, and spiritual eyes of stone. Their spiritual lives seem to be like the hard-baked clay of that deserted California mesa, so hard and thick that it was an impossibility to drive a stake into it to hold down the pegs of our camp tents.

But as Charles Wadsworth saw the magician changing a city into stone, may we, to-day, see Christ by the power of the Cross, changing the stony hearts of sin into the warm, loving, spiritual hearts of Christ's disciples who are ready to live for him and to die for him. May we be ready to give up everything that stands between us and Christ. Then for us, indeed, shall our spiritual deserts "rejoice and blossom as the rose. It shall blossom abundantly and rejoice even with joy and singing. The glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it. The excellency of Carmel and Sharon they shall see the glory of the Lord and the excellency of our God." Amen. So let it be!

he Jamaican knows almost nothing about mechanics. In the Boca division of engineering and construction about 250 men are employed.

Take a glance at these Boca workshops at Panama. How different from Pizarro's early experience at shipbuilding, before he sailed down the Pacific in the sixteenth century. A Dipper Dredging-Machine—an American type—is on the "ways," first of its kind built on the Isthmus. An old dredge, built in Glasgow, is on the "ship" under repair. The scaling, the chipping and riveting are all being done by compressed air. Inside are all classes of iron machine tools, rollers, drills, powerful hammers, etc., worked by Jamaicans, under white foremen, by compressed air. As local locomotive drivers, the Jamaicans are men of nerve and muscle.

The police on the Canal Zone are composed mainly of Jamaicans. Dressed in khaki, white helmit and leggings, they look remarkably tidy, and are reported by the authorities as orderly and well-behaved. In the Sanitary Department, Jamaicans fall short in no way of the claims and requirements of the situation. No less an authority than the Hon Chas. E. Magoon, late U. S. Governor on the Canal Zone, declared that "the Jamaican was the most naturally qualified to carry on the continuous work of the Isthmian Canal."

When the United States Government purchased the Canal Zone from the infant Republic of Panama, a new era dawned for Protestant Christianity on Latin America. This door, wide and effectual, has been entered by our leading missionary organizations, and their work is now falling into well-defined lines. Anglicans, Methodists, Baptists, Presbyterians, the Salvation Army, the Y. M. C. A., and the two great Bible societies are all laboring together in a fraternal spirit for the extension of the Kingdom of God. Several ministers have been appointed as chaplains in the hospital service of the Health Department. Every facility is kindly granted by the Canal authorities to ministers and missionaries for traveling on the Isthmian railway, thereby enabling preachers to travel the whole distance of the Isthmus for divine service. Christ Church, Colon, is a beautiful church edifice. The Wesleyan Methodists, who have been doing good work on the Isthmus since 1882, worship in a railway shed at their Panama station, purchased some years ago. For a number of years, the Baptists have done excellent work at the famous Culebra Cut. The missionary societies recently arrived, are without church buildings, and are temporarily holding their services in hotels and other public buildings.

At Panama there is a Christian institute carried on by a devoted Christian lady, Miss Rose Johnson, and assisted in its general management by a committee of Christian gentlemen. This institute provides board and lodgings, and all the protection and comforts of a Christian home in Panama, at merely nominal charges. During the week Bible classes are held, and reading rooms with good literature are provided.

I was interested to meet one of my old colporteur boys, Eduardo Palaci, on the Isthmus, selling Bibles. Years ago I found him as a lad, in the slums of Lima, and took him into our own missionary home, where he first learned the rudiments of the Book he now carries.

President Roosevelt's visit to the Isthmus, as far as can be judged, has been a brilliant success. The chief danger undoubtedly lay in the climate. A man less daring than the President, would have hesitated before tramping through miles of swamp, in torrential rains, on his tour of inspection along the Canal Zone. South America has welcomed his visit to the Isthmus, and his last word before leaving it is accepted as a guarantee that the colossal scheme will be executed as speedily as possible, and the motto of the canal—"The Land Divided: The World United"—realized. A. R. Stark.

Missionary J. H. Sobey writes to The Christian Herald, describing a recent personal visit to the Canal Zone. He says:

"The improvement and progress during the last two years, to some of us seems just wonderful. Some of the streets in the cities of Colon and Panama show what all of them will be like in the near future.

"All along the Zone dwellings have been and are still being erected with marvelous rapidity. We believe the Commission are doing their best to correct false reports, and improve conditions to make all concerned feel comfortable and satisfied. The health question, hitherto so serious, is now satisfactorily solved, thanks to the medical department. That so many wives and families are coming to the Zone with their husbands, we thankfully notice. This will ensure social life and moral purity.

"The drink question will have to be dealt with with a firm hand, and its sale, especially on Sunday, prohibited. Certain parties, who are laboring for drinking and immoral purposes in Colon and Panama, will have to be watched and dealt with by the authorities. In this way sickness and disease will still further decrease. Clean men are concerned about their fellowmen in their entire manhood.

"That a few missionaries are at work here gives us much satisfaction. The erection of buildings for the

Railway Shed Used as a Methodist Church

Y. M. C. A operations afford hope of the future. For the five thousand white people here, provision necessary and adequate for their spiritual needs will he made; but for the 28,000 colored laborers, very little is as yet done.

"A recent interview with Chief Engineer Hon. Jno. F. Stevens, assures us that every encouragement will be afforded us to meet our wishes for the spiritual welfare of the laborer and his family. There are peculiar difficulties connected with Christian work here. The canal workers are so scattered that the missionary will have to do a large amount of itinerary Christian work, going from place to place and camp to camp, to give them the Gospel of Jesus Christ. As a centre for real missionary work, its equal would be difficult to find."

MAKING RELIGION A REALITY

Dr. Donald Sage Mackay's Aim in Bringing "Up-Town" and "Down-Town" Christians Into Closer Touch

IF a number of representative New Yorkers were asked to name the up-town, or Fifth Avenue, church most prominent in the religious life of the well-to-do, the charitable and locally prominent, it is conservative to say, that a large majority would specify the Collegiate Church St. Nicholas, organized in 1628 (in the early days of the Dutch settlement of New York), and now occupying the corner of Fifth Avenue and Forty-eighth Street.

The structure is modestly splendid, its services are conducted with impressive dignity, its membership includes names noted in finance, literature, society, and politics of the better sort. It supports eight missionaries in home and foreign fields, and its beneficence is widely known.

Of this great Church, Rev. Donald Sage Mackay, D.D., LL.D., is minister—minister in every pastoral sense of the word. In early middle life, with traditions, manners and methods of the best, this modern "gentleman unafraid" is as absolutely devoid of the sensationalism that offends, as he is of the fear that cribs, cabins, and confines. He is an intimate of men who mold a nation's destiny, and the friend of the lowliest who work with purpose single to the betterment of mankind. To be with him, to meet his straightforward glance, to feel his firm hand-clasp, to hear his quick voice with its reserve of depths of strength and its faint Scottish burr, is to know oneself a foregatherer with a power in humanity, a realist in religion, a full-orbed, high powered man and leader of men.

Dr. Mackay, on December 10th, 1905, delivered a sermon from the text, "Thou hast a name that thou livest, and art dead. Strengthen the things that remain" (Revelation 3: 1). The Church of Sardis was pictured by the preacher: Sardis the city wherein lived a Crœsus, where Christianity was not persecuted, but was patronized in such fashion as to show how little of real force it meant to the community. Between Sardis and its congeners in the days of Paul, and many churches of to-day, Dr. Mackay drew striking parallels deducing this startling paragraph:

"In Sardis, the people did not have to fight for their religion. It came to them so easily that they took it as a matter of course, and the result was that religion became nominal, not real. Sardis was the birthplace of nominal Christianity. Here in New York the same thing has happened. Religion, instead of being as it ought, the supreme reality in life, is pretty much the most unreal thing about us. . . . Sardis and New York are, alike, secure from the martyr's crown, so long as they are careful to keep religion and life on terms of a mere bowing acquaintance." It was pointed out too, that in Sardis as in New York, wealth was so great among "lime-light Christians" that the struggle for life was not particularly felt. The deeper things appealed but little, so well content were many with superficial pleasures and interests. The preacher pleaded for an awakening that should merge truth in conscience, should enthrone conviction in character, root faith in life, secure the uprising of men everywhere, to whom religion is the supreme reality, and the thought of a living God a controlling impulse.

As was to have been expected, such a sermon produced an impression so vivid that it did not die with a to-morrow. It held the germ of a practical idea which had its first notable fruition in the evening service of December 9, 1906, in the Fifth Avenue Church, where the pastor's plea for reality had been made one year before.

Feeling the need of personal touch with a religion that is real because it is vital, Dr. Mackay went to meetings of missions in New York's Bowery. He listened to the experiences of men from the submerged tenth; of converts who had tried a mission as the alternative to a "hole in the river"; of souls who had looked on the seamy side, until the tapestry of life seemed the epitome of the sordid and the sorrowful.

"I found the warm blood of real, vital, saving religion on the Bowery," said Dr. Mackay, "and I determined that mine own people should have opportunity to duplicate my impressions."

At the evening service in Dr. Mackay's church, referred to above, there was testimony from men who had found in the Gospel Missions the door to a new life, a life worth living. From a rostrum hallowed by recollections of great divines, and philanthropists of world-wide fame, a man who said simply, "I was a convict for eighteen years," bore testimony as to what real religion had done for him. Others who had fallen to the lowest plane a Bowery dive recognizes, told of their uplifting. There was not an unreal note; some of the regular congregation who came to scoff remained to pray. Monday morning's New York leading newspapers gave extended accounts of the meeting. A very real dent was made in metropolitan attention. To one who sneered, there were a score who hoped and applauded.

It was the writer's privilege to meet Dr. Mackay in his study very soon after the meeting.

"We need something that the professional revivalist does not supply," said the Doctor. "The revivalist comes by invitation, exhorts, preaches, tells stories that may or may not be true, and that have not—certainly all of them have not — the ring of convincing, red-blooded and human reality.

"My object in inaugurating this movement was twofold. First, to bring the people of our up-town, so-called, fashionable churches into more direct touch with the great realities of religion. The almost inevitable tendency of an old established church is to become encrusted with conventionalism and formalism. Its services become a certain routine. I can go down to such missions as the Bowery Mission, and feel there the great throbbing realities of religion in vital touch with human souls.

"There are four great realities in religion for which every church should stand. First, the reality of God; second, the reality of sin; third, the reality of redemption through Christ; fourth, the reality of spiritual growth through the power of the Holy Spirit. It seemed to me that these rescue missions, with all their limitations and points of criticism no doubt, were yet more vitally standing for these four things than many of our churches. What we need is to hear the direct story of the power of conversion from the lips of men who cannot help tell it out. Therefore, to let our people see what the Spirit of Christ is actually doing in redeeming the most helpless and degraded waifs of humanity, I conceived this idea, in common with others of my brethren, to bring representatives from these missions to our regular church services from time to time.

"My second purpose was, if possible, to bridge over the line of separation which exists between the rich and the poor, between the up-town and the down-town man, and between the church and these Christian organizations which are working for the salvation of the lost. On the one hand, our up-town people are ignorant, and therefore indifferent. On the other hand, the man in the Bowery is suspicious and antagonistic towards the church. What we want, by mutual fellowship from time to time, is to get rid of these misconceptions, and bring the church into vital touch with the Rescue Missions of our city.

"Results I am going to leave entirely to God. I do not imagine that we are going to turn these up-town churches into places where people will come forward and ask for prayers, and make confession of their sins. The kind of man we are tryi to reach, and woman, too, for th matter, is not of that emotion type. He is the man who is goi home to think over his sins, a face the question of decision alone. Therefore, can only reach results through the impact of a dire testimony coming home to the conscience, and I ha had several testimonies to that effect from Sund night's meeting. Already a young man, a Princet student, said he never felt what conversion was until heard these men testify. Several men came to me a said that they never had been in a place in their liv where they felt such a spirit of God. I may add th people who have not been out to the second service f years were there on Sunday night. It was a Fif Avenue congregation.

"There is another side of it, of course. One woma said, 'This is very interesting, but I do not think would ever care to go again; it was too different fro our evening services. If I want to hear it, I will g down to the mission itself.' She preferred the qui evening service.

"This evening service is very largely made up young men—the men whom I cannot lay my hand o and it may be that these testimonies will bring a me sage to them. I have seen no personal results, so fa of conversion, and have only heard these expression It is early yet, and the very man I have tried to reac is the last man to declare his feelings. He is self-co tained, reticent.

"This movement," Dr. Mackay added, "must l like a stone thrown in a pond—the ripples will spread t other churches. As a matter of fact, the other church are doing this thing, only they have not been meetin with the mission, as I have. One of my elders said t me, 'It made me squirm to see a thief standing in th pulpit; but I think it did me good.' One man said h had spent eighteen years in prison. He made a deepe impression that night than almost any other. What liked about the testimonies was that every man ex pressed sorrow and shame for having sinned.

"This may solve the problem of the down-tow church a good deal, that our up-town church will feel more intense responsibility. Take this church, fo instance. We draw enormous revenue from real estat round the bridge terminal down-town, and the onl work we are doing is at Fulton Street. I said to m elders and deacons, 'We have got to realize our re sponsibility, not only to God, but to the body politi from which we reap a revenue.'"

Dr. Mackay has high hopes of the results of thi movement to make a conscience common to both Fift Avenue and the Bowery. He cherishes no illusion about difficulties, but does not dwell upon the lions i the path. The elders and deacons of the church ar interested. Others, in other churches in New York an elsewhere, are sure to give approval and aid to th movement. As Dr. Mackay said, "We may be able t establish real down-town churches that shall make th unreality of up-town brethren ashamed. Surely th movement will result in more missions, and the mor missions the more men made better."

It is not unwarranted to presage for Dr. Mackay' plan a wide following in the Christian Church outside o New York. Chicago, Boston, Philadelphia, San Fran cisco, and scores of cities of second or third rank, have their Fifth Avenue Churches and their Bowery Missions. It is a fair presumption that the earnestly religious—the men and women who do, or want to do, real things in life—will watch the Mackay experiment with deepest interest, and that pastors will follow the lead opened to them.

There is no question of sect in all this. It is recognized on the Bowery that to save men from physical and moral degradation and death, the hand-to-hand attitude is the only one possible.

LITTLE LILIES OF THE SLUMS

How they Grow, and Blossom, and Suffer, and How They May be Helped

BY FREDERICK D. GREENE

POND lilies are pond lilies, even though they may come from a foul swamp, and there is no use denying that this is a group of sweet, gentle little children, though are growing in an alley of a back tenement in York, where human beings are packed nine hun- to an acre, closer than anywhere else in the world. ie oldest was seven, and the youngest nearly two, papa started for his work one morning last June.

Four Fatherless Ones

His failure to return at evening was so unusual that the mother, after a night of anxiety, sought the help of the police to find him. They led her at last to the Morgue where his mangled body lay, killed in an accident. The mother, herself in a delicate condition, had now to be hurried to a hospital. What was to become of the children, whose relatives were over in Germany? The doctor in charge stepped to the telephone and called up New York Association for Improving the Condition the Poor, which promptly took charge of the chil- n, kept them in the country for a few weeks, and re- ed them in fine condition to the grateful widow as n as she was able to mother them again.

his is only one of 3,927 families in suffering or mis- une aided in ir homes last r by the Asso- ion. It believes t the home is most precious g in the world, l should be de- ded to the last. w this is done, spite of hard nditions, is wn by these strations:

Mary Q., is a ght girl of fif- n, but does not m over eleven. e is trying to e the place of r mother, who s just died, and make a home her father, a mmon laborer, d three young- children. She bright and ave, but does not know how to cook. And so Miss bbs, the house-to-house cooking teacher is sent to her l, and Mary soon becomes so efficient that she manages e house nicely, and her proud father brings home all s earnings, instead of letting them go to the saloon.

Mrs. D., a delicate woman with a sick child, is all dis- uraged and overwhelmed with piled up work. At this critical point Elsie, a cheery and competent "visiting cleaner" drops in, does the big washing, scrubs the floor, leaves everything sweet and tidy, and Mrs. D., takes heart again.

Then there is Mrs. W., who, by hard work, can just manage to get along. But a bad felon on her hand has made her lose three weeks, and she was getting desperate till the Association helped her out on her rent.

Poor Miss M., who lately had to spend some months in an insane asylum, is trying to keep house for her father and the other children. It would not take much worry to cause a relapse. But special nourishing food and the frequent calls of the friendly visitor are helping her on the road to firm health, both mental and physical.

The above are simply typical cases and hints of the home and heart needs of a great city, and how they may be met. Are there not some readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD who also have heart needs—someone to help and bless by their sympathy, and by the means that God has put into their hands? Does not this Association afford a providential meeting-ground, where you can render real personal service to the poor? Among the 2,316 families that the Association has in charge to-day, it is easy to select just the one you would most like to help, and you can know about the details. There are new-born babes looking out on bare, cold, dingy walls; there is old age, shivering with cold, pain and weakness; there are boys and girls whose whole lives may be made better by a little wise and kindly help; there are working girls struggling to maintain their lives in honor; mothers, oh, so worn and anxious, trying to keep a home for husband and children; there are brave fathers, down, for the time, with sickness, accident or loss of work.

Where are the strong hands and warm hearts who will count it a privilege to be put into touch with some of these? Though you may be far away, you can reach them in a few hours through the experienced and tactful workers of the Association, twenty of whom are climbing tenement stairs every day, and going like angels of mercy into the darkest and saddest corners of America's most crowded city. Their lives are devoted to that pure religion and undefiled, before God and the Father, which is this, to visit the widow and the fatherless in their affliction and to keep themselves unspotted from the world.

The Association learns of distress, not only from the sufferers themselves, for whom the door is always open, but also from doctors, dispensaries and hospitals; from churches and mission workers; from public school teachers, city officials and the police; from newspapers, neighbors, and from its own friendly visitors and supporters.

It is wonderful what a consecrated dollar can do in consecrated hands. It can buy a pair of shoes that may lead a barefoot boy from truancy back to school and a useful career; it can provide a pair of glasses which can turn a so-called "stupid" child into one who can see properly, and so become bright and progressive. A single dollar can provide a basket of groceries that will last a hungry mother and four children three days; or it would buy eight pairs of stockings for eight pairs of little cold feet; or some fine fruit for an invalid; or a warm quilt; or four pairs of mittens; it might provide rubbers for two delicate working women, or a suit of under-flannels for a weak man exposed to the cold and tempted by the saloon; it could pay for a child in a nursery for twenty days while its mother goes to work; or it could pay a week's room-rent for a discouraged working girl; or furnish coal enough to warm three rooms for a week at least.

The Association is the oldest and largest general relief society in New York, is unsectarian and wholly dependent on voluntary contributions. The Treasurer is Mr. R. S. Minturn, Room 219, No. 105 East Twenty-second Street, in the United Charities Building. Gifts large or small, may be sent directly to him, by readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and will be acknowledged in its columns as well as by the Association. Donors who express a preference will receive a letter telling just how their gift was used, and also the new finely illustrated Annual Report. This is just the time that help is most needed, when winter's suffering, sickness and lack of work increase the hardships of the poor.

WHY THE CHRISTIAN'S PRAYERS MAY BE UNANSWERED

WHEN people complain that their prayers are not answered, there is always need for self-examination. does not follow that the self-examina- on will end in conviction. There are any prayers offered in which all the con- tions are fulfilled, but the prayers are nanswered. God sees better than we do, e knows what is best for us, and in mercy oes not grant our requests. The aged hristian looking back over his life must emember many such prayers. There were ings that seemed good to him, and which e pleaded with God to do for him, that ere not done, and he thanks God that ey were not. He sees now that if God ad granted his request, it would have een a curse and not a blessing. When ie chosen people were in the wilderness, eir misfortune was that "God gave them eir own desire." We must not dictate to God, but we may express our desires and leave it to him to grant or refuse them as he judges best. As a very godly minister used to pray: "Not according to our own foolish wishes, but according to thy wisdom, do for us as thou wilt."

Again there are other answers to prayer, that are only delayed. God sees that the answer is not good at that time, but will grant it to us if we patiently wait for it. He tries our faith as he did that of Job, to see if we will continue to trust him in spite of his silence. The Christian, therefore, need not think, if his prayers are unanswered, that they are wrong, or that God is angry with him, or is indifferent to him in his trouble. We must learn to trust the wisdom and the love of God.

There are, however, some reasons for our prayers being unanswered, which apply to ourselves, and it is this fact which demands our self examination. Christ tells us that prayers offered in ostentation, with the object of impressing men with our piety, are disregarded. The Pharisees, standing praying at the corners of the streets, to be seen of men, would receive no answer. Sincerity is demanded of those who approach God. Humility is also demanded. The self-satisfied Pharisee went down to his house without the blessing. All the facts he mentioned were reasons for blessing God, but they appear to have made him vain and proud and contemptuous of other men less favored. Then there is another reason. There is a principle well known in our courts, that "they who ask for equity must do equity." A man must come into court with clean hands. The sinner approaching God must confess his sin and ask for pardon. The man who ignores his sins and thinks that God will ignore them, while he asks for favors, will go away empty handed. The sinner must, first of all, get right with God, before he can expect his blessing. There are also prayers of extremity that are often unanswered. The man who never offers a prayer until some bitter trouble falls upon him, may have to bear it unaided. It is true that when God sees sincere sorrow, he may, in his magnanimity, deliver the petitioner, but it is more than he has any right to expect.

These and other reasons may cause a prayer to be unanswered. We should examine ourselves and see if we have fulfilled the conditions God imposes, and if in our hearts we believe that we have, and still the answer is not given, then let us bow our heads in meekness, and say with full confidence—thy will, not mine, be done.

Progress in Missions

IT is an interesting synopsis of the progress of foreign missions, that the American Board gives in its Almanac for 1907. It is cause for devout thankfulness that God is so signally blessing the work in all lands, and under the auspices of the various churches. The year's work has been fruitful in the conversion of no less than 133,069 persons, who have been received into church membership. This is no inconsiderable gain, when it is realized that in many cases the convert loses fortune and social station when he receives Christian baptism. We, in Christian lands, do not know how much this means. When the convert realizes that his profession of the Christian faith will alienate his family, will perhaps break his father's heart, and lose him the respect and esteem of brothers and sisters, he must needs have a stout heart and a firm faith in God to take the decisive step. He has need of courage, too, for, as we saw during the recent outbreak in China, he may have to bear the brunt of the storm when persecution breaks out. Thank God that so many have been enabled to come out and take upon themselves the name of Christ! This number added during the twelve months, makes a grand total of 1,349,908 Christians now living in heathen lands.

The roll of God's servants, whose labors have thus been blessed, now numbers 12,789, of whom 5,074 are in the service of American churches. It is very gratifying to notice how high a place this country occupies in the service in comparison with European lands. As we are gaining in population, wealth, and influence among the nations, it is fitting that we should hold a high place in Christ's service. It is an answer to foreign critics, who reproach us with being absorbed in the worship of the dollar, that 2,043 men, and 3,031 women are consecrating their lives to Christ's service in this arduous field. We are proud of them, and thank God that such men and women are found among us. Their number, too, would be vastly increased if other Christians did their duty with the same zeal. If funds were supplied to the missionary societies to send out missionaries, there are more men and women who would volunteer for service.

The Butchery of the Forests

ACCORDING to a report published in the New York papers, over a million and a half of evergreen trees were cut in a New England State, to furnish Christmas trees and wreaths for decoration. Those cut in other States for the festive season would probably bring the total figure to surprising dimensions.

The report brings strongly to mind the way in which our forests are disappearing, the disregard of the American people as to the inevitable result, and the manifold troubles that always come to a treeless land. Thirty years ago, travelers passing through the central part of the State of New York, from Albany to Buffalo, would always remark the abundance of fine timber, and the deep streams that, even in midsummer, furnished magnificent water power. It is so no longer. The traveler of to-day sees here and there patches of woodland, but no great stretches of forest; the streams, the farmers will tell you, have shrunk from one-half to two-thirds their former size. In New Hampshire and Maine the pulp mills are eating up the woods acre after acre, and if they are not restricted by legislative enactment these States will soon be as bare as a desert in Arabia, and the White Mountains as the treeless highlands of Scotland. The pulp is made into paper, wheels, buckets and dozens of household articles. East and West, North and South, there is hardly a State where the butchery of the woods is not going on.

In our older States the cutting of the forests has affected the water supply, and the larger cities and towns have to bring their water from long distances. The patches of woodlot have now become the most valuable portions of many farms. In the States where the million and a half trees were cut within the last few weeks, the owners of the land have fought vigorously against proper forestry legislation, on the ground that a man may do what he likes with his own. It is a short-sighted and selfish view, when it is considered that damage is being done that cannot be repaired in a century. Wherever a district is deforested, climatic changes follow. A cloudburst in a forest country causes little damage. Where the trees have been cut the ground ceases to be porous, and a cloudburst brings death and destruction to property.

A campaign of education should be carried on in the schools, especially those in country districts, showing the results of our present wasteful system. Large portions of the country should be reforested, as the land that has been cleared in many cases was valuable only for its timber and not suitable for farms. In some countries there is a law that wherever a tree is cut a new one should be planted in its place. A similar law will soon be needed in the United States. This is not an alarm over something that may happen; the bad results of indiscriminate "clearing" are already causing much trouble.

Foolish War Talk

THERE are two ways of accounting for the needlessly sensational rumors that have sprung out of the Japanese incident in the California schools. The first is that the foolish war talk is industriously fostered in certain quarters abroad, where a real difference between Japan and this country would be welcomed. The second reason is that there is a very strong movement at home in favor of a large naval increase, and the Japanese incident is eagerly grasped at as a plausible argument in that direction.

Now, we have never shared the apprehensions of the alarmists. Our navy stands third on the list of maritime nations, Great Britain and France being the two leading sea powers. There is positively nothing to justify the supposition that Japan is straining every nerve to shatter the firm and honorable friendship of nearly half a century. While our press and people have permitted themselves to be wrought up to a pitch of feeling, Japan sits calmly waiting the verdict of the official investigation. Doubtless the President is strictly within the facts, when he states in his recent message, that the overwhelming sentiment in California is for law and order, and for the protection of the Japanese in their persons and property. The final outcome will show that the sentiment of the whole nation is for justice.

Our country has already established an honorable record as the friend of peaceful and enlightened methods of adjusting international differences, and we believe the present case will follow the precedents. Perhaps we may not be ahead of other nations in recognizing the truth of the general principle which declares that no human dispute is incapable of pacific adjustment; but we are behind none in the practical application of that principle.

The New Ambassador

IN appointing as its new Ambassador at Washington the Right Honorable James Bryce, lately Chief Secretary for Ireland, the British government has chosen for that important post a man of most distinguished attainments. Scottish by birth and educated at the University of Glasgow and Oxford, Mr. Bryce has had a most brilliant career in law, literature and statesmanship. In Parliament he has always been known as a Liberal, and he was in the Gladstone Cabinet as Under Secretary for Foreign Affairs. He is a warm supporter of Home Rule. In the broader field of world politics, he has a grasp of all the leading problems that have arisen in recent years, while the supporters of social reforms and of efforts to improve the condition of the poor have found him an earnest and able ally.

Americans are probably better acquainted with the new Ambassador through his writings than through his official record. His well-known book, The American Commonwealth, in which he records the impressions made upon him by our institutions, during a prolonged visit in 1870, is a work of ripe judgment and sound conclusions, and it has rightly been accorded a high place among standard works of this class. He has paid us four visits in all, and has been a keen and interested observer of industrial, educational and political progress here that he can hardly be regarded as a stranger.

World-traveler, scientist, mountain-climber, orator, successful author, and broad-minded statesman, this "grand old man" is a newcomer in the field of diplomacy. He is now about to fill the most important, and, in some respects, the most difficult post he has ever held. Our people have a hearty admiration for genuine ability and the new Ambassador will be cordially welcomed.

The Secret of Happiness

HAPPINESS eludes definition. As well may one try to define a perfume or describe a winter sunset, all orange and opal and burning flame, in cold words, or put into language the passionate sweetness of a tone in music, as attempt to interpret happiness in common speech.

What makes happiness for one does not make it for another. Temperaments differ. Dispositions are exacting or indifferent, and there are those who are never quite happy unless everything around them touches the note of the superlative. Somebody has said that happiness is adjustment to the environment. This may be partially true, yet the happiness that rests on so insecure and shifting a condition is hardly worth the name. Real happiness must have its spring from something in the soul. Our Lord said to his disciples, "The kingdom of heaven is within you." Unless one has a hold upon heaven, and can grasp its divine realities, earthly happiness will be mere tinsel easily tarnished, and worth nothing when accounts are balanced at the end of life's day.

One to another we say at this time, "A Happy Christmas," "A Happy New Year." The Old Year has had its troubles and disasters, its disillusions, its trials and vexations. The Old Year has broken some promises. Although it has had its sunny days and its hours of satisfaction, still, on the whole, we will not regret bidding it farewell. Here is the New Year already here, its pages clean, its pledges intact, its hopes glowing, its opportunities alluring. We are unfeignedly sincere in our welcome to its novelty, and we fancy that it and we have a good chance for real happiness. We shall be happiest in it on the days when we try hardest to help a struggling brother or lend a hand to a discouraged friend.

The truth is that we carry our happiness with us. And it is in our power to make or mar the coming months.

In the Religious World

—THE BETHESDA LEPER HOME in Surinam, South America, is in urgent need of linen bandages. They may be sent (expressage prepaid) to R. Dan Wolterbeek, Forwarding Agent of the Bethesda Leper Home, 1-3 Ann Street, New York, N. Y.

—THERE ARE NOW over 350,000 children in New York's Sunday-Schools. New methods of teaching prevail in most of the schools, by which Biblical history is "visualized," and brought down to the comprehension of the pupils. A full account of these improved methods is now in preparation for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

—CROSSLEY AND HUNTER, the Canadian evangelists, have now worked together for over twenty-two years. Their last campaign in Brockville, Ontario, during November, saw all classes, characters and ages among the converts. 866 made profession of faith. The evangelists are now planned till next July, in Cornwall, Calgary, Port Arthur, Windsor, Toronto, Neepanda, and Crystal City.

—THE FIRST of the meetings in the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, New York City, at which the converts of the East Side missions were to testify, took place lately. Five converts of the McAuley Water Street Mission, led by Superintendent John Wyburn, testified before a Fifth Avenue congregation. Rev. Dr. Mackay has received hundreds of letters from converted men and women, who declare their readiness to witness for Christ inpublic.

—REV. E. P. HAMMOND, the veteran evangelist, whose work among the children of two continents has been so successful, has been invited to spend a year in India. Rev. Richard Burgess, Gen. Sec'y of the India Sunday School Union, will organize a series of meetings for Mr. Hammond, whose labors will be to a very large extent among the famine children in the mission orphanages. Dr. Hammond's visit and its results will be of special interest to all who have had a share in the India Orphan Work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

The Famous Allegorical Picture of the Supremacy of Our Lord Jesus Christ, by Byam Shaw

The Divine Hero

ONE of the most remarkable pictures of this season is that by Mr. Byam Shaw, which portrays in symbol the pre-eminence of Jesus Christ over the eroes of history. On the canvas, the men of all ages hom the world has agreed to hold in highest reverence, re represented as gathered in worship of Christ. His ommanding figure occupies the centre of the picture at ie head of a white stairway. On one side of him is the ythical figure of St. George, and on his right the angel t. Michael. Below and beneath are the valiant Akbar, ho ruled India in the sixteenth century; Alexander, the orld-conquerer; Louis IX., the crusader and king; oan of Arc, the heroic leader of the French forces gainst the English invaders of her country; Charlemagne, ie Christian ruler and consolidator of the ninth century; ie Black Prince victor at Crecy and Poitiers; Barbarossa, mperor of Germany in the twelfth century; Torajiro, the apanese Samurai; Perseus, the legendary rescuer of ndromeda; Sir Galahad, the knight of untarnished urity; Siegfried of the Norwegian legend; Nicholson, ie hero of the Indian Mutiny, and Chinese Gordon, the artyr of Khartoum. All these are represented as doing omage to Christ.

Wherefore God hath highly exalted him and given him a name hich is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee hould bow and every tongue confess that Jesus Christ is Lord hil. 2: 9-11)

Church Struggle in France

The spectacular event of the week in the national conlict has been the expulsion of Cardinal Richard, Archishop of Paris, from his official residence. The venerale prelate had made it known that he would yield only o force. There was to be no physical struggle; it would e sufficient for a State officer to put his hand on the Cardinal's shoulder and bid him depart. In some way he idea was conveyed that a scene of violence would be ritnessed, and a crowd of sympathizers, among whom vas the Count Boni de Castellane, the recently divorced usband of Anna Gould, assembled in the yard of the Cardinal's palace to protect him. The Cardinal decended voluntarily and entered his carriage amid the heers of his friends. Some enthusiasts in the crowd letached the horses and dragged the carriage a short nile to the house placed at the Cardinal's disposal by a nember of the French Parliament.

In many churches services have been held in defiance of the law. The Government shows a forbearing dispoition, and merely notes the violation of the law, or inlicts nominal fines on the priests conducting the services. n the country districts, and in some city parishes, the ervices are legalized. To do this it is necessary only for wo citizens to go to the Government offices and notify he authorities that services will be held in a certain hurch for a year to come. One such notice covers the ntire year. It is feared that the Pope may prohibit this being done by laymen, as he has prohibited it being done by priests, but hitherto he has not taken action. Both M. Briand and M. Clemenceau declare that they have no desire to close the churches, and deplore the hostile attitude of the Pope. It appears from a statement published in American journals, by Archbishop Farley, of New York, that the property acquired by the church during the last hundred years amounts to more than a hundred million dollars, of which only a portion not yet ascertained is claimed by the State for charitable purposes. To the outsider it would seem that the Roman Catholic Church is needlessly making itself a martyr. The conditions on which it obtains freedom from State interference and control do not appear onerous, and it is probable that resistance will only render those terms harder.

Rulers are not a terror to good works, but to evil. Wilt thou then not be afraid of the power? Do that which is good and thou shalt have praise of the same (Rom. 13: 3).

Ten Lives Saved by a Woman

The wife of a lighthouse keeper at Cape Beale, near Victoria, B. C., has done a heroic thing that deserves public recognition. During the fierce storm of Dec. 13, she saw from her point of vantage, the water-logged bark Coloma, drifting toward the rocks on Vancouver Island. The masts and rigging were gone, and ten men huddled on the poop were waiting the breaking-up of the vessel. The lighthouse keeper's wife knew their danger, and immediately set out to obtain help for them. There was none nearer than the Barnfield Creek cable station, twelve miles away. Breasting the piercing wind and the pitiless rain, she set out at daybreak to thread her way through the forest. She reached the point in safety, and was cheered to see the cutter Quadra belonging to the station with steam up. The crew had feared her anchors might drag in the storm, and had the steam up as a precaution. On receiving her report the cutter started for the relief of the imperilled seamen. They found them on the brink of despair. The cargo was washing out through the open seams, and every minute the complete break-up seemed imminent. The ten men were taken off and carried in safety to Esquimault where the United States Consul took care of them. That woman who procured help for the imperilled men had a noble spirit, facing hardship and danger for strangers. She had the spirit of Christ who suffered for a perishing world.

For scarcely for a righteous man will one die: yet peradventure for a good man some would even dare to die. But God commendeth his love toward us in that while we were yet sinners Christ died for us (Rom. 5: 7-8).

A Mortgaged Body

A poor woman in Virginia advertises that she will sell her brain and body, to be delivered after death, to medical schools in that city, Philadelphia, Chicago or New York. She says she has been driven by poverty to offer her corpse for sale. She says she does not care what is done with her after death, but that she needs money now. She says she will sign papers giving the whole of her body or her brain, or any other portion, to whatever institution offers her the best price. She is forty years of age and broken in health. Her poverty must be very dire and her need urgent, otherwise she would not make such an offer. It is better, however, to sell her corpse than to sell the soul, as some are tempted to do.

What shall a man give in exchange for his soul? (Mark 8: 37.)

His Wealth Unbearable

A strange reason for suicide was given a few days ago by a man who tried to throw himself from the roof of his house. He was a man of only forty years of age, and in good health. He had been an itinerant pedler on the lower East Side of New York, and had saved about five thousand dollars. He invested this in some small houses in Paterson, N. J., where he lived, and finding the speculation profitable, he abandoned business and devoted himself to dealings in real estate. He gradually acquired several city lots which he sold at a large profit, and bought more land. He was regarded as one of the most successful operators in the neighborhood. His property a month ago was estimated to be worth over $150,000. But at that time it was noticed that he was looking anxious and worried. To his friends he explained, that he was embarrassed by the size of his holdings, and that the harass of it was more than it was worth. It was thought that he might recover his spirits if he moved away from the scene of his activities, so he was induced to take a house in Harlem. There, however, he grew worse, and a friend who called on him had some difficulty in preventing him jumping from the roof. His family watched him carefully after that, but he eluded their vigilance and hanged himself.

There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt (Eccles. 5: 13).

Wrecked by a Mine

Two hundred lives were lost in the destruction of the Russian steamship Varyagen, which was blown up by a floating mine recently, off Cape Manchuria. The mine is thought to have been adrift since the Russo-Japanese war. The steamer was en route to Gongouz Bay, and after leaving Vladivostok was driven north by a northwest gale. The course lay four miles north of the mine field. When about four miles off Cape Manchuria the stern struck a submerged mine, which exploded upon contact. The catastrophe was so sudden that no boats could be got out or steps taken to save passengers. From the moment of the explosion until the destruction of the vessel not more than ninety seconds elapsed. Of the entire complement of 250 passengers, 47 were saved and the remainder perished. Of the crew of 23, 14 were saved. The mine was doubtless intended to destroy a Japanese ship, but the old saying has been fulfilled:

In the net which they hid is their own foot taken (Ps. 9: 15).

LONG COURTSHIPS

Do They turn out Happily, or are Short Engagements Better, after all?

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

MR. JOSEPH ADDISON, in one of those exquisite essays enjoyed by readers of English classics, tells of the grief of the club on hearing the news that a member much beloved had passed away. Sir Roger De Coverley had been a knight of the olden time. He had been the idol of a country neighborhood, had loved his horse and his hounds, had served his God and his country, and a gallant, simple-hearted gentleman, had bravely fulfilled his duty till life's latest day.

Mr. Addison, quoting a letter purporting to come from Sir Roger's butler, quaintly remarks that as he has made his will on a very cold day, he left a thick frieze coat to every yeoman in the parish, and to their wives a warm cloth riding-hood. Old-fashioned pictures show these riding-hoods, which were finished with quilted capes, warm enough to be an offset to the coats bequeathed to the men. But it was not Sir Roger's thoughtfulness for his rural friends that impressed the reader of an old brown leather-bound volume the other day, so much as an allusion to the lady he had courted during forty years. To her he left an ample fortune, although she had never bestowed upon him her heart and hand.

Long engagements seldom turn out happily. Yet long courtships have been known to give great delight to the faithful lovers who were contented thus to show their regard for one another. In a certain shire town in the South, for fifty years, once a week, at precisely the same hour, a courteous gentleman drew rein at the door of a beautiful woman. They were in the twenties when his worship of her began, and the frosts of time were thick upon their heads when he paid his last call. She died first, and he followed her to the grave in the character of chief mourner, and survived her less than a year. Every one in the county recognized the relation of these friends as confidential and intimate, every one knew that once a week they passed an hour or two together, and, years before the end, every one ceased to speculate as to why they did not marry, whether they ever would, and what changes would be made should the two faithful lovers become husband and wife. The secret of their determination not to marry was never disclosed, but they appeared to secure a reasonable amount of contentment from their polite and ceremonious courtship.

A similar instance was known to a wide circle in a Northern State. Near a university town resided a family of beautiful sisters, five in number. Four of the sisters married at an early age, one remained a spinster, and, throughout a long life, received the exclusive homage of a neighbor, who, like herself, appeared to prefer the independence of single blessedness. The gentleman was invariably the lady's escort at social functions, he dined with her once a week, and was always included among the guests when she had formal company or held receptions. His calls upon her were marked by the peculiarity that, summer and winter, they were made at five o'clock in the afternoon, and that it was his custom to take leave at exactly half-past six. The two appeared entirely contented in their friendly intercourse, they read the same books, knew the same people, had heard the same jests and the same anecdotes year after year, and were an agreeable and amicable pair of comrades. A delicate flavor of romance hung about their friendship, and so long as they lived they seemed entirely satisfied to remain outside the pale of united family life. They did not seek to be husband and wife, they were merely ceremonious lovers who hesitated, for some reason, to go beyond the days of courtship.

One wonders sometimes, in cases like these, what came between the lovers and the final word. In a farming locality in Western New York, there stands a little cottage quite by itself among fields and gardens. Roses clamber over it, and honeysuckle makes its veranda fragrant in the summer, and birds build their nests in the eaves. Here, living by herself, a little old lady, who was once a fair young girl, has spent the years of a tranquil and contented life. She once had a weary heartache, but it ceased to throb, and scarcely robbed her cheek of its bloom many years ago. For five years she had received the constant attentions of a suitor whom her parents liked and of whom she approved. She was twenty-two and he several years older when, without a word of explanation, he left the neighborhood and was not heard from for a long time. Some ten years passed before a report came back to the village of his marriage in California. The girl's parents died; she remained by herself. Fifty years after her lover's departure, she found, by accident, under a sliding panel in a desk, a piece of folded yellow paper that, in sheer perversity, had slipped itself out of sight. It was the letter in which he had asked her to be his wife, and to which, of course, she had not replied. So fate had intervened to prevent the married happiness that might have been hers. The moral is, that five years is much too long for courtship if anything permanent is to come after it.

Why should not every marriage continue to be in essentials a courtship? Why do lovers allow themselves to grow prosaic and suffer the commonplace to blot out the beautiful and attractive phases of life that belong to courting days? The girl who is expecting her lover, makes a special toilet that she may look her loveliest when she receives his calls, and the man takes pains to be at his best when he enters her presence. Why should husbands ever omit the little attentions that before marriage they were wont to lavish on the ones they adored? A husband has not ceased to be his wife's faithful lover, and he ought to remember that the wife prizes compliments and courtesy just as she did when she was a sweetheart. Naturally, when people have common interests and common anxieties they grow close together and take their loyal affection for granted. Yet affection thrives on demonstration, and a little gift, an unexpected pleasure, a bit of a surprise now and then, make wedlock the happier. If every marriage could continue to be as full of respect and tenderness as if it were courtship still, there would be little heard about domestic infelicity.

There is one little corner in Russia and one little heart on which no shadow of the troublous times has fallen. The idoliz son of the Czar, long looked for and dently welcomed when he came, is t centre of joy in the royal household, a no cloud thus far has eclipsed his brig career. The baby's mother, who shar with the royal family of England facili in various directions, is an expert woo carver. She has fashioned for the lit heir-apparent a play-house in white woo which is an exact reproduction of a fav rite summer chalet of the Czar's. T baby s play-house repeats line for line t royal cottage. It is in eighty-four piece beautifully carved in soft white wood, a deftly fitted together like t parts of a dissected map, on so firmly adjusted that wh set up, the little house stan on a good foundation.

The child who owns tl novel plaything may pull apart and build it up as oft as he pleases, and he enjo it just as your baby enjo building a house of blocks.

ONE OF THE FAMILY

This horse's name is good old John,
He often takes the road;
Right merrily he forges on,
Nor grumbles at the load.

And when at meals we take our place,
We like to see his dear old face.
We give him bits of sugar sweet,
For he full well deserves a treat.

Uncle Sam's Mail

However ready we may l to find fault with the Pos Office Department, to cor plain that letters and parce miscarry, and that once in while a letter dropped in corner box never thereaft reaches its destination; if w are honest and fair-minde we must admit that on th whole, the little red postag stamp is faithful to its trus and that Uncle Sam deserv a good deal of credit. Le ters by the million are tran mitted across vast areas country, are conveyed on th fast mail trains or borne ov gulfs and bays in swiftly fl ing steamships; they traver the sea, they make the circu of the globe, and, if proper addressed, they go with saf ty and despatch from send to recipient. In a multitu of cases they are not proper addressed, and for that reas give much trouble to post-office clerks an employees in general of Uncle Sam.

The holiday mail, the burden of which just over, is an example of the fidelity an patience, as well as the terrific strain which postmasters and letter-carriers ar subject. Gifts and messages of friendshi congest the mails for many days before an after Christmas. In addressing a lette should we not be at pains to be sure th we have placed our communication in th right envelope, that we direct it plainl to the person for whom it is intended, giv ing street and number, town, county an State, or post-office box, and that havin done all this, we have closely fastened th adhesive flap, or made it additionally saf with sealing wax. Then, for Uncle Sam convenience, and to save it from the dead letter office, let us write our own name an post-office address somewhere on the en velope, insuring its return to us if our cor respondent cannot be found. A little a tention to these details would keep us fro unduly blaming good Uncle Sam.

WOMAN'S STATUS THE WORLD OVER

IT is an encouraging fact that, all over the world, the tendency is in the direction of enlarged rights and opportunities for women. Broadly intelligent men and women in every land are more and more alert to secure for women the fullest recognition of their equality with men.

Alice Henry Australia

A great impetus to the movement on the Continent has just been given by the liberal ideas now being agitated regarding the exercise of the franchise by men voters. This reform embodies the republican ideal of the individual vote, "One man, one vote," being its war cry and platform. The woman suffrage idea has been grafted on this movement, and it is anticipated that there will be notable developments in the application and adoption of the plan of woman's enfranchisement to accompany the extension of the ballot among the common people.

Platia Johannesdottir,
Iceland

Hope shines even in dark, troubled Russia, where the reformers are said largely to favor the extension of some form of suffrage to women. In that country, there has been very little suffrage of any kind until recently. What there was related entirely to municipal affairs, with a property qualification. No distinction exists on account of sex, and husband and wife have the same legal rights. The women of the upper classes generally vote by proxy and not in person. Limited suffrage, based on property ownership, is possessed by women in Norway, Sweden, Iceland and Denmark. Through proxies, women may have a vote on questions affecting property interests in Prussia, Westphalia, Schleswig-Holstein, Saxony, Austria, Italy, Luxemburg and Roumania. The same privilege exists in Belgium, which has been investigating, through a special embassy, the operation of woman suffrage in practice in the four suffrage States in the United States. In Finland, where property suffrage already exists for women, the parliament has passed a woman suffrage bill. There is a hope in Holland that some form of recognition may be extended to women by amendment to the Dutch Constitution, each political party having invited the National Suffrage Association (for the extension of man suffrage), to present a statement as to what they desire in the new Constitution.

Sevasti Callisperi
Greece

Political equality makes slow headway in conservative Germany, where political organizations among women are forbidden by law. Yet Berlin gave a royal welcome to representative women in the International Council of Women which met there in June, 1904; and the Empress herself tendered a reception to the leaders. In Berlin at that time was born the International Woman's Suffrage Alliance (conceived through the organization of an International Committee at Washington two years before), embracing twelve National Woman's Suffrage Associations in as many different lands. Despite legal restriction, the Federation of Progressive Women's Societies in Germany, has as its first and foremost object to secure for German women not only an improvement of their legal and social standing, but full political rights as well.

In Australia, where the question of woman's political equality is on a higher plane than in any other part of the world, the labors of the United Council for Woman Suffrage, comprised of representatives from all associations that favor equal franchise, have been directed in so successful a manner that the Australian Federation was won for the full enfranchisement of women, to include even the Parliamentary suffrage.

The privilege recently gained in Norway, by which women of property are entitled to municipal suffrage and to representation in civic government, is largely due to the National organization of Norwegian women. In Sweden, women have voted for municipal offices since 1736. The Frederika Bremer Association, for the promotion of Equal Suffrage, includes both men and women.

Carrie Chapman Catt, U. S.

Rachel Foster Avery, U. S.

The power of women, though latent, is felt in Turkey, and the Turkish woman is said to stand strong in politics and practically to control political appointments. It is interesting to note the optimistic prophecy, that through the influence of the Western world and the many American institutions in Turkey, the women of that land, "will before long take their place among the greatest women of the world." The movement for women's enfranchisement in the Sultan's dominions has been forwarded by Miss Florence Fensham, for twenty years Dean of the well-known American College for Girls at Constantinople.

In New Zealand, Tasmania and the Isle of Man, as well as in Australia, as has been already noted, women exercise full suffrage in national affairs. In all other English colonies, in England, Ireland, Scotland and Wales, women possess municipal suffrage. In 1905 the National Liberal Federation, at its annual meeting, passed a strong woman's suffrage resolution, as did the General Council and the National Reform Union.

Rev. Anna H. Shaw
U. S.

Full woman suffrage established in four of the United States: Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, and Idaho; school suffrage in twenty-two States; and the right accorded women taxpayers in New York State, towns and villages, and in other localities throughout the country to vote on questions of local taxation, is the status of the woman's suffrage movement in the United States after a half-century of persistent agitation. In this country, there exists what is not known in any other land: the opposition of a few conservative women to the enfranchisement of their sex. Twice, in Oregon recently, the anti-suffragists allied with the liquor interests. But the virility of the movement, which is growing stronger each year, brings it up after each succeeding defeat, ready for the next campaign.

Senorita Huidobro
Chile

The National American Woman Suffrage Association, at its last annual convention, found much cause for felicitation in the enlarged personal, legal, political, professional, educational and industrial privileges and opportunities secured for women, and in the steady advance in public sentiment.

Such, at a glance, is the status of woman the world over, at the opening of the New Year. J. A. S.

BISHOP McCABE PASSES AWAY

LAST week's issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD contained an account of the sudden and serious illness of Bishop Charles Cardwell McCabe, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, together with a brief sketch of his life and work. In sad postscript to those paragraphs comes the announcement of his death in the New York Hospital on the morning of the 19th of December, aged seventy years. His wife and niece were with the Bishop at the last. He also leaves a son, John P. McCabe, of Battle Creek, Mich.

The evening before Bishop McCabe received the stroke of apoplexy, which has since proved fatal, he had delivered his well-known lecture, "The Sunny Side of Libby Prison," in a Connecticut town, and he was hurrying to his home in Philadelphia when, without warning, he was taken ill upon the street in New York, and removed immediately to the hospital.

Although he was elected to the Bishopric ten years ago, it is by the name of "Chaplain" McCabe that his friends will longest remember him, for it was under that title that he won his way to the hearts of the Methodist people by his magnetic personality and devotion to the cause of home missions, whose champion he was. Two generations of the children of Methodism will cherish the memory of the genial, great-hearted man, whose rich, melodious voice resounded throughout the churches and camp-meetings of the land, in the tender strains of "The Trundle Bed Song," even though they have no knowledge of him as successful money raiser or astute bishop. Few men of his denomination have been more popular and few will be lamented more.

The Late Bishop C. C. McCabe

His funeral was held from St. Paul's M. E. Church, New York City, with the pastor, Rev. Dr. George P. Eckman, in charge of the services. Rev. Dr. W. V. Kelley, editor of The Methodist Review, Rev. Dr. James M. Buckley, editor of The Christian Advocate, and the venerable Bishop Edward G. Andrews, paid eloquent tributes to the memory of their dead co-laborer.

Enjoyed by the Whole Family

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I have for acknowledgment receipt of your "Worth While Library," also for the extension of my subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. To say the trio of books, as premium, are enjoyed by the whole family, is putting it mildly. We appreciate them very highly, I assure you, and with good wishes to our "old family companion," THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

A GREAT CHURCH'S GOLDEN JUBILEE

THE North Reformed Church, Newark, N. J., which is the largest church of that denomination in the United States, and of which the pastor is the Rev. Dr. J. I. Vance, distinguished as preacher and author, recently celebrated its Golden Jubilee. The minister, elders and deacons, issued over 2,000 cards of invitation to the semi-centennial festival, which commenced Monday night, December 10, and continued through Monday evening, December 17, Saturday being the only night without a service. The invitations bore the dates "1856-1906," and at the top was the seal, in gold, of the Dutch Reformed Church in America.

The North Church contributes generously to the New Brunswick Theological Seminary and Rutgers College, at New Brunswick, N. J., both of which institutions are connected with the denomination, and it raises from $15,000 to $20,000 annually for missions. It is larger than any other Reformed Church in the country by over one hundred members, the total membership being over 1,500, while the next highest congregation numbers a few over 1,400. The North Church has between 1,600 and 1,700 pupils in its three Sunday Schools. The morning Sunday School at the church has over 900 members; the afternoon Church-School, 400 enrolled; and the East Newark Chapel, just across the river, about 300 pupils. The membership of the church has exactly doubled during the six years of the pastorate of Dr. Vance. The membership of 1,583, does not include a reserve roll of some 300. The church pays from $40,000 to $50,000 a year for congregational expenses.

During the fifty years, exactly 2,610 persons have confessed Christ publicly at this altar. In that period there have been seven pastors, four of whom are still living. They are (besides Dr. Vance, the present pastor), the Rev. Dr. Donald Sage Mackay, now pastor of the Collegiate Church of St. Nicholas, New York City, Rev. Dr. Charles E. Hart, a professor at Rutgers' College, and Rev. Dr. James E. Demarest, pastor of the Bethany Reformed Church, Brooklyn. A feature of the celebration was the reading of a Golden Jubilee poem, by Mrs. Margaret E. Sangster, who is an active member of the church. Among the features of the Jubilee were the following: A men's dinner in the church parlors, with Elder Peter Campbell presiding, the guest of honor being Rev. Dr. Henry Everson Cobb, pastor West End Collegiate Church, New York, who is the grandson of the late Rev. Dr. Abram Polhemus, first pastor of the local church. One evening was given up to "Reminiscences," a semi-centennial poem, by Rev. Dr. D. Wortman, of East Orange, addresses by Rev. Dr. E. P. Terhune, of New York, Rev. Dr. I. H. Polhemus, pastor Tompkins Avenue Congregational Church, Brooklyn, and Rev. Dr. Joseph R. Duryee, pastor Grace Reformed Church, New York City. The Sunday Schools held their Golden Jubilee service at a public gathering in the church. Mr. Frederick Frelinghuysen read an historical sketch of the school, and Dr. John F. Paterson, of Orange, talked on Sunday School work. Other features of the celebration were a church reception in the parish parlors under the auspices of the reception committee of the Ladies' Benevolent and Missionary Society, a preparatory service conducted by Dr. Vance; Communion Service Sunday, with a sermon by Rev. Dr. Hugh Black, of Union Theological Seminary, New York, and the anniversary sermon by Dr. Vance.

The North Church is the wealthiest congregation in Newark. Its property is valued at $200,000. Dr. Vance has an assistant, Rev. P. K. Hageman, who assists him greatly in the care of the parish, which numbers over 2,000 souls. The women of the church support a foreign missionary, who is the sister of the famous Rev. Dr. Samuel Zwimmer, of Arabia. This church has a special trained nurse, Miss Mabel I. Grant, who devotes all her time to caring for the sick of the parish who cannot afford the services of a nurse in their home.

Rev. Dr. Vance is a Southerner, and is known and loved by thousands all over the South. He has often been designated as one of the greatest living orators the South has produced. Before coming to the Newark church he was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Nashville, Tenn., which has more members than any other single congregation in the Southern Presbyterian Church. He is especially fond of boys, and most of his books deal with problems that confront young men. He is forty-four years old, and is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robertson Vance, of Bristol, Tenn. He went to King's College. Tenn., being graduated with the degrees of A.B. and A.M. in 1883. He was graduated from the Union Theological Seminary, Hampton-Sidney, Va., in 1886. His first charge was at Wytheville, Va., where he was pastor of the First Presbyterian Church. His wife was Miss Mary S. Currell, of Yorkville, South Carolina. Although Dr. Vance lives in the North, he never lets it remain a secret that he is a Southerner, and he makes trips to his former parishes several times a year.

RACHEL K. McDOWELL.

THE GREAT FLOODS IN CHINA

FURTHER details of the phenomenal floods in the Kiangsu and Anhwei provinces of China have been received from the American missionaries there. Rev. B. C. Patterson, of the Famine Relief Committee, writes to Dr. Klopsch from Suchien, Kiangsu, under date of November 18, 1906:

"Our Committee, through Mr. T. F. McCrea, of Chinkiang, has made an appeal through you for famine relief for the sufferers. I enclose some photographs which, in some measure, show the cause of the suffering.

"These photographs mean little till one understands that the whole plain west of the Grand Canal—in places 100 miles wide and more than 200 miles long—has been flooded. The crops stood under water till they rotted. The part of the wheat that was saved is the only resource of the people until next June's harvest.

"Many have died and thousands will die from malnutrition. Leaves and coarse mill-feed, ordinarily given only to hogs, now sell for as much as good food usually costs. Trade is paralyzed and employees are dismissed. Furniture and clothes are sacrificed and the poor parents hear the hungry children cry in the night, while they themselves crouch helplessly on the mat in the corner. The need of these, our fellow-beings, should appeal to those of us who have been more favored."

One of the photographs forwarded by Mr. Patterson shows the Grand Canal and lakes run together. At the maximum of the flood they stood fifteen or twenty feet above the level country. Another picture shows a submerged field. The waters did not abate from these fields for more than a month. A third photograph is that of a large junk, sailing southward with famine refugees who have no definite destination but are glad to get away from the region of flood and hunger and suffering, to some section where they may at least be fed and preserved from starvation.

It is reported from Tsinkiangpu, on the Grand Canal, that Haichou sub-prefecture has now become a hotbed of discontent, and that the people there are on the point of rebellion. The disaffected people are sufferers from the recent floods there. They find that the assistance sent by the authorities is utterly inadequate to relieve their wants. Furthermore, finding no food at hand, the unfortunate sufferers attempted to cross the Grand Canal and emigrate southward to the richer and better provided districts, the authorities forced the famine sufferers, numbering some 10,000 families, to return to their flood-devastated sub-prefecture, with a promise that sufficient food would be soon forthcoming. It never came.

The Famine Relief work is progressing vigorously, and the Shanghai Committee (consisting of influential foreigners and native officials), is doing its best to help the sufferers with the means at its disposal. The Missionary Committee at Chinkiang—whose appeal THE CHRISTIAN HERALD published last week—is also doing excellent work. A contribution of $1,000 has been sent by the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to Rev. T. F. McCrea, Treasurer of the Missionary Committee, to be applied to the neediest cases among the afflicted native population.

A Jewish Rabbi Converted

EARLY two thousand years ago Paul, a Jew, and the greatest missionary the world has ever had, said, "I am not ashamed of the Gospel, for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth; to the Jew first." A few children of God there are who have this great burden upon their hearts, and for their encouragement we print the following account of how one of the lost sheep of the house of Israel found his Shepherd, and is now serving him. The story is that of Rev. Leopold Cohn:

"I was born in 1862, at Berezna, a little town in the east of Hungary, where I was brought up in the strict orthodox Jewish religion. In that country the Roman and Greek Catholic Christians openly exhibit their idolatrous habits, such as prostrations in the highways before crosses and saints. At twenty years of age I was proficient in Hebrew literature and the Talmudic law. I received from several rabbis, whose colleges I had studied in, a diploma conferring a certificate of my good character and acquirements, and also authority to become a rabbi. Shortly after, I was called to practice my rabbinical duties.

"At my leisure I had frequent recourse to my Talmud, in which I once read the following: 'The world is to stand six thousand years, viz.: Two thousand, confusion and void; two thousand with the law, and two thousand, the times of the Messiah.' The very first and most authoritative commentary's explanation on the last clause is, 'because after the second two thousand years the Messiah must have come, and the wicked kingdom should have been destroyed.' This struck me very forcibly. I now saw that the time of the Messiah was over a thousand years ago, according to the Jewish reckoning. I continued to study the prophets with greater zeal. Whilst doing so the spirit of God's Word took hold of my mind and heart. I then discovered that much of the Talmudic law is subversive of the plain Word of God. I could find no rest nor peace for my troubled soul. I asked many other rabbis how they reeonciled certain passages of the Talmud with the Word of God, and also about the Messiah, but I received no satisfactory answer. When they heard me finding so much fault with the Holy Talmud, it was quite enough to make them mad. Bitter persecution and excommunication followed. Several rabbis tried to make peace between us, but without success. I was sure that I had not committed any crime, so I simply referred to the plain Word of God, and said, 'Let any rabbi give me a satisfactory answer.'

"About the middle of March, 1892, in obedience to a voice in my heart, I found myself in the great city of New York. On the third Saturday after my arrival, a Hebrew sign arrested my attention. I stopped, and read, 'Here is a meeting for Jews.' Curiosity led me to enter in. At the first step towards the door, I lifted up my eyes and beheld a cross at the top of the building. One of my countrymen passed by and said in a mischievous tone, 'You had better come away from there. There are apostates in that church. They say the Messiah has come already.' I longed to enter that church to hear their ideas about the Messiah. I freed myself from my companion and went into the church, but seeing the preacher on the platform, as well as the audience, bareheaded, I turned quickly and went out. The janitor, noticing this, gave me the address of the preacher. The following Monday I called on him at his home. After a little talk, he gave me a Hebrew New Testament, which I had never seen or heard of before." I went to my room with it in my pocket. I began to read it at eleven o'clock in the morning, and continued after midnight, without dinner or supper, and without sleep.

"Then followed a period of bitter and fierce persecution at the hands of my countrymen. I could not go in the street, for fear of being stoned; I was not even safe in my room. At last the way was opened for me to flee to Scotland, where I stayed, in Edinburgh, for some time, studying in the new College of the Free Church. While this was happening, my wife and children were still in Hungary. When it became known that I had accepted the Lord Jesus Christ, the news was cabled to my home town, and my friends and relatives gave me up as an apostate. But my wife refused to believe the news. She had a great desire to join me and find out for herself. After many perils, and no little opposition, she arrived in Edinburgh. The first question she asked me was: 'Is it true that you have become an apostate?' I replied that I had not forsaken the God of Israel, but found the Messiah, that One whom the Jews know by the name of the Crucified One, whom they are taught to detest. When she heard this confession, she said, 'That is enough. I will rest here a few days, and then I will return to Hungary. I will not be the wife of an apostate.' But she decided she would stay, on the condition that she keep her religion, and I keep mine. A few years later she accepted the Saviour, and has been a most powerful help to me in my Gospel work.

"Then a call came to return to America to labor among my brethren. I came, and I started a mission in that part of Brooklyn known as Brownsville, where there are now about 100,000 Jews. I had no society to back me, no board, nothing save the Lord Jesus Christ. For nearly two years we passed through untold struggles. Sometimes there was not even food in the house. Those were times of severe testings. But then came the dawn, and friends were raised for the work. It is now twelve years since the Lord led me to Brooklyn. We now have two missions, one in Brownsville and one in Williamsburg. These missions reach 200,000. Nearly eighty Jews have confessed Christ openly by baptism, while hundreds have confessed their belief privately, fearing to face open persecution."

Mr. Cohn's work, which is known as the Brownsville and Williamsburg Christian Mission to the Jews, is supported by voluntary contributions. He will gladly answer all inquiries that may be made concerning it by readers of this journal, who may address him at 620a Quincy Street, Brooklyn, N. Y. His son, Mr, Joseph Cohn, is his principal helper, speaking in churches and Christian gatherings concerning the Jewish work.

One of the causes of chapped hands is poor soap. Another is the too frequent use of hot water.

Poor soap is soap that is made of cheap materials, which (principally because they are cheap) can not be properly "combined."

The thing to do is to use Ivory Soap. Made of pure vegetable oils, it keeps the pores of the skin free and enables them to do the work Nature intends them to do—throw off the impurities of the body.

There is no "free" (uncombined) alkali in Ivory Soap. That is why it will not injure the finest fabric or the most delicate skin.

The Family and the Sabbath

International Sunday-School Lesson,
*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

ADAM'S Soliloquy: I awoke as from a sleep, but could not tell from whence I had come. My existence was all a mystery to me. I looked about me, and saw strange and beautiful forms around me, over head and under my feet. I spoke, and there was none to answer. I laid me down that I might look more directly into the glorious canopy over me. Gradually I felt unconsciousness stealing over me, and then I was lost to myself. I awoke, and was no longer alone, for by me was one like unto myself, who answered when I spoke. We marveled at our being, but felt within ourselves that we had a noble origin.

Dominion Over Lower Races

Then appeared upon the scene a being like ourselves, but great and glorious. He spoke to us, and we understood. He told us that we were his children, that he had created us in his own image; that we were man and wife, and by us the world should be peopled. And he told us that all things, save the fruit of one tree, were ours to enjoy and control. He gave us dominion over every living thing, and bade us give them names. My name was "Adam," meaning earth, because I had been formed of the dust of the ground. The name of my wife was "Eve," meaning life, because she should become the mother of living children.

Our great and glorious Creator came again and again to the beautiful garden which he had given us for our home. And as he thus communed with us we knew that we had been created only a little lower than God himself, because we felt within us that which could respond to him. And thus the mystery of our being was solved. We knew from whence we had come, and that his purpose in our creation was that we should work together with him to establish his Kingdom upon the earth.

Then a great peace came upon all the scene, and we heard the voice of the Creator saying: "I rest from my works, and it shall be a time sanctified unto me, forever to be kept by man and beast." And we knew within ourselves that the Sabbath was given that we might learn how like his kingdom above the earth below might be.

A Famous Clock

There is in Strassburg, Germany, a marvelous clock. It is immense in size, almost like a small house, and yet is within the great cathedral. The movements of the sun and moon are represented upon it. In the first gallery of the clock is an angel with bell in hand, who strikes the hours. There are also figures representing boyhood, youth, manhood, and old age, which, in turn, strike the quarter hours. The days are represented by figures that appear each on his day—Apollo on Sunday, Diana on Monday, and so following. In the highest niche of the clock is a figure of Jesus, and at twelve o'clock the twelve apostles, hidden before, come out and pass in procession around Jesus, bowing as they pass, while Jesus raises his hand as if to bless them. On the highest pinnacle of the clock is a cock, which then flaps its wings and crows so loudly that it resounds all through the cathedral. Such wonderful devices of man show that he is indeed like God, himself a junior Creator, able to do great things as a partner of God in making the world over, in turning the rough material of nature into Christian civilization.

On the other hand, the great works of man remind us that God is like us, though greater, and plans the great world as the clockmaker plans the clock. A certain nobleman dwelling in a castle, had a guest one day, who, in the course of conversation, spoke so profanely of the Father in Heaven as to chill the blood of his host. "Are you not afraid of offending God by such words?" said the nobleman. The guest replied that he knew nothing about God, for he had never seen him. No reply was made, but the next morning the guest asked the nobleman who had painted a beautiful picture which hung on the wall. His host replied, "My son." "He must be a clever man," replied the guest. Later in the day as the two gentlemen were walking in the garden, the guest observed many rare plants and flowers, and on asking who had the management of the garden, the father again said, "My son." "Indeed!" said the guest, "I shall soon have a very exalted opinion of him." The nobleman then took his visitor to the village and showed him a neat building which his son had fitted up for a school, where the poor were instructed free of expense. "What a happy man you must be to have such a son!" exclaimed the guest. "How do you know that I have a son? You have never seen him!" "But I have seen his works," said the guest, beginning to see the point of the illustrations. "Now come to this window," said the host, "and behold a great river, and pastures and orchards and cattle and sheep, feeding in rich fields, and the glorious sunshine over all. You have not seen God but you have seen his works, which proclaim a Creator like us, but greater. Hallowed be his name." This the guest learned to do.

God Creates the Home

And God said, "Be fruitful and multiply." Thus was the first home established, and ever since "God hath set the solitary in families."

> Land of every star and sun,
> Finish then thy work begun.
> Born in home and not in herd,
> Let the children hear thy word;
> Lift the mother with the child,
> Foster manhood undefiled.

> JOSEPH COOK.

John Howard Payne's immortal song, "Home, Sweet Home," lives because it finds a God-given echo in human hearts. But all homes are not sweet homes. Few know the real home life better than a pastor, and this is what one of them says: "While I would by no means break up any marriages already made, I believe that every pastor's observation of the causes of backsliding, family troubles and unsaved children, leads him to the most positive conviction of the wisdom of that law of both the Old and the New Testament, whose scope is by no means confined to the past, but applies to all time: 'Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers.' I could tell you of many respectable homes, where Christian women, having wedded godless men, now that the honeymoon is past, are almost dragged into Sabbath-breaking and other sins, and can enjoy church privileges only at the risk of a family quarrel; and of others, where all the Christian mother's teachings to the children are more than checkmated by the scoffing husband; and of others where the differences between a believing wife and an unbelieving husband, or vice versa, make a perpetual conflict of opinions and plans; and of others where the indifference to religion of one parent is more than a match for the most devout prayers of the other. Nothing stands out more painfully from my acquaintance in a score of churches that have been under the care of my father and myself than this: That the women and men who marry unsaved persons run an awful risk of losing their own souls and the souls of their children."

Family Worship

A lady said to her husband, when the marriage ceremony was performed: "I want to ask one privilege, that is to always pray in family worship while you are unconverted." It was granted, and the man is to-day a local preacher. In England and Scotland it is commonly estimated that daily household prayer is maintained in at least half the families of professing Christians, and when domestic servants are employed, they share in the service. In the United States the proportion is much smaller—not more than one-tenth in our cities, as has been proved by several tests—nd the consequence is a distinct loss in the ntegrity and the Christian influence of the mily in the community.

The writer has found that a pastor and s church officers can greatly multiply mily altars by sending to all the homes the church a uniform course of well-lected Bible readings, and having them lumined by preceding sermons and rayer-meeting talks. With the grace at ble should go the habit of repeating from emory a Bible motto. A child beginning t five years of age, and learning a new erse each day, would have thirty-four ousand verses in memory at seventy years f age.

Hints for a Christian Home

1. We may be quite sure that our will likely to be crossed during the day, so t us prepare for it.

2. Every person in the house has an evil ature as well as ourselves, and therefore e are not to expect too much.

3. Look upon each member of the family s one for whom Christ died.

4. When inclined to give an angry an-ver let us lift up our heart in prayer.

5. If from sickness, pain or infirmity we el irritable, let us keep a very strict atch over ourselves.

6. Observe when others are suffering and rop a word of kindness.

7. Watch the little opportunities of pleas-ng, and put little annoyances out of the ay.

8. Take a cheerful view of everything, nd encourage hope.

9. Speak kindly to dependents and ser-ants, and praise them when you can.

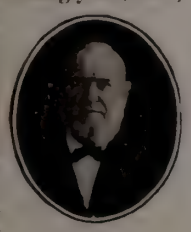
The Sabbath made for man as the climax f creation. "And God blessed the sev-nth day and sanctified it." God sanctified for man and beast, as well as for him-elf. When he afterwards gave the law of he Sabbath, in the Fourth Command-ment, from Mount Sinai, the beasts were pecially mentioned. Sabbath rest is good, not only for our spiritual nature, but also for animal nature in man and beast. The Sabbath brings cleanliness to the body, change and culture to the mind, fellowship to the heart, as well as re-enforcement to the conscience, and joyous light to the soul. It benefits man as an individual, but even more in his social relations of the home and the State.

The Weekly Rest

The question whether one shall do this or that on the Sabbath should not in this age surely be settled by any such petty, narrow test as, "Will it do me any particular harm?" When China is adopting the Sabbath because of its national and world benefits, though not a Christian nation, we may well remember that the quiet use of the Sabbath for the improvement of mind and soul, as well as body, has been one of the mightiest of American institutions, equaled only by the "little red schoolhouse" in making our people intelligent enough for safe self-government. And let us not miss all the lessons of the unstable Spanish republics, where the people spend the Sabbath in childish and brutal occupations, and so are too childish and brutal on election day to cast their votes intelligently and conscientiously. Sunday golf is disloyalty to American institutions. A quiet Sabbath in the home and church is really most restful, most enjoyable, most courteous, most patriotic, most Christian. There is profound truth, for individuals and nations, in Isaiah's profound teaching (58: 14), that it is those who "turn away from pleasure" on the Sabbath who find higher "delight," and those who cease that day from work for gain, who find greater prosperity. The men and the nations that are to-day "riding on the high places of the earth" are mostly those who, more than others, have on one day in the week halted their pursuit of greed and pleasure to hear the voice of God and help their fellow-men.

An Aged Reader's Good Wishes

DEAR Dr. Klopsch: Your very beautiful Calendar for the coming year, 1907, ame safely to hand, and ow hangs in our sitting-oom, the admiration of ll who see it; and it is ccepted in the loving pirit manifested in the ittle printed slip which ccompanied it. The ishes—may I not say he prayer — you there itter for our prosperity nd happiness throughout he coming year, so that at the end there-f we may "look back upon it with gen-ine pleasure and heartfelt gratitude to ur heavenly Father," is appreciated in he spirit which led you to send it. Whether ve shall live through the year is a problem which can only be solved by the passage of he year, and the will of our heavenly ather.



Alpheus Davison

I am almost eighty-two years old, and my good wife is one year and eleven months older than I. We were married before I was of age, and have lived a long and happy life together, and while I am a wonder to myself and to my many friends, that I am so vigorous and active at my age, she is feeble, so that she has not been away from home for over a year, and only gets about the house by being led or holding on to something. We often talk it over together and say that we have no reason for complaint, for very few couples live so long and happily together. We have six children, all married; sixteen grandchildren, and six or seven great-grandchildren.

You will please accept our appreciation of the grand work you are doing for the human race; and with a prayer that your prosperity and usefulness may be continued many years, I am

Yours in Christian love,

ALPHEUS DAVISON.

Answered Prayers

N. E. M., Indiana. "I believe the Lord hears and nswers prayer. He has answered many prayers or me, and I praise and thank him for it."

Mrs. A. L. M., North Carolina. "Truly God is ood and merciful. I wish to add my testimony o this column of Answered Prayers."

An Old Reader, Nebraska. "For seven years I ave prayed for my husband's conversion, and last spring God's answer came. I thank him for what e has done for me."

L. H. F., New York. "The Answered Prayers cknowledged in your paper are the source of reat help and comfort to me. They have won-erfully strengthened my own faith."

Mrs. M. E. M., Ohio. "I can testify that God ears and answers prayer: a cloud of long stand-ng has been lifted, and a ray of sunshine has come hrough. God has entered my soul."

E. M. S., Missouri. "I acknowledge God's good-ess in answering prayer, and I am thankful God s good and will never forsake his own. I pray to serve him more faithfully."

J. L., Minnesota. "I also want to add my tes-mony in praise of God's direct answer to prayer. Just now I am rejoicing in a very direct answer to earnest prayer. Help could come from no other source."

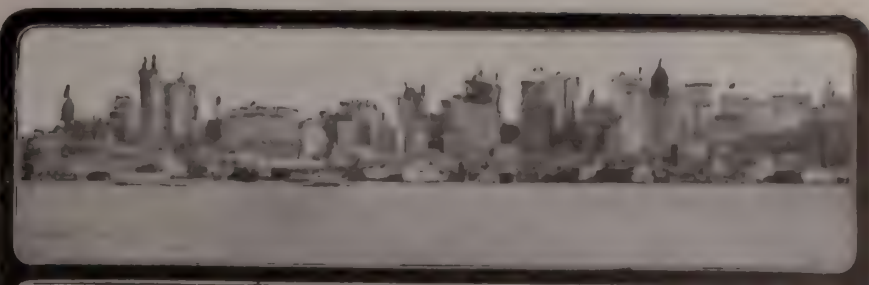
Mrs. M. McK., Wisconsin. "I was raised by praying parents, who taught me in my youth. I know the Lord answers prayers: He has answered mine, and saved me out of many dangers these seventy-eight years. I thank the Lord for it."

H. G. C., Illinois. "I committed a very great sin, and was in overwhelming anxiety lest it was too great for forgiveness. But I prayed earnestly to the Lord for pardon, and the assurance of his mercy came to me without doubt. Praise be to our God!"

A. B., New York. "I feel it my duty to acknowledge that many times my prayers have been answered and I could not be happy to live in any other way than to put all my trust in my dear heavenly Father; for I know that he hears and answers prayers if we are sincere."

Mrs. S. J. Q., Kansas. "I ask God to be with me in all my business affairs, and I trust in him, and I really cannot count the blessings he has given me in many ways. I leave myself with God every morning and evening, by reading the Bible and prayers, and He has been so merciful and kind to me and has answered my prayers many times."

Mrs. F. M. S., California. "I wish to say, that many times the Lord has heard and answered my appeals. Lately, when a daughter was threatened with severe illness, earnest prayer was made that it might be averted, and the answer came in a speedy return to health. Many times answers have seemed as direct."



New York City

has a population of over 4,000,000—as great as that of fifteen States and Territories combined. Its annual revenues are over $125,000,000—twice those of the Dominion of Canada, more than four times those of Mexico and one-fifth those of the United States Government.

The responsibility for the City's finances is thoroughly centralized in the hands of a board of seven of the City's highest officials, all of whom are subject to the Executive of the State. The obligations of such a city, for security and interest return combined, are second only to United States bonds.

If you have ten dollars or a million dollars to invest, send for an illustrated booklet, just issued, giving complete information regarding the bonds, finances and Government of the City.

Should information be desired concerning any other type of investment bond, the National City Bank will freely furnish its services.

Every Ambitious Young Man

Should read the article on Thrift, written by

DR. ORISON SWETT MARDEN, Editor of Success,

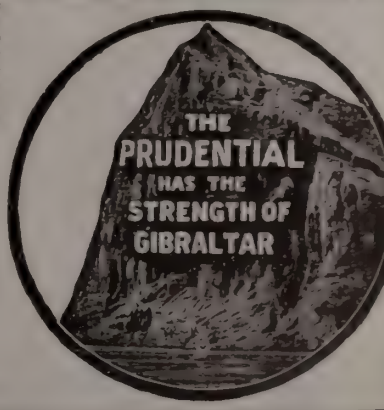
This is just an excerpt on

Inducing the Habit of Saving

"ANYTHING which will encourage the habit of saving in this extravagant age is a blessing. The temptations on every hand are so alluring that it is very difficult for a young man of ordinary self-control to resist them and to save his money.

"I believe that life-insurance is doing more to induce the habit of saving than almost anything else.

"I know of nothing which will cover up more blemishes, put out of sight more business weaknesses, cover up more surely the lack of foresight and thrift than a good life-insurance policy. It has proven a friend to thousands who have not been friends to themselves. It has shielded thousands of families who would have been homeless without it; it has sent to college multitudes of boys and girls who but for it would not have gone; it has started thousands of young men in business who, but for it, either would not have started at all, or would have been delayed for years. It has lifted the mortgage from thousands of homes."



This article should be read from start to finish by every young man. The Prudential has published it in pamphlet form and will send a copy free to anyone who will write for it.

CRIED EASILY

Nervous Woman Stopped Coffee and Quit Other Things.

No better practical proof that coffee is a drug can be required than to note how the nerves become unstrung in women who habitually drink it.

The stomach, too, rebels at being continually drugged with coffee and tea—they both contain the drug—caffeine. Ask your doctor.

An Ia. woman tells the old story thus:

"I had used coffee for six years and was troubled with headaches, nervousness and dizziness. In the morning upon rising I used to belch up a sour fluid, regularly.

"Often I got so nervous and miserable I would cry without the least reason, and I noticed my eyesight was getting poor.

"After using Postum a while, I observed the headaches left me and soon the belching of sour fluid stopped (water brash from dyspepsia). I feel decidedly different now, and I am convinced that it is because I stopped coffee and began to use Postum. I can see better now, my eyes are stronger.

"A friend of mine did not like Postum, but when I told her to make it like it said on the package, she liked it all right." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Always boil Postum well and it will surprise you.

Choosing Your Calling*

HOW to start in life, whether in trade, business or profession is all important, for although so-called "luck" seems the result of chance, ultimate success must be the product of intention.

That a boy may begin right at the very start, Mr. Nathaniel C. Fowler, has written a very practical book, which should be carefully read by every youth at the outset of his career. Entirely removed from the prejudice of personal opinion, he tells the unbiased truth about the leading trades, professions, and the various forms of mercantile life, pointing out what each of the thirty treated has to offer. Mr. Fowler goes further; he not only shows the boy what each vocation may be worth to him, but he tells him how to prepare himself for his calling, and assists him in determining, by self-examination, in what direction he will best succeed.

The unique feature of the book is that every chapter is concluded by a succinct endorsement of the statements and suggestions it contains, written by more than one hundred men, who have themselves reached the top of the ladder in the particular line discussed. Among those who have thus co-operated with the author are many university, bank and corporation presidents, lawyers and architects, editors, publishers and authors—in fact, at least two of the most eminent representatives of each of the leading vocations. For example, Mr. Fowler, himself a business adviser of acknowledged reputation, writes a chapter covering the requirements of the legal profession, with the attributes necessary for success in that field. To this chapter is appended advice and records of experience from no less important members of the profession than Edward Lauterbach, of New York, and Charles S. Hamlin, A.M., of Boston, late Acting Secretary of the United States Treasury.

Is the evolution of the department-store proprietor under discussion? Mr. Fowler secures the opinions of such successful merchants as John Shepard, of Boston, and Isador Straus, of New York, to endorse and accentuate his assertions. In like manner the agriculturist, the artist, the army and navy, the pulpit and the street railroad, are clearly photographed by the author, whose impersonal facts are clinched by the experiences of the sitters themselves.

Starting in Life*, by Nathaniel Fowler, Jr. Pp. 411. Price $1.50. Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

Books Received

Elementary Sloyd and Whittling, by Gustav Larsen; a capital text-book for wood-workers, copiously illustrated, 103 pp., 75 cents, Silver, Burdett & Co., New York and Chicago publishers.

The Lord's Prayer, illustrated by fine engravings and illuminated texts; with a poem by Edmund Clarence Stedman. 28 pp. and cover. Price 50 cents. American Tract Society, New York City, publishers.

The World Revival Songs and Hymns, a notable collection of 304 hymns, including many new pieces suitable for congregational, choir and class singing. Cloth covers, price 30 cents. W. Elmer Bailey, editor and publisher, Findlay, Ohio.

Misrepresentative Women, by Harry Graham. On the page preceding the table of contents is the drawing of a sign-board, bearing the words, "No admittance except on pleasure." The seventeen poems that follow are worthy of the introduction. There is a laugh in every line, sometimes two. At the same time the jester whose fertile brain conceived these jingles pricks the bubble of many little cults and "isms." Paper; pp. 120. Price $1. Fox, Duffield & Co., Publishers, New York.

The Land of Gold is a brochure in three parts by M. L. Griffin Menshaw. Under the headings, "Present Industrial Conditions," "Present Social Conditions" and "Present Political Conditions," the author makes a "plea for the toiler," in which he discusses this era of "brawn versus cunning." The W. G. Hewitt Press, New York. Pages 40-42. Price, 25 cents.

The Women of the Confederacy, by Rev. J. L. Underwood, is written by a man who served both as captain and chaplain in the Confederate Army of the Civil War. It is a contribution to our country's history, treated from a Southern point of view, and covers the author's personal experiences, in conjunction with material gathered from Confederate records in the libraries of Richmond, Va. It defines the relation of each State to the Federal Union, and demonstrates the constitutional right of secession. Mr. Underwood pays a well-deserved tribute to the patriotism and valor of the Southern women, and his anecdotes, both humorous and pathetic, are well told and well chosen. Northern readers are likely to best preserve their equanimity by omitting such chapters as refer to Sherman's "March to the Sea." Pp. 333. Price $2. The Neale Publishing Company, New York and Washington.

Miserere, a Musical Story. Mabel Wagnalls, the author, whose book, Stars of the Opera, attracted much favorable comment, has produced a thrilling story, the principal characters of which move in the world of art, music and the drama, always fascinating to the general reader. Cloth; pp. 80. Price 40 cents. Funk & Wagnalls Company, Publishers, New York.

Tolstoy on Shakespeare.—A critical essay on Shakespeare, by Leo Tolstoy; followed by an article entitled Shakespeare's Attitude to the Working Classes, by Ernest Crosby. This new conception of Shakespeare and his work by the great Russian novelist will interest a wide circle of readers. It is essentially a Philistine view of the great dramatist and his work. Pp. 109; cloth binding. Price 75 cents. Funk & Wagnalls, New York and London, publishers.

Seven of Ralph Waldo Emerson's lectures, under the title of Representative Men, are brought out by The Macmillan Company, New York and London, as yet another volume added to their Pocket American and English classic edition. The volume includes essays upon Plato, Shakespeare, Napoleon, Goethe, and Montaigne, and is prefaced by an admirable sketch of Emerson's life by P. M. Buck, Jr., M. A. Pp. 219. Price 25 cents.

The Making of an American School-Teacher, by Forest Cressy, was first published serially in the Saturday Evening Post, and is the life-story of Mr. E. G. Cooley, head of the Public School System of Chicago, and one of the foremost educators of America. Mr. Cooley has had a rare career, rich in suggestion, and a quality of helpfulness which speak for themselves. Pp. 75. C. M. Barnes Company, Chicago.

Memoirs, with Special Reference to Secession and the Civil War, by Hon. J.H. Reagan. This volume, which covers a wide range of national events, dating from anti-slavery days, is dedicated to the Daughters of the Confederacy. Judge Reagan's recollections deserve to take a place on library shelves alongside of other distinguished authors dealing with the period of the Civil War and reconstruction. Pp. 351. Cloth covers. Price $3.25. The Neale Publishing Company, New York and Washington.

So many books are written about the regular army by well-intentioned civilians, whose mistakes would be ludicrous if they were not pathetic, that it is refreshing to see a new story announced as written by General Charles King, U. S. A. In A Soldier's Trial, General King tells a well constructed story of army post life at the close of the Spanish-American war. It is but fair to say that General King does not approve of the abolition of the canteen, and he undertakes in his latest book "to show cause" for his side of the argument Pp. 333. Price 50 cents. The Hobart Company, New York.

Physical Education, by Dudley A. Sargent, a gymnasium director of Harvard University, is a book written with the clearly avowed purpose of placing the training of the body upon the same educational basis as the training of the intellect. The various chapters chronicle the earlier condition of the American people and point out the existing necessity for physical training, in which the author has evolved a comprehensive system. Publishers, Ginn & Company, 29 Beacon Street, Boston, Mass. Pp. 311, Price $1.50.

Rejoice Always, or Happiness is for You. By Frank S. Van Eps and Marion B. Van Eps, New York, 144 West 123d Street, $1.00. This a book for the times, its object being to teach any one how to keep from anxiety and worry, and to be happy, though not yet in ideal circumstances. It takes up Paul's words to the Philippians, "Be anxious about nothing," and from the teaching of Paul and that of Christ, on which Paul's rest shows how to live in peace. The book is written in such simple and clear language that any one can understand it, and so learn the way of life and peace.

Practical Zoology, by Alvin Davison, A.M., Ph.D., professor of biology in Lafayette College, is an elementary text-book treating of the structure, life history and relations of animals. The information is arranged in a logical order which furnishes effective mental discipline to the student, and much time and thought have been given to the preparation of the many photographs, which present multiplied forms and phases of animal life. Pp. 368. Price $1.00. The Jingle Primer, has been compiled by Clara L. Brown and Carolyn S. Bailey, upon the assumption that learning to read should follow as natural a method as that by which a child learns to talk. Certain rhymes and folk-lore stories have appealed by their alliteration to the children of generations, and these are incorporated in the book in a way to stimulate a child's interest and give him a vocabulary upon which to build. Pp. 128. Price 30 cents. The American Book Company, New York and Chicago.

PLAYING FOR KEEPS

BY WILLIAM J. ROE

"[F he were my boy," said Challoner, when the other man, Craig Ramsay, had finished his story, "I'd — well, ıdidly, I don't know what I'd do. Cer- nly, I can't imagine a boy of mine owing to be twelve years old, and doing hing like that."

"Ah, come off," Craig interrupted, htly. "You're forever croaking, Jack. harm came of it. It's easy enough for u, with only girls—dear little girls they —to manage; but a boy's quite dif- ent. Now I'm bringing up my boy, aig Junior, to be manly. If there's any aracter I hate, it's a milksop."

The story that caused such divergence opinion between the two friends, was efly this: Early that summer, Craig, ving business in Europe, had taken his with him on the two months' trip. If dness and indulgence alone had con- tuted a judicious parent, young Craig's her was all that was proper and pru- nt. After the business had been nsacted in London and Hamburg, two went on an excursion—all of asure — up the Rhine, to Frankfort, idelberg, and then to Baden-Baden. it happened, not an hour after their ival at the famous baths—and at that e even more famous gambling resort, . Ramsay found a telegram awaiting n at the hotel. Something had gone ray in the business at Hamburg, so im- rtant that he found it necessary to re- n immediately, in fact, that very same ght. Having been indulged in almost his caprices, Craig Junior was very ch dissatisfied at this turn in affairs. had learned that the kursaal af- ded an opportunity to gamble, better, believed, than marbles "for keeps," d was in no mood to be dragged away he had at least tasted of the excite- nt. At once he began to remonstrate; father had promised him the whole of nonth's outing. So at last it was ar- ged that way; Mr. Ramsay paid for room at the hotel ten days in advance, ught his son a through ticket to Ham- rg, and gave him a liberal allowance meals.

Craig Junior was in ecstacies, and that y night, before his father had been an ur on the railway speeding north, found way to the kursaal. Rouge-et-noir fin- ed what roulette began, and towards rning a very forlorn and dejected boy pt into bed, having "blown in" every nc, not only of his own allowance, but what had been given him for meals. aig slept soundly, and awakening at a e hour, found himself ravenously hun- y. He dressed himself, and was about go down stairs to breakfast in the Ile-a-manger, when he suddenly rea- ed that all his money was gone. He uld take the next train to Hamburg, ving his ticket; but this—as it would volve an "owning up" to the facts—he s decidedly unwilling to resort to. mething, however, must be done, for was getting more and more hungry ery minute. His next idea was to throw nself on the mercy of the landlord, and k for credit. This he also dismissed.

Finally the idea occurred to him to look rough his wallet; perhaps, after all, ere might be a trifle left over from the ght's disaster. Not a franc, nor thaler, t even a centime. Without any real pe, Craig went to his valise, unlocked and taking out a chamois-skin purse, lled back the fastening and opened it. ere was the railway ticket, but, it ap- ared, nothing more. He was slipping ck the ticket, when he chanced to feel nething hard; he felt, and there, tucked ay in the lower end, was a coin. With erish haste he pulled out a napoleon, a gold napoleon, that had been overlooked.

A gold napoleon, after all, had in it only twenty francs. Prudence in finance and young Craig Ramsay, Jr., had never been very intimate; now, however, the intimacy seemed forced upon him. He sat down at once and, half famished as he was, reckoned up his assets and planned how best to eke them out. It ended by his going out to a little bake-shop that he remembered having seen, and breakfasting on crullers and gingerbread.

This was not especially good fare, and was, moreover, rather humiliating; but what else remained to do? It was better to be frugal in the beginning than starve at the end. By due economy, he calculated, and a steady diet of the same fare, the napoleon would do, at any rate to keep him alive. This sort of thing went on the entire week, even longer. Savagely hungry as Craig was, on the evening of the ninth day, he found that his abstemious living had left him with exactly five francs. In his wanderings about town many times he had passed and repassed the kursaal. That evening he stood for some time on the street, gazing at the brilliantly lighted assembly rooms, wishing he could try again to test fortune. Mechanically he put his hand into a pocket; his grasp tightened upon that one five-franc piece. He started. "Why not?" he said to himself, "why not? If I win, all right; if I lose, well, I'll go hungry."

With that Craig went boldly in, found a seat at the roulette table, played his one coin, and—this time—won. One hour, two, three, he continued to win. When the closing hour came, and the croupier called out in his monotonous voice, "Le dernier partie, messieurs et mesdames (the last game, gentlemen and ladies), the game ending found Craig's single five-franc piece expanded into more than a thousand. He was gathering up his winnings—rouleaus of gold and notes—when a voice at his side said: "You young rascal, so this is what you're up to, is it?" There stood Craig's father. Although he had spoken sharply, and tried to put on an air of vexation, if not of virtue, Mr. Ramsay was rather vain than otherwise of his son's adventure.

This was the story in outline that caused John Challoner to speak as he did, really pained that his friend (for the two men had known each other from boyhood) should have taken a matter so very serious, not only lightly, but with evident satisfaction. "As I say," Mr. Ramsay continued, jauntily, "it proves that Craig is no milksop; he's got the sort of courage to take risks, and that's what I admire."

"There are risks enough in life," said Mr. Challoner, soberly, "that force themselves upon us; to deliberately invite them, is not only ill-advised but positively criminal."

"Criminal, bosh! What was there criminal in it? The boy won out, didn't he?"

"And a great pity it is that he did win; if he had lost, it might have been a lasting lesson. No, Craig, it was not the boy's criminality I meant; it was—yours."

About a month later, Mr. Challoner happened to stroll down near Wall and Broad Streets. It was midday in August, that terrible August of the year 1872—the time of the great panic. For many days storm signals had been flying from the financial journals, and the daily press had been filled with warnings of disaster. It was yet early in the day, not much after twelve; the street was apparently calm. In the neighborhood of the Stock Exchange he met his friend Craig Ramsay. "Aha! you old croaker," cried Ramsay, gleefully, "so you've come

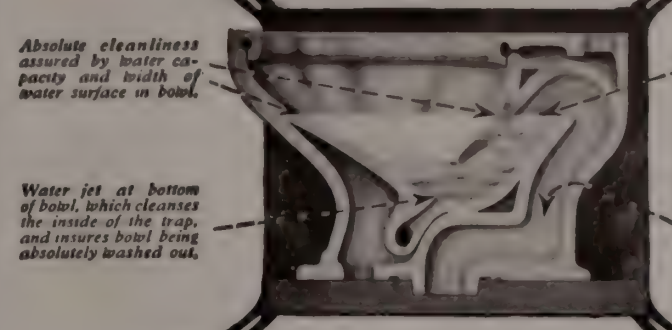
What to Demand in a Closet



Absolute cleanliness assured by water capacity and width of water surface in bowl.
Water seal of unusual depth, making escape of sewer gas impossible.
Water jet at bottom of bowl, which cleanses the inside of the trap, and insures bowl being absolutely washed out.
Vacuum chamber into which entire contents of bowl are drawn by syphonic action.

To know what a closet should be to be safe, study the sectional view showing the principle and action of the Sy-Clo Closet.

If your closet is not self-cleaning, odorless, positive in its action when flushed, replace it with the Sy-Clo,—"the closet of health".

The Sy-Clo Closet overcomes the offensive and dangerous faults of the common closet of the wash-out variety by its syphonic action. In addition to a copious flush of water from above, a powerful jet of water enters at the bottom of the bowl. This starts the flow of water over the retaining rim into the soil pipe, where a vacuum, or suction is formed, into which the entire contents of the bowl are drawn. If your closet merely empties without thoroughly washing the bowl, replace it with the

TRADE MARK

The Sy-Clo Closet as shown by the illustration of the sectional view, is formed in a single piece—fine hand-moulded china—without a crack or crevice where impurity can lodge. Unaffected by water, acid or wear. No enamel to chip or crack. If your closet is different in any respect, it is unsafe. Replace it with the Sy-Clo.

The name "Sy-Clo" on a closet guarantees that it is made under the direction and supervision of the Potteries Selling Company, of the best materials, and with the aid of the best engineering skill, and has the united endorsement of eighteen of the leading potteries of America.

FREE. Send us the name of your plumber, and we will send you a valuable booklet "Household Health". It will tell you how to be certain of the sanitation of your home, and may explain the cause of past illnesses you have never understood.

Lavatories of every size and design made of the same material as the Sy-Clo Closet.

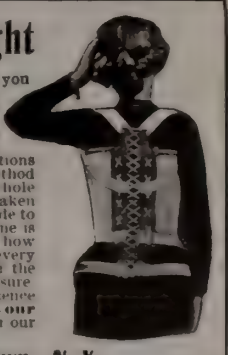
Crooked Spines Made Straight



If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble, you can be relieved in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who relieved himself of spinal curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. The scientific and medical world is amazed at the work being effected. Noted physicians in prominent medical institutions and in private practice are endorsing it. The Sheldon Method relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness is taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertebræ is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. The appliances are being sent all over the world. Each one is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We guarantee satisfaction, or refund your money at the end of thirty days' trial. Write for our new book giving full information and references.

PLAYING FOR KEEPS

down, have you, to gloat over the misfortunes of your fellow men? Well, you'll not gloat over any of mine—not you; I'm too keen to get nipped. No, seriously," he added, "I've cleared up in the last three days a cool fifty thousand and over."

"Of course," said Mr. Challoner, "I'm glad to hear of your good fortune, although, as you know, I thoroughly disapprove of stock speculating."

"Yes," returned Ramsay, laughing, "I know you're prejudiced; but if I had been, I wouldn't have cleaned up any fifty thousand."

"I'm glad, truly glad," said Challoner, "to know you've made so much. By 'cleaned up,' I suppose you mean cash in hand?"

"No, I can't say it's exactly that way. It was a clean profit in cash yesterday at the close of business; but,—well, there's one stock that is such a good purchase at present prices that I butted in—put all I made on a margin. I'll stand to make a cool $100,000 before the day's over. Oh, I know." Mr. Ramsay tossed his hand airily as he moved away. "You want to warn me; but it's a dead sure thing."

Two hours or so after this meeting, John Challoner's office door was flung open, and Craig Ramsay, flushed and out of breath, came hastily in. "Jack, old friend," he burst out, "I'm in a lot of trouble; that stock, you know, the stock I bought this morning; it's dropped eight points since ten o'clock. Now I'm called upon to put up more margin. Of course, the drop's only temporary; but, in the meantime, I've got to have $50,000 more; and I want you to let me have it."

"My dear Craig," said Mr. Challoner anxiously, "I haven't more than half that; apart, I mean, from my house."

"Then let me have $25,000; that'll do. My broker says it can't possibly fall more than a point or two further. You won't. Is that all your friendship amounts to?"

"Craig," said Mr. Challoner, "you ought to know me better. In any real difficulty—"

"Hang your real difficulty!" exclaimed Ramsay petulantly; "I don't want any preaching. Will you do it or won't you?"

"If you sold out now," said Challoner, "how would you stand?"

"Stand! Why, I'd be out the fifty thousand—that's where I'd stand."

"But that wouldn't leave you really a loser; as I understand, you made that much yesterday."

"What's that got to do with the case?"

"Only," replied Challoner, with much concern, but yet decidedly, "that while, as you must know, I would go very far to help you, the money that I might now lend would go, not to relieve you of your trouble, but to more speculation—to a further gamble."

"Gamble!" Ramsay broke in hotly. "This isn't any gamble, I tell you; the 'Ohio and Georgia' is good as gold. Well, never mind," Ramsay rose scowling; "you won't do it, eh?"

"My advice is," said Challoner, "to sell out at once. It is impossible to say what the intrinsic value of any stock may be in times like these. Sell out. If you gain nothing, at least you will have lost nothing."

But Ramsay would listen to no more. From long experience he knew well that argument, persuasion, reproaches, nothing would swerve John Challoner from what he believed to be right. He got up, and without a word of courtesy or leave taking, stalked away.

Before three that day there was great excitement in the street—men hurrying madly here and there, all along Broadway, where Mr. Challoner's office was, down Wall and Pine Streets, while from a dozen newsboy throats the cries rang out: "Great excitement on Wall Street! Terrible panic! Ohio and Georgia stock falls forty per cent. Thousands ruined!"

It was after four, just as Mr. Challoner was preparing to leave the office, when Craig Ramsay again came in. The change in his face and manner was most marked. It hardly required his quick, frank, impulsive: "Thank God, Jack, you're here; I couldn't have slept soundly to-night, if it hadn't been for you," to tell that at least there had been no calamity.

"Sit down, Craig, and tell me all about it," said Challoner, cordially, taking both the hands held out to him. "I think I can guess," he added smiling, "that you concluded, after all, to sell."

"You can hardly call it a conclusion," Craig replied ruefully; "there's no credit due me. I own up to being mad all through when you wouldn't put up for any more gamble. I hustled around to everyone I could think of; but it was no use—no one had a cent to spare, or claimed they hadn't. So—well, I told my broker to sell. He sold my stock—it was a cash sale—and it just about evened up my account. Not ten minutes after the stock dropped like lead — as the extras said, forty per cent. It was touch and go; but, old man, you saved me, and I couldn't rest without telling you."

"I suppose," said Challoner, "it would have hit you pretty hard if you'd held on."

"Hit me pretty hard," Craig responded grimly; "it would have ruined me; not only taken all I own, but left me in debt worse than I care to consider. I know one thing," Ramsay continued, after a thoughtful pause, "now that I've had this experience, it'll be the very last time I ever venture anything on the street. It was too close a shave to be pleasant."

"Yes," said Challoner. "I should say that such an experience would be likely to be effectual. But how —"

"Don't say another word," said Ramsay, impulsively; "as for my boy, after this if that young scamp gambles, or even so much as plays marbles for keeps — I'll —I'll thrash him well."

"Oh, no," responded John Challoner quickly, "severity will do more harm than good. Your boy is no milksop; just an honest, plucky young fellow, with good grit and energy. You know I told you once he was not so much to blame."

"Well, then, what shall I do to cure him?"

"Tell him what happened to-day," said Challoner; "that will be a thousand times better than any beating."

NAUGHTY "SCHOOLMA'AMS"

Not Always Fair to Themselves.

"I taught school for a number of years," writes a Vancouver lady, "and like many other brain workers forgot how necessary the right kind of food is, and therefore suffered greatly from indigestion.

"My system became run down, my blood impoverished, and I had to take a year's holiday in the hope of regaining my strength.

"I saw Grape-Nuts food highly spoken of, tried the food and became very fond of it. After eating it with cream, only for breakfast, I gained quickly in strength and energy, and went back to work.

"When I married I soon convinced my husband that it was his heavy breakfasts of meat, potatoes, hot biscuit and white bread, that caused his feelings of languor in the mornings.

"Since eating Grape-Nuts and fruit, he has become hearty and well.

"It is now many years since we began to use Grape-Nuts and the food seems as 'necessary in our household as salt.' A favorite dessert, is alternate layers of sliced apples, sugar, nutmeg and Grape-Nuts, cooked in the oven until the apples are done." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. The Image of God*

EVERY man is conscious that his outward and material form is not himself. He speaks of his hands, his et, his face, and even his brain, as of ings belonging to him. The ego, the an himself, is not those, nor a combination of them. When certain vital organs e injured or destroyed, existence on this rth becomes impossible, but he has an tuition which neither science nor philosphy can shake, that he may live under other nditions. There is a mysterious entity thin, which uses the body as its instrument, but is superior to the instrument d may be yet independent of it. We nnot conceive of spirit without its fleshly vering, but there are plenty of hints in ture, that unclothed spirit is a possibil-. A man's love for his mother, is not e of the face and form. They are dear association; but if they were disfigd, his mother would survive and the ve of her would not change. The aged fe has seen her husband's form, once ect, bend under the burden of years; she s seen the black hair become white, and e sparkling eyes lose all their lustre. No ranger would recognize in the old man e stalwart and alert form of forty years o; but the wife will tell you that he is e same man who stood with her at the rriage altar in his early manhood. It is e man, who has survived, that she loves. ne body is not the man, any more than e clothes that he wears, are the man.

It is in this fact that the kinship to God nsists. In spirit, not in material form, we bear the image of God. God is a irit, and it is in our spiritual characteristics that we are his sons and that we may come like him. But so close is the relation between the body and the spirit, at the one may be injured through the her. The sins of the body, the fleshly sts, dwarf and corrupt the spirit and nder its development. It is true, as olomon said, that he who sins wrongs his vn soul. Not only does sin deprive the irit's instrument of its powers, but the irit itself partakes of the degradation, its ings are clipped and its growth curtailed. he body, for example, that indulges in toxicating drinks to excess, drags the ul that inhabits it into shame and degration.

The First and Second Adam

By Mrs. M. Baxter

THE coming of our Lord is near. It is good to be taken back to our origin, and reminded how and for hat we were created. And it is good to emember how all creation was made out nothing. "Things which were seen ere not made of things which do appear" (Heb. 11: 3). "In the beginning od created" is all we can ever know bout it. And even so in his wondrous ork on those whom he is conforming to he image of his Son, our God must first educe us to nothingness that he may reate us "anew in Christ Jesus unto good orks." "The new man which after God created in righteousness and true holiess" (Eph. 2: 10; 3: 24). Created, ot developed; created, not improved! re we willing to be reduced to nothing hat we may be created anew? Are we illing to be conscious of our impotence, f our uselessness in ourselves, of our tter failure to have dominion by any ower or gift of ours by nature? Are e willing for others to see in us the fall f the first Adam, to be in our own person a witness that all flesh is as grass, and ll the goodliness thereof as the flower of rass (Isa. 40: 6)? Are we willing that shall be seen in us that the grass withreth, the flower fadeth, but the Word of ur God (by which the heavens were ade, Ps. 33: 6), ("by which we are begotten again," "liveth and abideth for ver" (Isa. 40: 6-8; I. Peter. 1: 23-25)? we have learned to love our God, it ill not be hard; love can always trust.

"So God created man in his own image, in the image of God created he him; male and female created he them; and God blessed them, and said unto them, Be fruitful, and multiply, and replenish the earth, and subdue it, and have dominion" (Gen. 1: 27, 28). In all God's creation there was to be the power of reproduction, life was to bring forth life, the herb was to yield seed, the fruit tree to bring forth fruit, whose seed was in itself for further fruitfulness. And so with man. To the first Adam, he said, "Be fruitful and multiply;" of the last Adam, "He shall see his seed" (Isa. 53: 10). Life always seeks for room to reproduce itself; it is the instinct of spiritual life to reproduce itself, to seek life for other souls; when this instinct is wanting, the true life is wanting. God willed that the world should be filled with life; he wills, too, that his kingdom shall be filled with living souls, made alive unto God, through faith in Jesus Christ.

And God made all things minister to the life of the first Adam. "Behold," he said, "I have given you every herb bearing seed, which is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree in the which is the fruit of a tree yielding seed; to you it shall be for meat" (Gen. 1: 20). Fearlessly, before the fall, might Adam and Eve take of the fruit of every tree in the garden; poisonous herbs were unknown then, the only restriction was the one tree which was forbidden. How is it now? To the eye which sees only by sight, it would seem as though almost all things were against the true child of God. This present evil world, the spirit of the age, is like a deadly malaria, which the child of God must needs breathe in because there is no other air to breathe.

It might seem that the influences around him were so deadly that his spiritual life could not survive them; instead of all being given for meat to sustain him, it would seem as though all tended to destroy his life. But to the eye of faith which sees all according to the Word of God, how different everything looks! As fully as God gave every green herb to Adam, just as fully the Lord says through the Apostle Paul, to his people now: "All things are for your sakes."

Shave a Bar of Soap, Dissolve in Hot Water

STRIKE those words from all recipes for household cleansing, for they call for waste work and useless bother.

Soap, you know, is not a bit of cleansing good until it's in solution (mixed with water), and made into suds. And then it's still of no use without the rub-rub-rub of human muscle.

Now, Gold Dust works in an entirely different way—instantly and totally dissolves in hot or cold, hard or soft water—and, without any aid from you, starts to cleanse.

is more than soap—better and more economical than any mere soap. It is a powder of power—but rightly directed power, that leaves the wash white, sweet and wholesome. With Gold Dust you can and should discard soap from wash tub, dish pan, sink and scrubbing kit.

No soap, borax, soda, ammonia, naphtha, kerosene or other foreign ingredient needed with GOLD DUST

For washing clothes and dishes, scrubbing floors, cleaning woodwork, oil cloth, silverware and tinware, polishing brasswork, cleaning bath room pipes, refrigerators, etc., softening hard water and making the finest soft soap.

I Am the Paint Man

2 Full Gallons Free to Try—6 Months Time to Pay

I Guarantee Freight Charges.

O. K. Chase
St. Louis, Mo.

I AM the paint man. I have a new way of manufacturing and selling paints. It's unique—it's better. It revolutionized the paint business of this country last year.

Before my plan was invented paint was sold in two ways — either ready-mixed or the ingredients were bought and mixed by the painter. Ready-mixed paint settles on the shelves, forming a sediment at the bottom of the can. The chemical action in ready-mixed paint, when standing in oil, eats the life out of the oil. The oil is the very life of all paints.

Paint made by the painter cannot be properly made on account of lack of the heavy mixing machine.

My paint is unlike any other paint in the world. It is ready to use, but not ready-mixed.

My paint is made to order after each order is received, packed in hermetically sealed cans with the very day it is made stamped on each can by my factory inspector.

I ship my thick pigment, which is double strength, freshly ground, in separate cans, and in another can, I ship the pure, old process Linseed Oil—the kind you used to buy years ago. Any child can stir them together.

I sell my paint direct from my factory to user you pay no dealer or middleman profits.

My $100.00 Cash Guarantee

I guarantee, under $100 Cash Forfeit, that the paint I am offering you does not contain water, benzine, whiting, or barytes—and that my Oilo is pure, old-fashioned linseed oil and contains absolutely no foreign substance whatever.

I guarantee the freight on six gallons or over.

My paint is so good that I make this wonderfully fair test offer:

When you receive your shipment of paint, you can use two full gallons—that will cover 600 square feet of wall—two coats.

If, after you have used that much of my paint, you are not perfectly satisfied with it in every detail, you can return the remainder of your order and the two gallons will not cost you one penny.

No other paint manufacturer ever made such a liberal offer.

It is because I manufacture the finest paint, put up in the best way, that I can make this offer.

I go even further. I sell all of my paint on six months' time, if desired.

This gives you an opportunity to paint your buildings when they need it, and pay for the paint at your convenience.

Back of my paint stands my Eight-Year officially signed, iron-clad Guarantee.

For further particulars regarding my plan of selling, and complete color card of all colors, send a postal to O. L. Chase, St. Louis, Mo. I will send my paint book—the most complete book of its kind ever published—absolutely free. Also my instruction book entitled "This Little Book Tells How to Paint" and copy of my 8-year guarantee.

O. L. CHASE, The Paint Man.
Dept. 8 St. Louis, Mo.

NEW YEAR'S CALLS

A New York Doctor's daughter sets good example

The old-time custom of making New Year's calls was delightful, until some of the boys got more "egg-nog" or "apple-jack" than they could successfully carry.

But the custom of serving refreshments to one's friends at any time is a good one, and it's well to start the New Year with well-made Postum instead of coffee or alcohol.

A New York doctor of experience writes: "I not only recommend Postum to my patients, but my daughter serves it to our Christmas and New Year's callers."

Get the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in packages.

It's easy to "swear off" if you take on Postum at the very beginning.

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but as evidence of genuineness and good faith. Where an answer by mail is desired, ten cents in postage stamps must be forwarded by the writers, with full address.

G. L., Arlington, S. D. I have seen the name of Josephus referred to in your answers to questions. Who was he, and can his books be bought in this country?

Flavius Josephus was the celebrated Jewish historian, who is generally regarded as one of the most authoritative writers of his time. He was born A.D. 37. You can procure his works through any good publishing house.

J. M., Plainfield, N. J. How old is Clemenceau, the present French Premier, and what has he accomplished in public affairs?

He is sixty-five years of age. In thirty years he has been a prominent figure in national affairs, and has made and unmade many ministries. He was responsible for the downfall of President Jules Grevy, and for the election of Carnot, and also that of Loubet. He exposed and drove Gen. Boulanger out of power, when he discovered that that ambitious military leader was plotting against the Republic. He has been by turns doctor, lawyer, soldier, politician, author, teacher, duelist, journalist. He is a unique type of the French statesman of the Radical Republican school. He stood on the side of right and justice in the Dreyfus case. Though often violently assailed in the Chamber, his character has always stood the test successfully.

Wm. R. Evans, Lima, O., sent this note:

I saw a question asked as to who composed the little prayer, "Now I lay me down to sleep." I think that there ought to be a little prayer for the children to say in the morning, when they get up, and I have composed these lines:

"At the beginning of this day
Guide and help me, Lord, I pray,
Lead me through from morn 'till night,
And help me always to do right."

Doubtful, Chicago, Ill. I am told by a reliable person that over seventeen million dollars was spent in this country and in Europe by foreign missionary societies. It seems an enormous sum for a mighty poor return. Could not the money have been spent to better purpose?

It depends on the way you estimate the value of souls. Our Lord appeared to think that nothing in all the universe could approach their worth. The foreign missionary societies take the same view, and the records show that the expenditure is leading to results. There are now in the heathen world, as the result of the labors of the societies in this country and in Europe, baptized Christians to the number of 1,339,908, of whom those added last year were 133,069. The money you speak of appears to have been carefully expended. It paid last year not only the expenses of printing and other things unavoidable, the cost of maintaining 12,789 missionaries, of whom 6,039 were women.

J. R. D., Morgan, Mich. 1. What authority have we for keeping December 25 as Christ's birthday? 2. Have we any authority for keeping any other day?

1. "That the observance of Christmas on Dec. 25 is not of divine appointment, nor of New Testament origin," is the opinion of the leading commentators. The exact date of Christ's birth is uncertain. During the first two centuries there was no special observance of the Nativity. When the Roman Empire became Christian, the ancient festivals were transformed into Christian holidays and Christmas superseded the Saturnalia. 2. There is no direct Scriptural authority for that date. Prof. Andrews, one of our ablest chronological authorities, has made a careful study of all the evidence, and expresses the opinion that no date is so probable as that of December 25. It has in its favor a long observance. Chrysostom, who wrote in 386, says that it was the date observed in his day. He adds that the evidence for it was found among the archives in Rome, relating to the taxing. This evidence was so convincing, that some churches which had been observing another day, immediately fell into line. Chrysostom, however, does not tell us what the evidence was. Prof. Andrews has also an elaborate argument based on the birth of John the Baptist, who was six months older than Jesus. John's father belonged to the course of Abia, as Luke tells us. That course was on duty in the Temple in the month of October. Calculating from that date brings us to late in the month of December for the birth of our Lord.

The New Christian Church at Ahmednagar, India

Dr. R. A. Hume, the well-known missionary in Ahmednagar, India, writes as follows:

"I am sending you a photograph of the new church in Ahmednagar. In building this church an aspiration of thirty years has been achieved, which was to secure for the large Christian community, a noble, dignified place of worship, which should inspire the Christian community with a reverential spirit, and a desire and hope for Christian service, and which should, at the same time attract non-Christians. One of my main principles is to do what I can to lead natives of India to accept the Lord Jesus Christ as their spiritual Master and Saviour, and then to trust the Holy Spirit to help India Christians to develop the spirit of Christ in worship and creed and architecture, and in every thing according to Indian ideas. For this reason the architecture of this church has been made as Oriental as possible. A noble dome, and a flat roof for most of the building, are its characteristic external features. Its internal features are as characteristically Indian as are consistent with the requirements of a church for Christian worship. It is beautiful, airy, and excellent in acoustics. On the day of dedication, about 1,400 Christians and 100 non-Christians packed it full. It can comfortably seat 1,200 in its main auditorium, and there are four other rooms of smaller size for various other services. Not one cent of money from the American Board was expended for this noble building. Some gifts for it came from CHRISTIAN HERALD patrons of famine children, who were glad to help to supply a place of worship for their proteges, as well as to help to feed, clothe and train them. If these patrons see this picture in your paper, I trust they will feel glad that they had a part in supplying such a Christian church edifice for India. Part of the money was given by Indian Christians; by two former Governors of the Bombay Presidency; by a prominent Member of Parliament; by non-Christian Hindus, and by a large number of American friends representing the Congregational, Presbyterian, Episcopal, Roman Catholic, Methodist, Baptist, Unitarian, and Hebrew denominations. The Indian Christians and missionaries of Ahmednagar, express to all friends that grateful appreciation of aid in securing this much-needed and noble place of worship."

R. B. G., Abingdon, Va. Did both the thieves on the cross revile Jesus, as Matthew and Mark say, or did one of them plead with Jesus for mercy, as Luke says?

Probably both malefactors reviled him at the beginning, but as the time passed, one of them, moved by the patience of Jesus, the earthquake and the darkness, and impressed as the centurion was by the spectacle, and recollecting the innocence of Jesus, repented as death approached, and besought pardon. Neither Matthew nor Mark says that it was not so, they simply omitted to report the event, if indeed they knew of it. There are many things in each Gospel that the other three pass over in silence. Each reports the events that impressed him. Though Luke was not an Apostle, he was a much better and fuller historian than Matthew or Mark, being better educated, and he tells us many things that they failed to relate.

For the information of those who are interested in the Bethesda Leper Home, we are asked to make this announcement:

In regard to the bandages that are now sent by many friends of the work to the forwarding office, Nos. 1 and 3 Ann Street, New York, a good many people in distant States send small packages of old linen, for which they pay from 25 to 50 cents or more expressage. It sometimes happens that these packages, for practical purposes, are not worth the expressage. For that reason, and in order to derive the most benefit from the generosity of the senders, it is suggested that instead of the linen they send money, by postal order or otherwise. In this way the Bethesda Leper Home will be enabled to buy antiseptics and other medicines necessary for the treatment of the lepers.

S. S., Moline, Ill., 1. Why is Christ spoken of in the Bible as the "Son of Man?" 2. Was that portion of the Jewish Talmud, which contains references to Jesus Christ, written during the first century?

1. The title has special reference to the human side of his nature and his humble condition—"in all things as we are." It was the title under which Jesus, with few exceptions, generally spoke of himself, thus asserting his humanity along with his divinity. 2. It may have been written a contemporary history, but this cannot be stated authoritatively.

L. R. E., Archdale, N. C. Do you know what became of Pilate after his condemnation of Jesus?

He was denounced to Vitellius the legate of Syria, for his cruelty in suppressing a harmless religious movement in Samaria, and Vitellius ordered him to go to Rome and answer to the Emperor Tiberius for that and other complaints against him. While he was on his way to Rome, Tiberius died, and history has nothing more to say about Pilate. Tradition, however, has been busy on the subject. Eusebius states, on the authority of some historian whom he does not name, that he committed suicide. Another authority enlarges on the tradition to the effect that his body was thrown into the Tiber, but the effect on the river was so disturbing that it was taken up and cast into the lake near Lucerne, where, legend says, it would rise at certain intervals and go through the motion of washing its hands. Another tradition is that both he and his wife became Christians, and he died a martyr's death.

Rev. S. E. Quimby, Derry, N. H. writes:

In your editorial on page 1036, you say: "Suppers, fairs, concerts, and the like have served their turn and have been discarded, in the majority of instances, as being out of place, and tending to spiritual depletion." The "spiritual depletion" is certainly true, but do you think the majority of churches have discarded them? It is a fact, that in this section of the country there are very few churches that are not in the supper and entertainment business, e. g. to-night a local church presents The Frogs of Windham. Last night a church near here presented a drama and served a supper, another, a little farther away, serving a chicken pie supper and held a Christmas sale; two others are holding fairs this week; others hold suppers and entertainments regularly each month throughout the season.

Judging from our correspondent's showing, it certainly would seem that the "supper-fair-concert system" has not disappeared from among the New England churches.

J. L., Rochester, N. Y. If you will read the Declaration of Independence, especially the first and last paragraphs, you will see that the founders publicly expressed their reliance upon God in all their undertakings. The declaration of principles was the proper place for such an expression.

As Good as a Tour Abroad

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I have received your premium, the "Greatest Wonders of the World," and am pleased with it. The authors of the various chapters are writers whose names are familiar to every well-informed reader of books. Their names are a guarantee that the wonders they describe have been well considered. To the intelligent young people it is a volume in which they may see and know of the wonders of the world without long journeyings.

THE CROWDS OF A GREAT CITY

WE have all heard the story of the man on his first visit to New York City, who, when he first stepped from a side street into the world's isiest thoroughfare, Broadway, said to his guide, Let's step up in this doorway until the crowd goes ," under the impression that a great parade had lled so many people together in one part of the etropolis. If his guide had taken his suggestion they ould yet be standing in the doorway, for the crowd ever "gets by" on Broadway. From daylight until ng after the lights have een twinkling like innumerble stars, from the great ffice buildings that rise bove the street on either and, the tide of humanity weeps back and forth from he "Battery," where New ork began, to Columbus ircle at the western enance to Central Park.

Nothing will give a visitor ich a sense of his comparave non-importance as to ep down from the door-way nd join the procession on its ay uptown. He is at once st in the crowd—more conealed from friend or foe han he would be if he were andering about the Sahara n the hump of a camel. No ne pays the least attention o him, unless some one, in n effort to get out of the line f march to enter a store, eftly turns him out of the ay with an elbow. One ecomes so used to the sea f faces after a short resience in the city that no noce is paid to temporary eighbors, and friends and elatives pass without seeing ne another, their thoughts intent only on not walking n the person in front or preventing the one behind rom walking on them.

The financial centre of the country is always referred o as Wall Street, but Broad Street, that runs south rom the Sub-Treasury on Wall Street, has the Stock Exchange for its most important building, and he offices of bankers and brokers are numbered y the hundreds. In the centre of Broad Street is New York's "curb" market, where hundreds of men do a brokerage business in the roadway, and transactions occur involving thousands of dollars. Buyers and sellers are so intermingled that the newcomer among the "bulls" and "bears" cannot distinguish one from the other. For awhile there will be but a stifled hum, but soon a report is circulated affecting the value of certain stocks "listed" on the curb. Instantly all is confusion. Messenger boys are bolting through the crowd. Brokers, a dozen at once, are shouting quotations at the top of their lungs. Those whose offices are within sight of this seething hubbub, hold up slates at arm's length, marked with figures, so that their firms, stories above, can see what prices are prevailing on the curb. The excitement waxes fiercer, and the police make frantic efforts to keep a clear passage for pedestrians who have got "caught in a rise of stocks."

New York Street Venders at Holiday Time

A group of future citizens, just arrived from Russia by way of Ellis Island, who have started up Broad Street on their way to the East Side, get part way into the struggling mass. Suddenly the horrible thought strikes them that they have only escaped from one massacre at Kishineff to be involved in another in the New World. Pale with terror, their great bundles bobbing on their backs, they clatter down a side street, unconscious that the Wall Street bear is of a different variety from his Russian namesake, and not seeking to devour such as they, although their woolly coats give them a more lamblike aspect than some of those who are being shorn financially in their desire to become suddenly rich.

About noon the push-cart men appear, and all hands turn from business to purchase cups of steaming coffee, doughnuts, and the great pieces of pie that seem to be popular with the younger offshoots of the brokers' offices. Surprising as it may seem, it takes these same brokers but a moment to turn their thoughts from the business in hand, to watch a contest between two pugnacious office boys, or a truck stalled in the street. In three minutes the street will be filled with spectators for blocks, while the window sills for six stories will be lined with heads, like flowerpots of an Italian tenement. One out of a hundred cannot see what is going on, but they stare because the rest do.

Going up on the East Side the visitor will see a different kind of a street market. The people are all of foreign birth. The women do not wear hats, the only headgear being shawls or gaudy kerchiefs. He hears every language but his own. The only signs in English are the street signs. The streets are always crowded, and the visitor will have to dodge women who are bearing bundles of firewood on their heads, and at the same time keep from crushing the babies that seem to be growing out of the greasy sidewalk. Long carts are drawn up to the curb. On them are clothing, provisions and cheap

The Anger of the Lord

TEXT: LUKE 13:33

"It cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jesusalem"

HOW ought we to think of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ? Ought we to think of him as God—very God of very God, and take care that we neither confound the substance nor divide the essence? Ought we to think of him as a lonely deity, seated upon a solitary throne in the awful splendor far away? Or, had we better think of him, as he loved to think of himself, as the Son of Man? Had we better think of him as brother man, remembering that he wore our human nature; that the incarnation of the Son of God was incarnation in human flesh and in human nature? The cold chilled him and heat warmed him; he knew hunger and thirst, and man's cares and man's responsibilities; led a man's life. Shall we think of him in that way, and then dare to make our own the wonderful words of the writer of the Letter to the Hebrews—blessing God because we have not a high priest who cannot be touched by the feeling of our infirmities, but one who has been in all points tempted like as we are? Shall we think of him as the Son of Man—brother man to us all?

Christ's Indignation

Let us think of him in that way for a little while at least, and, if we err, we shall be forgiven. If we think of him as our Brother Man, as the Son of God who loves us, we shall be forgiven if we err, because we lean too closely our human hearts on his. In this story, from which I have just quoted a few words as a text, you see our Lord in the most human hour of his life. That is my subject to-day—the most human hour of the Son of God. You see him subject to those emotions to which we are subject. You see the great waves of emotion that break upon our soul breaking upon his. You see him subject to the emotions of anger, indignation, scorn, disappointment, bitterness, sorrow and bafflement, and you see them all merged and blending into infinite pathos and an infinite yearning and an infinite love.

I want you to consider this phase of our Lord's mood in this most human hour of his, when he knows anger, when he knows contempt, when he knows bitterness of soul, and think of this merged and blended into an infinite love. We have not always considered that there was a certain awfulness in his love—that love has implications of terror as well as of splendor—that there was something very terrible in our Lord's passion and indignation. The simple truth is, brethren, that I did not dare to read to you the earlier part of the story. You can read it, if you will, in the twenty-third chapter of Matthew. If you choose to turn to the full report of what our Lord said in this terrible hour when his soul was swept upon by the swelling seas of indignation, I challenge you to find in the literature of the world anything more terrible than our Lord's utterance: "A generation of vipers," "The offspring of hell," "Whited sepulchres"—you remember the language, the language of scathing indignation; of tremendous anger, the denunciation piled on denunciation.

Love Involves Hate

Have you forgotten that one of the New Testament writers dares to speak of "the wrath of the Lamb"? Why, you say, as soon as you begin to think about it, "it is altogether a mixture of ideas!" The wrath of the Lamb! Why, of all things on this earth, the most innocent, inoffensive is a lamb; and the wrath of the Lamb, as applied to Jesus, seems to us wild and extreme. When John the Baptist looked upon him, he said: "Behold the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." And still the New Testament speaks of "The wrath of the Lamb."

Yes, you say, but it is love we want, not hate. It is more love for which we have to plead and pray, not more hate. And I tell you, brethren, that hating is the other side of loving; that hatred is the other half of loving, and that you cannot love well unless you hate well, and that your love is namby-pamby hypocrisy and emptiness, unless along with your love goes a great and terrible hate. I know why you don't hate well enough. The very atmosphere you breathe is stifling because you hate nothing. You apologize in namby-pamby fashion—you apologize for the very devil. I know why you do not hate well enough. Your mighty hater is always a heroic lover. Whom did Jesus call the Son of Thunder? John, the Apostle of Love. I know why you do not hate as you ought to hate. Because you do not love as you ought to love. If your heart has ever been wrung with the awful agony of pity for the man trodden out of the semblance of humanity, if your soul has ever melted within you with the passion of pity and pathos, when you have seen manhood degraded and womanhood debauched and childhood befouled and bedevilled out of all semblance to humanity—had you ever suffered under such a love you would have hated with a fury of ungovernable hatred the drink that has done this devilish thing, and you would pray to God for an ever-deepening capacity of hatred of that which can so foul and besmirch the Maker's image. And you would count that day badly spent in which you had not shown yourself the relentless hater and relentless foe of the blood-stained traffic in strong drink.

Yes; hatred is the other half of loving, and you cannot love that victim there—that woman un-womaned, that man un-manned, and that child born with the strength of hereditary passions, with a weak will, and, as the old theologians used to say in the dark ages, "Not so much born into the world as damned into the world"—you cannot love man, woman or child, and pity with that awful pity without hating with all the strength of your love the infernal custom and traffic which has wrecked and ruined humanity. Ought we not to hate if we love? Ought we not to hate? Is there no room for this indignation of ours?

The Enemy of the Nations

What is our charge against the evil thing? We declare that drink wastes our wealth and cripples our trade and sullies our reputation; that it degrades our manhood; that it debauches the sex of our mothers; that it has polluted the life-blood of the community. We declare that it meets and thwarts and arrests and fetters the earliest, happiest, holiest efforts of the Christian Church, and in calm deliberateness, not of platform rhetoric, but of sober estimation of facts, we say that the liquor traffic damns ten souls for every one that all the churches save. Ought we not to hate? Is there no reason for this indignation of ours? We are citizens of a mighty empire. Yes, and there is nothing menacing our place amongst the nations of the world to-day as drink is doing. We say of the past century that it was a century of wealth. Wealth in abundance God has given to us. We recognize in riches God's good gift to his people. We are not ashamed of the wealth that God has given to us. There is nothing the matter with riches, it is only the way they are distributed that is the trouble.

The nineteenth century brought us abounding wealth. The prairies of the great Northwest have borne for us their harvests of golden grain. Ancient rivers have run dry that in the river beds men might pick up virgin gold. Mountains have been split by volcanic agency that there we may garner solid silver. From the very bosom of mother earth has gushed out liquid wealth beyond the dreams of avarice. And to-day we have to ask whether all this material wealth is not going to mean for us a moral degeneration; whether with our wealth we are not going to purchase more wickedness; whether the middle class and working class are not going to imitate the characteristic vices of an effete aristocracy; and whether that aristocracy is not imitating the characteristic vices of the Renaissance; whether we are not going to turn our wealth into immorality and into debauchery, our literature into lust and our liberty into license!

A Check Needed

In the old days when the kings were in power, there were still the barons and the lords, and they kept the king in check. Later, when the barons were in power, there were the middle classes to keep them in check; when the middle classes got the power, there was the modifying influence of the democracy, and the workingmen kept them in check. But now power is in the hands of the working classes, power is in the hands of the people, and who is going to keep th check? What power is going to save us fro from destruction, if the people themselves are c and befouled? If they have delivered then with a new power in their hands, to do the bidd the publicans, the brewers, and the distillers? W Christian people, and we know that nothing o earth stands in the way of the progress of the C of God, the triumph of the kingdom of heaven- not all the forces of evil, not all the obstacles com and multiplied together stand in our way as does. It is drink that is the one difficulty.

Great and Good Victims

Oh, you say, if you got drink out of the way would still be difficulties and temptations and There would. And we could deal with them. would be problems to solve, there would be ques to answer, there would be temptations to meet, would be evil conditions to remedy. But there w be nothing we could not do, and do easily, if were out of the way. I am not going to sugge you that you Christian people in the pews are any v than us people in the pulpits. I don't know that are. I would not suppose so. The priest and prophet have erred and staggered from strong d Whiskey and wine have brought the preacher dow well as the steward, the Sunday School teacher deacon, and the elder. Ought we not to hate if t things are true?

Do you suppose your city is free? Do you t there are no pulpits undermined by drink? Do suppose no priest and no prophet of God fails h What about your office-bearers and members of churches? If drink can do these things to a ma God, if drink is doing this—pulling down the strong degrading the intellect, degrading the very soul, destroying the holiest—if drink is doing this, ought not to hate, and to hate with a terrible hatred, which stands in the way of the Church of Christ? yet, think. We have not done with the ethics of nunciation. What is the value of our hatred? Wha the place of it? What good is hatred going to do? say you never saved a man by hating him! You n did. You never save anybody except by loving h But there is the object of it all the same.

Our Lord's Scorn

Now you take another phase of our Lord's m human hour. You see the scorn he can put into wo Scorn! you say? I never knew there was anything contempt in our Saviour's soul. So far as I kn there is only that single illustration of it. It is the o contemptuous word that I can find in the New Tes ment, that Jesus ever spoke. He said: "Go and t that fox!" That is the way he speaks of a man, o human being. He spoke of him in that contemptu way. He said: "Go and tell that fox!" And who w the man? Herod! Poor pinchbeck king, soaked cruelty and blood. In the portrait gallery of the wo it would be difficult to find a figure fouler, more loat some, than this man Herod. And Jesus said: "Go a tell that fox!"

But have we the right to scorn? Have we the rig to feel contempt? Have we the right to despise a human being? Brethren, I am sure that this conten of Jesus was not unmixed with pity. I am sure the was pity in his heart as well as contempt. And if y ask me how I know, I answer with Pascal, that "t heart has its reasons." I know, because I examine i to my own heart, and I know that there is no m whom I despise so much and hate so much but that am sorry for him, too. I am sorry for him, with a re pity; and if that is so of a man of such passions a such weakness and such temptations and sins, is it n so of our blessed Lord, that with contempt there w pity, too? But, mind you, it was not pity that wou have done Herod any good. There are times for th expression of your pity; yes, but there are times f the expression of your scorn. There are times whe it is not pity that will save this man, but you need fir to sting him. You need first to sting and to lacerat him with your condemnation. Not a poor man, thoug he was a king—this Herod, in his palace—that our ord scorns.

There is no word like this about the poor people. ut when Jesus saw the multitude he had compassion on them, and the Son of Man never looked upon a owd without having compassion on the people. Keep our scorn for the rich man who triumphs by iniquity; eep your contempt for the great ones of the earth, ho have climbed to their position over the bodies and uls of the men and women whom they have ruined. et these fellows know they cannot buy us, they cannot uy our applause, and they cannot buy our respect.

Vice at its Worst

Vice is a thing everywhere to be fought, crime is a ing everywhere to punish; but I declare to you solnnly, that the encouragement of vice for the sake of ld is the blackest crime in the registry of hell. Let ese men know that they may purchase an island, or a unty, and expatriate thousands of people, and make eir deer forests, and build their castles by the shining a, and then we scorn them. From the little heights our clean manhood we despise them and their kind. is good that they should know that the man who is or, obscure, unknown, lives cleanly, and does justice, ves mercy, and walks reverently before God, looks wn on them and their filthy gold.

But look at this third phase, the bitterness in our ord's words. "Bitterness!" you repeat. Yes, bitterss. Beautiful hopes gone; frustrated purposes; warted ambitions are all there. It must be so, he ys, with such bitterness of soul, it must be so. "It nnot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem." f course it is Jerusalem that does this thing—the most voted city on earth—the city of our God, Jerusalem -the sacred and holy and loveliest of all earthly places. f course it is Jerusalem. It's bound to be Jerusalem at does this wicked thing. "It cannot be that a rophet perish out of Jerusalem." Did you hear somedy say of so-and-so, "Well he speaks badly enough f her"? But he would not let anybody else say it. Well, of course not; nobody else has a right to; nobody else loves her so well. It is because he loves her so well he feels this thing. Ah, well, he ays plenty of hard things about his Church, but he ould soon spring at you if you said such things. Certainly; other people have not the right to say them. ther people have not poured out their blood in the service of the Church, and given of their life for the service of the Church.

This bitterness is the measure of love, of ideals, of hopes, of ambitions. We can say these things about our own city. Because you love your city; because you believe in her; because you have taken the measure of her greatness; because you have ideals for her, and desire to see her flourish mightily by the preaching of the Word, by the strength of her men, by the beauty of her womanhood, by the splendor of her industry, and her progressive life and human liberty. You have the right to say these things because you love and are serving the city. That is the measure of it. That is why Jesus says—of course it is Jerusalem, it must be Jerusalem, it must be Jerusalem that does this—"It cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem." Beautiful hopes; ideals thrown back upon ourselves. That is our position in regard to the liquor business and the drinking customs. We know what our country could be if it were not for the drink. It does not need any one to tell us that the country would be transformed, so that you would not know it if you shut up the drink shops. We know, and yet, do we? Nay, brethren, we do not.

The Church Thwarted

Go to the churches. How is it that the returns for all our efforts in the churches are so poor? With all the ecclesiastical machinery that we have why is there so little good done? There is good done. Of course, we are the salt of the earth still. Why are there so few conversions Sunday by Sunday? There are conversions, God be thanked. Why are there no more? You may answer, "Well, it's because you are such bad preachers." You can't expect me to admit that. Every man for his own trade. I am not going to admit it. I don't believe it. It is not because we are such bad preachers; it is because you are such bad hearers.

It is drink that stands in the way of responding to the pleading of the Gospel. How? Oh, I will tell you how. They have been taking little drops. They have never been drunk. They never will be drunk. It is not simply that they like the drink. That is not it. It is the physical effect—the physical effect of the drug upon them. They are drugged. They are not normal. The Gospel is meant for normal hearts, not for hearts that have been artificially hardened. The Gospel is for the man with a conscience, and if that conscience has been gratuitously made less sensitive by the use of a certain drug, it cannot have the same effect.

But all this melts and blends and merges into infinite pity and awful yearning, "O, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, who killest the prophets and stonest those that are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thee like children together as a hen gathereth her brood under her wings, and ye would not." Ye would not. There is the pity of it. There is the yearning love—yearning for us, loving us. He made the heavens and the earth. He laid the foundations of the earth when the morning stars sang together, and the sons of God shouted for joy. He spread out the heavens as a curtain, and as a tent for him to dwell in. He called the stars by name and holdeth the oceans in the hollow of his hand, and he makes us of ten thousand times more importance than the stars and all the spheres of light. With a father's heart he is yearning over his children. He is yearning for us like the father in the parable, and he sees us a long way off and runs to meet us, and wants to fold us with a father's arms, to a father's heart, and a father's love. That is the love of God for us, and we turn away from him and turn to sin, and turn to the darkness and seek our own gratification through animalism and vice through drink, and we disappoint One who loves us. We disappoint the mother who went down into the darkness for us, and nursed us through childhood, and brought us to manhood. We disappoint the mother who believes in us. That is tragedy. The father desires us to be his joy, to maintain his name and fame. He believes in us, and we have disappointed him. That is tragedy. But age by age man is disappointing God! That is a tragedy for which there is no equal word.

Brethren, which way are you going—down to the depths to disappoint those who know you; to disappoint those who love you, and bring sorrow to the heart of the infinite God? Is that it? Turn ye, turn ye, why will ye die? Believe in the possibilities of your manhood which God believes in. And God is ready to help and give you of himself, and pour God's own life into your enfeebled soul, that you may stand, the fetters off that you have forged in the fire of your passions and beaten out on the anvil of your own desires. Christ can snap them and set you free. Rise up in your manhood and grow to your full height, for God loves you.

At holiday time the streets in he shopping district are packed from curb to curb, nd hundreds walk in the street. From a second-story indow ten thousand people can be seen at once. The more expensive stores are uptown, quite a number being on Fifth Avenue. Here can be seen the most remarkable procession of carriages in America. All through the afternoon they go up and down, two deep on the right and two deep on the left; while between, at short intervals, a policeman sits on his horse like a centaur. Every few moments he raises his hand. Instantly all the carriages stop. The people who wish to cross hurry between the carriages. A whistle blows, and the long procession starts again. Near City Hall Park, from half past four in the afternoon until seven in the evening may be seen thousands and tens of thousands converging toward the Manhattan entrance of the Brooklyn Bridge. New York itself is far too small to house the hundreds of thousands that work there, and, in consequence, many live across the East River.

A Crowd that Gathered in Ten Minutes to Watch a Fire in Lower New York

There are only two bridges between Manhattan and Brooklyn, and these are strained to their utmost during the "rush hours," when the workers are coming to business or returning. The greatest crowd heads for the Brooklyn Bridge, after the offices close, and they form what is known as the famous "bridge crush." By six o'clock the electric surface cars are going over the bridge with hardly ten feet between them, while above, the long elevated trains follow one another only a few seconds apart. But they cannot accommodate the great crowds that wish to go over. When a bridge train comes along fifty people will try to get on one small platform at once, with the result, sometimes of their becoming so wedged in front that no one can get on until the "guard" pulls in one or two to break the blockade. For the first time the newcomer to Brooklyn understands the real significance of the blue and white sign that hangs at the starter's post, "Passengers Must Not Enter or Leave the Cars By Way of the Windows." New bridges are being built, so that within a few years the question of getting to Brooklyn will not be one of the survival of the strongest. As the visitor goes from one crowd to another, despite discomfort, he finds a fascination in this mass of humanity, in being part of the great city that never stops and never sleeps. R. S. Blair.

THE JAPANESE IN AMERICA---

IN every city of the United States, of first, second or third rank, the observer will find distinctly marked settlements of foreigners. In no city in the Union, however, San Francisco not excepted, can he discover what could possibly be called a Japanese quarter. There are two reasons for this: The Japanese do not flock by themselves, but are racially and intellectually opposed to segregation. The second reason is that there are very few Japanese in this country at present, and little of any prospect for a marked increase within the compass of the next generation.

In view of the great pother concerning a Japanese influx, in which newspapers, foreign and domestic, have indulged of late, this statement as to sparseness may seem debateable. It is provable, however, by official reports from our census and immigration bureaus. All authorities agree that the resident Japanese in this country number less than 20,000. At the time of the war between Japan and Russia, there was a marked exodus from the United States of Japanese eager to fight for their flag. It is probable that, if the coolies who come from Hawaii are excepted, there are fewer Japanese here to-day than there were at the beginning of 1905.

Of the 20,000 Japanese in this country, about 16,000 are on the Pacific Slope, and of these the greater proportion are laborers, or coolies. All fair observers agree that in the mass, the Japanese laboring classes are desirable adjuncts to our productive and progressive prosperity.

The Japanese population of Greater New York does not exceed 2,000 men women and children. On a Saturday, in September last, three steamers from Mediterranean ports landed at Ellis Island 4,230 Latin-Union immigrants—comers from Northern or Southern Italy, Sicily or Sardinia. There are more immigrants from the Mediterranean landed in New York, Boston, Philadelphia, and Baltimore every month in the year than the total Japanese census of this country.

In the Hawaiian Islands, there were, at the beginning of 1906, about 60,000 Japanese, a great majority being of the laboring class. That total has been diminished within the last twelvemonth by reason of removal to California, Washington, and Oregon, or return to Japan. It has become particularly plain within the last six months that the Mikado's government is opposed to trans-Pacific emigration.

The number of Japanese in the Philippines is inconsiderable. One reason for this is given by Japanese medical authorities, who say the climate of the Philippines is distinctly hurtful to the race, and that emigrants prefer Formosa, which is under their own flag, though there, too, the climate is uncongenial. In Porto Rico, save for a few merchants, mariners and servants, there are no Japanese worth totalling, and in the Panama Zone there is one—a young surveyor in the employ of the government.

In the territory, continental and insular, that bears the sovereignty of the United States, there are less than 100,000 Japanese, and this, despite the fact, that ours was the first Western nation with which the insular Empire made a commercial treaty, that such treaty was made more than half a century ago, and that intercourse of the most cordial kind, by a direct sea route, has been constant and of stupendous results in commercial statistics.

It is fair to suggest that if Dai Nippon offered opportunities to Yankees of a sort relatively as great as those the United States offers to "the big—little brown men," the American population of Japan would be 500,000 or more. Ethnologists insist that Anglo-Saxons are far more nomadic than Orientals, unless necessity obviates choice, and the records of colonization go to buttress the contention.

While there are less than 2,000 Japanese in New York, there are more than 500,000 Italians in the five metropolitan boroughs. The figures make their own arguments against a Japanese scare.

In New York—and the same is true of the entire country, save of certain portions of the Pacific Slope—Japanese residents are valued residents. If there is the slightest racial or personal prejudice against them, it is confined to the uneducated, the unthinking, or the unregenerate. There are more than 200 American women who have married Japanese men of consequence, living in Eastern cities, and these take part, with their husbands and children,in the best of our social functions. There is no record of divorce in this branch of international marriage.

In New York City, there are, 25 Japanese firms who do a notable importing business. Tea, silk, manufactured and raw, and plants, and trees for orchards are the principal imports, though the more showy outputs are familiar to all seekers after the odd, the bizarre or the Oriental. There are two Japanese physicians of note in New York and two financial institutions—the Yokohoma Specie Bank (one of twenty grouped institutions with almost unlimited resources), and a branch of the Bank of Japan, which was heard of so much and so favorably when the war loans were over subscribed twentyfold in this country. New York has also two Japanese newspapers and there are several on the Pacific Slope. The New York issues are both weekly, and each has a circulation of 1,000, the price being five cents per copy for a four page folio. Of the Japanese Weekly Times, J. Abritani is editor; and of the Japanese-American Commercial Journal, K. Nakamura is the head. These papers give current news, social, commercial, political,affecting their people closely, and the editorial comment is always sane, conservative, kindly, appreciative.

The "Nippon Club," New York

Social Gathering-place of the Influential Japanese

Naturally, San Francisco has the greater number of Japanese merchants, but their fellows do business, and big business, in Chicago, Philadelphia, Boston, Atlantic City, Rochester, Cleveland, Minneapolis, and Portland, Ore. Of Japanese servants — deft, smiling, affectionate, and honest—there are several thousands in this country, and in the Navy, as chefs, cooks, stewards, ward-room boys, and seamen, there are at least a thousand. The latter will decrease henceforth, under the operation of orders, which seek to make and keep the Navy native American in its personnel.

As I said at the outset, the Japanese do not and will not segregate in the same sense that many, if not most, other foreigners prefer to do. One of their number said to me in explanation of this:

"We come to America for betterment, for Westernization (he coined the word himself), for the broadening that travel gives. Those of us who can afford it, go to one or other of your great universities, where there is no isolation or race prejudice encountered or dreamt of. We do not want to herd by ourselves, and thus waste opportunities for the enlargement of views you would get in Japan only by mixing with bright Japanese. More of us soon learn not only to adopt, but to prefer your modes of business, and study your manners in social life, your dress (for the men, that is, somehow our women look better and feel better in the native costume), your cookery, even your small vices, though we rarely go to excess therein, and your athletics, in some branches of which we are glad to know we can be teachers as well as taught. Many of us learn to revere and some faithfully practice your religion. There are more Japanese Christians in proportion to numbers in the country, than in any other class of foreign population, and, so far as I know, there is not a single Japanese temple of worship in the whole United States, though of Chinese joss-houses there are plenty, and of Mohammedan and Buddhist temples, several. To our minds, segregation means isolation, and isolation must mean inferiority or superiority. We will not admit that we are an inferior race, and would be foolish to claim superiority in the United States, where progress has attained such heights as to make your nation at once the wonder and the envy of the world. But except you Yankees of the West, what other nation has shown progress equal to those you sometimes call Yankees of the East? Have we not done in fifty years what England, France, and Germany required fifteen centuries of evolution to attain? Is it fair to say we are mere imitators, when improvements made by our mechanicians in many of your own machines are of record in Tokio? when the greatest and most effective explosive ever used in war is ours, and ours alone? when we have made advancement in medicine and surgery, in transportation and commissariat, in seismography and meteorology, that command unstinted praise from the best scientists and soldiers of Christendom?"

All this and much more was said to me by an officer of the Japanese Navy (this fact precludes publication of his name or rank), who was educated in the United States, lived therein for years, married an American girl and won distinguished honors in torpedo service off Port Arthur. His views are those of scores of his countrymen with whom I have talked, and they struck me as illuminating.

It must not be supposed, however, that the Japanese have no social instincts for their own people. That ould be impossible in a race so determinedly and oroughly patriotic. Japanese sailors, who come and as do the tides, congregate when ashore in New York boarding-houses kept by their countrymen, who now their ways and wishes as to diet and hours. Sev-al of these houses are on Sands Street, Brooklyn, and e locality is sometimes, but erroneously, styled a Jananese quarter." The men pay from $6 to $7 per eek for food and lodging of a character that would nk as luxury in the minds of most foreigners of a gnate class. Of a still better class, and a correspond-gly higher rate are boarding-houses for students, illed workmen and clerks, located on East Eleventh, Vest Twentieth and Twenty-first, East Fifty-seventh, nd East One-hundred-and-thirty-third Streets, Man-attan Borough, New York.

The flower and focus of Japanese socialdom in New ork is the handsome, modern Nippon Club, at 44 West ighty-fifth Street, New York. Of this the reproduced hotographs give but a partial idea. Wherever possi-le, without straining after effect and with due consid-ration of differences in climate and surroundings, Jap-nese home life has been reproduced in this club, and it the scene of many noteworthy events, including din-ers, in which the food is either from Nippon direct or repared by Japanese cooks in manner and form simi-ar to those in a gentleman's home in Tokio, Kioto or Nagasaki. I have eaten rice in many climes and repared by many cooks, but neither the pilau, nor he curry of India, nor the pudding of the Carolina "mammy," can compare with the sparkling, firm, oothsome cubes your Japanese expert will serve you n occasion.

In the Nippon Club there are about 175 members, nd the president is a man of note and affairs—Dr. Takamini, discoverer of a couple of digestive prepara-ions that rank high in learned estimation, possessor of beautiful home and husband of an American woman, he daughter of Henry George, the famous author of Progress and Poverty.

In New York and in other Eastern and mid-country cit-es the few Japanese children resident are welcome in the ublic schools when they elect to attend them. There re especial night schools, for older pupils, at Cooper Union and elsewhere, and the eager greed for knowl-edge of the Japanese as a people is recognized by all educators. No need for compulsory education laws among the Mikado's subjects. Japanese minds seem to need the curb more than the spur. In our principal universities, students from Japan are welcome and valued, and this is is true in Berkeley and Stanford, California, as well as in the Eastern institutions. Probably the public, that hears so much of Japanese fondness for American teaching, has an exaggerated idea as to the number of the students now matriculated here. It should be remembered that there are two Imperial universities in Japan, which rank with some of the best of Western fame, one in Tokio and one in Kioto, and each under the direct supervision and patronage of the Mikado and his ministers. The best known universities in the United States report, for 1906, the following Japanese undergraduates:

Columbia - - -	21
New York - - -	13
Union Theological Seminary	6
General Theological Seminary	1
Harvard - - -	12
Yale - - - -	19
Pennsylvania - - -	15
Princeton - - -	8
Ann Arbor - - -	7
Cornell - - - -	11

While this is a small percentage of the great total of young men in the universities in question, it is the largest percentage of foreigners noted, unless we designate Canadians as alien.

That the Japanese know what alma-mater means, is evidenced by the formation in New York of a club of graduates from a Japanese university, known as the Doshisha Alumni Club. The Doshisha is the well-known Christian University in Kioto, and the New York club is a branch of it. There is also a club of resident Columbia graduates, bearing the name of the university. Of Christian missions in New York, the Japanese conduct three, one on Concord Street, Brooklyn; one on East Fifty-seventh Street, and one on East Thirty-third Street, Manhattan.

It has been the habit of certain editors and writers, to refer to the Japanese as a far lower grade in commercial honor than the Chinese. Whatever reason there may have been in former years for this unfavorable distinction, it fails in force nowadays, and has lacked justice for the last two decades, at least. Referring to this idea, Baron Konako (the representative of the Mikado and the friend of President Roosevelt, who, throughout the Portsmouth Conference was known as the "Mystery," so potent was he in accomplishment, yet so deprecatory in claims) once said: "When Japan had a few open ports, wherein foreigners could do business with our people, there were attracted thereto a lot of Japanese scoundrels, whose morals were nil and their practices nefarious. It is fair to say that many of the Westerners they met in trade deals, were on their own plane as to honor. But with the opening of all the great ports of Japan to foreign trade, and with the growth of commerce and interdealing, came the better and more representative Japanese merchants, and decency and good faith became the rule that must obtain, if financial transactions of magnitude are to result."

This is the Japanese schoolboy, Keikichi Aoki, who has been selected by the Japanese Consul in San Francisco as the plaintiff, in the suit which has been instituted in the California courts, to test the constitutionality of the act of the San Francisco School Board in excluding Japanese from the public schools. He is a bright little fellow, of the marked Oriental type. As the California school question has assumed national importance, general interest will centre upon the case of young Aoki. The photographs of the young pupil on this page and on the cover of this issue, were taken expressly for THE CHRISTIAN HERALD by I. W. Taber, of San Francisco.

The American Branch of the Doshisha Alumni Club

Recently it was my privilege to meet by appointment in New York, in behalf of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, one of the most distinguished Japanese now in public life. Mr. Tsunejiro Miyaoka is counsellor of the Imperial Japanese Embassy at Washington, an embassy headed by Viscount Aoki as Ambassador, and ranking with any in Christendom in the Tokian estimate. Mr. Miyaoka comes next to the Ambassador in rank, and has had a legal as well as a diplomatic training that would equip him for almost any diplomatic post in the Mikado's gift. I prepared six questions that could be answered at once, and afford, I hoped, enlightenment upon vexed matters of current moment. I append the questions and the answers as offered and answered, and, according to promise, without alteration, subtraction or addition. Here they are:

"What direction, do you think, will Japanese emigration take, in view of your acknowledged density of population and comparatively small territory?"

"Naturally, geographically and ethnologically toward the Asiatic Continent. You might add astronomically too" (this with a smile), "for emigration with us will follow the sun, from East to West."

"Does Japan object to the exclusion of males over sixteen years of age from primary and grammar grades in the United States schools?"

"What we claim is equal treatment. We do object to racial segregation. Any age limit which affects all nations alike will, naturally, be satisfactory to us."

"Was the traditional friendship between Japan and the United States lessened or strengthened by the part taken by this country in bringing about the Portsmouth Treaty, and is there any truth in the statement that while the government of Japan is friendly to us, the people, particularly the producing classes there, are passively hostile and disposed to doubt our friendliness and good faith?"

"All discussion relating to any diminution of friendship between our two countries is nonsense. I should like to make it clear to you that the Japanese people have such a warm feeling of friendship for Americans and have reposed such full confidence in the people of the United States, that the feeling aroused by the first news of the segregation of the Japanese in San Francisco was one of disappointment, mingled with genuine sorrow. There was nothing of denunciation, no outbursts of anger, as was represented by the continental press. Now the people are advised of what the federal government in Washington is doing, and they say: 'That is exactly what we expected.' Throughout Japan, the situation in the States is clearly understood."

"What rivalry, except as to commence and manufactures, is possible between the two countries?"

"Absolutely none. Japan has no political aspirations which could clash with the United States."

"Have Japanese residents in the United States reason to complain of treatment accorded them elsewhere than on the Pacific Slope?"

"None whatever. There are absolutely no evidences of race hatred outside the Pacific Slope, and none there, save where labor unions have the upper hand. In many places in Washington, Oregon and Nevada, the Japanese are welcomed and well treated."

"Would Japan favor an interchange of professors between its universities and our own, similar to that now in vogue between this country and Great Britain?"

"That is an interesting question. It may be premature; but the time will come when such interchange will not only be desirable but will be welcomed in both both countries. An interchange of distinguished lecturers and professors would bring out the truth that it is not the language in which the book is written, but the ideas it contains that makes it worth while; not the color of the binding, but the thought behind the text gives the value."

Bending, Not Breaking

JUST as the twig is bent, the trees incline. Of a very crooked tree it was said one day, "Somebody stepped on it when it was a sapling." The tree that grows straight, fair and symmetrical is the tree that is started well in its infancy. So with children. If they are guided in the right way when they are little, they will not need harshness and sternness as they advance toward adolescence, nor will they fail to do credit to their parents and to become useful members of the community.

Thousands of criminals between the ages of sixteen and twenty-three were ill-started on the road. They had no early advantages of home training; they had before them bad examples and they were suffered to run the streets after dark with evil companions. They were not hedged about with wholesome restraints, nor helped by good influences in the beginning.

An old-fashioned idea was once prevalent that all children must, sooner or later, be subjected to a process called "breaking the will." It was taken for granted that, either in babyhood or early childhood, issues must be raised between parents and children, a battle must follow, and finally, after the infliction of punishment, the child, worn out and exhausted, would submit to the coercion of father and mother. This breaking the will sometimes had results in later life that were extremely disastrous. A man or woman whose will had been not gently bent, but fiercely broken, would arrive at maturity a moral weakling. In numerous cases, children have emerged from homes of the utmost rigidity, not, as might be expected, able to repeat parental virtues, but, on the contrary, examples of feebleness before temptation and of deficient will power. The will is God's regal gift, and it makes man most like God. Deliberately to impair its strength is futile and almost unpardonable.

Children must be taught obedience to parents, because parents stand to them in the place of God, and because one of God's laws is, "Honor thy father and thy mother." Yet obedience may be taught by gentleness, by continual precept and by the daily pressure of habit.

A wise physician said truly that if the eldest child in a family were started right, the succeeding children would never give their parents much cause for uneasiness. In multiplied cases an issue may be avoided. What patience, what tenderness, what wonderful resource our heavenly Father shows in his management of us, his often wayward children! Whenever we reach a place where we consciously feel that our wills are completely in union with his, heaven has begun for us on earth. Can we each sing with Faber:

> I worship thee, sweet will of God,
> And all thy ways adore,
> And every day I live I seem
> To love thee more and more.

Democracy in Austria

VERY interesting to the American observer is the movement in European politics in the direction of democratic government. Slowly, reluctantly, but under the pressure of grim necessity, the privileged classes are conceding to the people the right to exercise an influence on the national policy. Despotic rulers have seen the wisdom of sharing their power with the aristocracy, and these again are sharing their power with the people. Time was when the workingman would have been deemed impudent if he proposed to have a voice in legislation, but now in more than one country is there concern lest he acquire a preponderating power in the government. With us this trust in the people has passed beyond the stage of experiment, and it is amusing to witness the tremors and shrinking of a European nation, as it is about to make the plunge into the ocean of Democracy.

Austria is the latest example of the peaceful revolution. The Upper House of the Reichsrath has now consented to grant universal suffrage to the whole people of the empire. It has passed without change a bill to that effect, which the Emperor is expected to sign in the course of a few days. The new law sweeps away a system so complicated that Austrians themselves could not understand it and was a hopeless enigma to a foreigner. There were five different forms of suffrage, corresponding to the classes of the people. The landowners elected representatives of their interests; the cities had their members; the Chambers of Commerce theirs; the rural districts sent a farmer, and the general public not otherwise divided up, a few members. By this means the class idea was retained and the aristocrat did not have to rub shoulders at the poll with the plebeian. But the plan was intricate, and was admirably fitted to develop deadlocks rather than useful legislation. Now the classes are merged, one vote is of the same value as another, and the members will not represent any class, but the whole people. We do not know that the country will be better governed, but if it is not, the people will be able to rectify their blunders, and will have no one but themselves to blame for the errors. If they do not become discouraged and if they are not interfered with, they will find that the principle is sound, and that it will work in the direction of justice and contentment at home and peace abroad. The United States, a juvenile in age but a veteran in popular government, will hold out to the nation the sympathetic hand, and will cordially welcome its senior to the grand family of self-governing peoples.

The Chinese Famine

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT'S appeal in behalf of the sufferers from flood and famine in three provinces of Central China, commends their pitiful case to the sympathy of Americans. If for no other reason than to give the Oriental peoples an example of international good-will, it is to be hoped that the proclamation will produce substantial results. American aid may also be the means of saving many lives.

There are at the present moment an official relief committee in Shanghai and a missionary relief committee in the interior at Chinkiang, both of which are actively engaged in feeding and sheltering the destitute who have been driven from their homes by the unprecedented overflow of the Grand Canal and the lakes, but the means at hand are reported as being altogether inadequate. Shanghai would welcome the arrival of a food-laden American relief ship, should the American Red Cross send a vessel from San Francisco, as now seems probable.

Responding to the President's appeal, the proprietor of this journal in behalf of its readers, forwarded to the State Department at Washington a certified check for $5,000, being the first contribution received from any source. He also sent a remittance of $1,000 to the Treasurer of the Missionary Committee at Chinkiang, to be applied to the immediate relief of the most urgent cases. As in previous famines in other lands, our readers have once more the unique distinction of being first in the field in a good work for humanity.

Let us hope that the Chinese famine may not be of long duration, and that conditions may so speedly improve that serious loss of life will be averted.

A Misunderstood Scientist

DR. WILLIAM OSLER'S statement made nearly two years ago, that "man's best work is done before forty," which he meant in a preparatory sense, created a world-wide sensation at the time, its signification being thoughtlessly and injuriously perverted. It is only lately that it has received its true interpretation.

Taking advantage of Dr. Osler's presence in Canada, recently (whither he came to celebrate the centenary of his beloved mother), Mr. Charles Leonard Stuart, the well-known encyclopedist, wrote to him for accurate information. The reports of the Professor's famous address to the students at Johns Hopkins University were so distorted, that 'oslerized' has become a familiar term.

Dr. Osler's real words on that occasion were:

> The teacher's life should have three periods—study until twenty-five; investigation until forty; profession until sixty, at which time I would have him retired on a double allowance. Whether Anthony Trollope's suggestion of a college and chloroform should be carried out or not, I have become a little dubious, as my own time is getting so short.

This is very different from the generally accepted idea that he asserted that man's creative usefulness ended at forty, and suggested his chloroforming at sixty. In an encyclopedic article on Medicine, Dr. Osler writes thus on age:

> Within the past three centuries, the average working life of English-speaking men has doubled. A few lived as long as now, and some strong or favored ones had efficient working powers as long; but the common life was worn out in what is now middle age. In Shakespeare's time the fifties were venerable: "Old John of Gaunt, time-honored Lancaster," was fifty-eight when supposably so addressed; and Admiral Coligny murdered at fifty-three, is described by his contemporary biographer as a very old man. Now, when we hear of a death in the sixties, we instinctively feel it an untimely cutting-off in what should be still fresh and vigorous age, and even at eighty, it seems but just fair ripeness for the sickle.

Even at this late date, it is a matter of general interest to have the Professor's position accurately defined. It was a singular instance of a man suddenly becoming famous for what he did not say, whereas, what he did say, was very much more to the point than the sentiments popularly, but erroneously, attributed to him.

The Value of Activity

AS bodily activity is the secret of good health, so spiritual activity is essential to growth and progress in grace. We know how, in the natural world, action purifies all things; how the heaving, foaming sea, keeps everything in it alive; how the impure sea clarifies itself as it runs on; how the storm that masses the clouds and drives them with the wind and rends them with the lightning breaks up the germ-filled atmosphere, and charges it with life and sweetness; how the animal that is alert and agile in its movements, escapes the attacks of parasites and other enemies that prey upon the sluggish beast; how the indolent man is apt to be the victim, in mind and body, of diseases and morbid moods, that fasten upon things that are still, just as the fungus fastens on a decaying tree.

So, in the spiritual life; the more active it is, the more bright and beautiful it becomes; the more does it throw off and keep at bay the temptations and evils of a world lying in wickedness. The only way we can preserve our garments unspotted from the world, is not by negations and proscriptions, but by positive acts of goodness; not by being afraid of doing wrong, but by resolutely doing all the right. We purify our own natures most when we help to purify others. Whiter shall our own robes be, not when in Pharisaic pride we hold them back lest they should be defiled by contact with impurity, but when we gird them round us to wash the feet that have trodden deepest the miry ways of the world.

The purity of God's saints is not the purity of the snow crystals, but of the snowdrop, preserving along with the beauty of the snow, all the graces and activities of life.

AMONG THE WORKERS

—REV. T. S. WINEY, of Hutchison, Kan., Young People's Evangelist, is now holding meetings at Attica, Kan.

—EVANGELIST E. R. HERMISTON is conducting a series of meetings in the White Temple, Portland, Oreg. Twenty-one made decision for Christ at one evening service.

—A NOTABLE REVIVAL is reported from Kurnool, India. There were many touching scenes, and large numbers made open profession of faith in Christ. Kurnool's population is half Hindu, half Mohammedan.

—A UNION EVANGELISTIC CAMPAIGN has just closed in Brookville, Pa. More than 1,200 people attended single services, and many were constrained to begin the Christian life. Rev. Arthur J. Smith, evangelist, and Mr. Chester Harris, singer, conducted the meetings.

England's Ambassador

THE new Ambassador whom Great Britain is sending to Washington to succeed Sir Mortimer Durand is the Right Hon. James Bryce, at ent head of the Irish Department in Liberal Cabinet. Mr. Bryce is better wn as the author of the famous work, ely read on both sides the Atlantic, American Commonwealth. It is untood that the British Government, be- making the appointment, asked ugh our State Department if it would cceptable to the Washington Governt. They were assured that Bryce would receive a hearty come, and arrangements were nce made for filling his place he British Cabinet. It was osed, too, to confer a peerage n him, in honor of the post he to occupy. This, however, Bryce declined, rightly think- that his reception would be e as cordial as a plain citizen, if he came as a lord. Mr, ce is sixty-eight years of age is a native of Scotland. He lied at Glasgow, Oxford and idelberg. He held office as an ford professor for twenty-three rs and did not resign until his ies as Member of Parliament subsequently a member of the inet took up so much of his e. Mr. Bryce is the author of eral valuable works. His great k on America was published 1889, after paying three exded visits to this country, in 0, 1881, and 1883. It is stated t his preparatory reading and visits occupied him for a quarof a century before the exstive treatise was begun. Mr. ce is a strong peace advocate l is likely to be Great Britain's ef representative at the Hague nference. Though unused to lomacy, he is peculiarly fitted the position of British Ambasor to Washington. More quarrels e occurred between nations, as between lividuals through lack of understanding l sympathy than from any other cause. e fact of the international business beeen the two countries being conducted a man who appreciates both, must conce to peace and harmony. It is that prinle, in an infinitely higher sense, which renders our Lord so eminently fitted, by his divine and human nature, to be the Mediator between God and man.

He is our peace who hath made both one and hath broken down the wall of partition . . . that he might create in himself of the two one new man, so making peace (Eph. 2: 14, 15.)

The Oldest Tree in the World

Among the trees whose history can be traced, the oldest is believed to be a famous tree in Ceylon, identified with the history of Buddhism. A writer in the National Geographical Magazine, says that the tree is undoubtedly over two thousand years old. It sprang from a branch of the original Bo-tree, the tree of intelligence, under which Gautama rested at Bodhimanda, and whence he rose the Buddha known to history and tradition. The branch from this tree, which is held sacred by a hundred and fifty millions of the human race, was taken to Ceylon by Mahindo, a prince of the royal house, in the year 307 B.C., and was there planted. The tree, which now has the distinction of being the oldest in the world, is the growth of that branch. Greatly revered by the pilgrims, it has a temple erected in its honor. Through centuries it has been respected and spared by all. During its lifetime most of the world's history has been made. It was already old when Christ brought his message to the world. The Buddhist reveres this tree merely because of its historic associations, it can never be to him what the tree that John saw is to the Christian.

The tree of life yielding its fruit every month and the leaves of the tree are for the healing of the nations. (Rev. 22: 2).

Persia's Parliament

Parliamentary government in Persia has already entered a sea of conflict. The Shah's son, who assumed the regency when his father was incapacitated by illness, has taken upon himself to revise the constitution granted by his father. He has decided to add to the Senate forty members, who shall be nominees of the Crown and royal officials. To this body the Assembly must submit all proposals for reforms. The Assembly firmly refuses to accept the change and thus there is a conflict between it and the Crown. It is suggested that the Regent may force the plan without the consent of the Assembly, but the latter threatens that if he does so, they will proclaim a "Bast," which will close the bazaars and the chief mosques. The President of the Assembly has been forced to resign, as he sided with the Regent, and was promptly denounced to his face by Saad ed Dowleh, the leader of the Constitutional party. Saad told the President he was a tool of the Regent and a traitor to the cause of the people. The President thereupon resigned, and the Assembly appointed a committee of ten of its members to wait upon the Regent and protest against his project. The palace in which the meetings are held resounds with eloquent speeches by men who have studied the working of constitutions in other lands and are already adepts in Parliamentary practice. We can but hope, for the sake of the peace and future prosperity of Persia, that the Regent will yield to the wishes of his people and not attempt to nullify the concessions granted by his father. It would be well for him if some one would tell him the ancient story of a young king, whose arrogance lost him the greater part of his kingdom.

So when all Israel saw that the king hearkened not unto them, the people answered the king, saying: To your tents O Israel, now see to thine own house (I. Kings 12: 16).

Future Communication

An extraordinary prediction, that the telegraph and the telephone will be superseded at no distant time by telepathy, is made by Mr. W. T. Stead, the famous English journalist, in an article recently published, detailing a series of experiments. He contends that even now when two minds are closely akin, one of them is conscious of thoughts passing through the mind of the other. In one of the experiments by which he tested his theory, a lady secluded in one part of Mr. Stead's house told correctly the objects of which her husband was thinking, though he was in another part of the house beyond her sight and hearing. The objects of thought were not pre-arranged between husband and wife, but were suggested to the husband by Mr. Stead and his friends. The lady was even able to tell the number of a banknote which was placed in her husband's hands, which she could not have seen and which he had never seen until that moment. Mr. Stead says this phenomenon has no relation to Spiritualism, but is due to the body being an organic electric battery, continually producing electric currents. He believes that scientists will find out a way to direct those currents, and enable persons to communicate with one another, though separated by long distances. The one essential is that the two minds shall be highly receptive, and keyed to the same thought vibration. The chief stress is laid upon this harmony of mind with mind without which, in the initial stages, communication by this method is impossible. It is essential, too, in the higher sense in the spiritual world. Christ's promise of blessing is based on it.

If ye abide in me and my words abide in you, ye shall ask what ye will and it shall be done unto you (John 15: 7).

Saved by a Living Chain

A press dispatch from Richfield, N. J., reports the narrow escape from death of a boy who, during the holidays, was skating on Morris Canal. He was rather proud of his skill as a skater and, though warned several times by older companions, persisted in going on ice known to be thin. At last it broke beneath him, and with a loud cry for help he sank in the icy water. Several boys heard him and came skating as near to the hole as they dared. As the ice cracked beneath them, they halted, and one, with great presence of mind, lay down full length on the ice and called on his companions to make a chain. One boy lay back of him, and seizing the other boy by his ankles, pushed him toward the hole where the drowning boy was clinging to the edge of the ice. Another boy lay back of him and pushed the other two forward. Then a fourth lay down, repeating the action, and a fifth followed. The first boy seized his drowning friend by the arms and called on those behind him to pull. The ice cracked with the strain, but the rescuers held on until their companion was brought to safety, almost unconscious from cold and fright. How glad they must all have been that they succeeded. It is much to be wished that similar energy and effort were displayed when a friend is in danger of losing his soul.

I say unto you, there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth (Luke 15: 10).

Forty-three Years in Prison

A prisoner who has been in the State prison at Thomaston, Me., for forty-three years was recently set at liberty by executive clemency. He had been condemned to life imprisonment. He has always insisted that he was innocent of the crime with which he was charged, and has proved a model prisoner. When the Governor's pardon arrived he wept for joy; but when he went around the prison farm to bid good-by to his pets and to take leave of the other prisoners, he wept at the parting. He is now an old man and has little idea of the changes that have taken place in the outside world. He had never ridden in a railroad train, nor ever seen an electric car. As the aged man left the building, a reporter asked him how it felt to be at liberty. "Feels like a dream," he said, "I am dreading a sad waking now, but it seems thoroughly real." Even at this late period of his life the blessing of freedom is evidently very welcome to him. How much more welcome is that freedom which Christ gives which will endure through eternity.

If the Son shall make you free ye shall be free indeed (John 8: 36).

BETTER DAYS IN THE "BLACK BELT"

How an Outpost of Civilization was Established Under Tuskegee Auspices

IN the centre of the cotton-growing region of Alabama, in the heart of the "Black Belt," where the negro population outnumbers the white in the ratio of five to one, there was established, some twenty-five years ago, an industrial school for negroes. This is the Tuskegee Normal and Industrial Institute, and the negro teacher who founded it, is Booker T. Washington.

In the years since it was established, this school has greatly extended the work, and made itself and its founder famous. Tuskegee has been more than a school; it has been a missionary station, a centre of Christian influence that has transformed the life of masses of the people about it.

About eight miles south of Tuskegee, on the old slave road that connects Macon, Ga., with Montgomery, Ala., one comes suddenly in the midst of a region of thriftless fields and unwholesome little cabins, upon a pretty home-like cottage, garlanded with vines and flowers, and surrounded by a neat and well tilled garden. It is a sort of oasis of thrift and comfort in the midst of a desert that is barren of every object that gives dignity or value to life. This is one of Tuskegee's outposts of civilization.

Ten years ago, Mrs. Booker T. Washington started at this place what she has called a Plantation Settlement. It seemed a desperate enterprise at the time. The people were living in a condition very much as they did in slavery. Perhaps, in some respects, it was worse. They were living in an ignorance more dense than can well be understood, because it was an ignorance of many, if not most, of the essentials of civilized life. Mrs. Washington, when she chose to undertake this heroic work, put in charge of it a young woman fresh from the industrial school. It was deemed dangerous at first to leave her alone in this neighborhood. She made her home at first in an abandoned cabin without windows, and a very poor excuse for a roof. The people were at first inclined to look askance and avoid her, deeming that she intended in some way to interfere with their life.

But Anna Davis was patient and persisted in her work. She first gathered the children into the little school that she had started. This served to establish good relations with the older people, for these colored people all want their children to go to school. After that she induced the elders to visit her when they were not busy in the fields. She showed them magazines that had been sent down to them from the school at Tuskegee. They were interested in the pictures. Then she told them what the pictures meant, and gradually interested them in the great world outside, of which they had only the vaguest notions. In this way she was able to stimulate their ambition to know more.

A Class in Kitchen Science at the Plantation Settlement

Very soon a substantial little church was erected in the community, and the men came out from the Tuskegee Institute to preach to the people. An effort was made to introduce better and more wholesome methods of living. The women were invited to attend the "Mothers' Meetings" that Mrs. Washington had established for the women who came into town on Saturdays. They were urged to clean up their cabins; to plant vines over them and make them look comfortable and homelike, and to lead decent and respectable lives. Finally, they were taught that they were not to learn merely from books. Ten acres of land were purchased with money that Mrs. Washington was able to raise, largely from contributions among teachers at Tuskegee, and a model garden was started and the people were taught in this way to raise their own provisions. As time went by and the people become more interested in the work of the school they were encouraged to contribute to its support. The Settlement school has become in recent years well nigh self-supporting.

"To-day," Miss Davis tells her visitors, with a glow of happiness in her intelligent face, "the cabins are partitioned off into separate rooms; windows have been cut in the blind walls; the inside of the cabins are clean and decent; the women have become self-respecting; the Sabbath day is kept holy." In short, a new tradition and a new life has been established in this community. This the work of what is called at Tuskegee "Community Building," in some of its details.

Miss Davis has been ten years in the Settlement work. She has grown to be a part of the life of the community. It will go hard with these simple-minded people if she is taken from them. She has, however, been called to a greater and perhaps a more difficult work. The Negro Women's clubs of Alabama, under the leadership of Mrs. Washington, have decided to establish, near Tuskegee, a home for delinquent children. They have raised $800 to purchase land, upon which they intend to found a home and school for negro children who would otherwise, under the law, be sent to the mines or the stockades. They have selected Miss Davis to take up this new and beneficent work. She will make a beginning in a very small way, but it is believed and hoped the institution will grow until it meets something like the great need that now exists in Alabama and elsewhere throughout the South.

BURIED ALIVE FOR FIFTEEN DAYS

Miner Hicks' Miraculous Escape from a Living Death

OWING to one of the most remarkable rescue feats ever known in the history of mining disasters, there is one man alive to-day, who will be for all time a firm believer in the fact that

Lindsay B. Hicks

"There's a Divinity that shapes our ends."

On December 7, while working on a tunnel for the Edison Power Company, near Bakersfield, California, the vertical walls of a deep shaft fell in, entombing six men beneath hundreds of tons of rock and soil, and more than seventy feet from the surface of the earth. Of those six men, who went to their daily task on that wintry morning, in all the strength of vigorous manhood, but one remains to tell the harrowing story of his living burial. On the evening of the 22d, Lindsay B. Hicks was delivered from his fifteen days' imprisonment in the wrecked tunnel. The story of his miraculous preservation and ultimate rescue, is a marvelous illustration of the protecting power of the Almighty.

It was three days after the catastrophe, before the first intimation was received that a man was still alive among those buried beneath the debris. The survivor, in describing his sensations during the first period of awful suspense, says:

> The first few minutes after I was buried were terrible. In a second after the crash, my mind was in the dark as well as my body. I knew that I was still alive; but I just let go all hold and settled back as if I was to stay there dead for a thousand years.

With his dead companions lying near him, with a shaft-car so wedged above him in the darkness that it prevented the falling rocks from crushing him, the man gathered himself together to await, in the blackness and silence, what seemed certain death. There was a little air; there was a little water, and—there was what proved his ultimate salvation—the broken iron rail of the little tramway through the drift, from his subterranean grave up to the face of the mountain. On the third day the prisoner heard a far-away rapping on that rail, which roused him from the trance-like stupor into which he had fallen. To the buried man, it was like the Voice which bade the dead arise, for, to his rapping, after what seemed years, there came an answering rap on the rail, and direct communication was at once established by means of a code of signals which had previously been used among the men.

The miners above worked with frenzied haste, and a two-inch pipe was driven with all possible speed through the seventy-five feet of stones and earth with which the shaft was choked; as it forced its way to the crevice in which Hicks lay, it brought with it a blessed rush of air, and soon the man, almost frantic with renewed hope, was able to call through the pipe to the big force of rescuers above. Thereafter, milk was poured through the pipe every day to keep him alive. For a long two weeks he remained in his living tomb, with the encouraging shouts of his mates through the pipe to keep him from despair. On the fourteenth day, a rescuer forced a small opening through the remaining crust which surrounded the captive, and from that moment the miners worked with redoubled energy, taking the most desperate chances, until their comrade was free.

The man was shaken and bewildered but remarkably calm and lucid, considering the awful experiences of those fifteen days. Bakersfield made a hero of the rescued miner, who had, in truth, come back from the grave. The following Sabbath was given up to general thanksgiving. Every pastor in the city took occasion to refer in prayer and sermon to the rescue which is one of the most dramatic and remarkable on record.

Certainly the ministers of Bakersfield have never had a more wonderful illustration of the protecting hand of Providence to present to their hearers. The air and water which sustained Hicks until the pipe was driven; the exact calculations of the engineers which resulted in the pipe reaching just that particular spot so far beneath the surface; all these facts caused even sceptics to concede that Lindsay B. Hicks, the miner rescued from the Edison Company's wrecked tunnel, seemed indeed to be singled out for the especial protection of the Most High.

Hicks, himself, is overwhelmed with gratitude for his release, and appreciates to the full the self-sacrifice of the men who toiled day and night to save him from the horrible fate which seemed certainly to await him.

"She came running up the path like a girl"

THE REJUVENATION OF MOTHER

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

"YOUR mother is looking very tired. Have you noticed it, Cynthia?"

Cynthia Watson glanced up absently from her work. She was finishing a gown that she ...ant to wear at her cousin Mary's wedding a fortnight ...ce. The material was radium silk, of a primrose ...de, and Cynthia was daintily finishing it with knots ... embroidery and trimmings of beautiful lace. The ...e had been her mother's, who had worn it on her own ...wns in the days when she had not forgotten to care ...ut her looks. For several years Mrs. Watson had ...med to lose interest in dress and ornament and to be ...te satisfied with the domestic drudgery in which her ...ddle life was passing away.

Her daughters, Theresa and Cynthia, had a habit of ...king their mother for granted. She was to them one ... the visible facts of the universe like the sun or the ...on that went on forever doing its work and making ... particular impression beyond the familiar feeling of ...at or light. Undoubtedly both girls loved their ...ther and would have been grieved wilfully to pain ...r, but insensibly they had fallen into a habit of omit...g her from their calculations.

She never went anywhere; she seldom had a day of ...t, as even the Sabbath brought her additional labor ... preparing a better dinner than was customary during ...e week, and she infrequently bought herself anything ...w. Several times lately, when Cynthia and Theresa ...d appeared in a new outfit, their mother had taken ...eir old costumes, freshened them up after a fashion, ...d worn them herself. She was forty-eight, but a ...sual observer would have supposed her to be sixty at ...st. As for the girls, they never gave her a thought, ... far as sentiment was concerned. She was mother. ...hat told the whole story.

A certain Aunt Katherine who was really not a kins...oman, but simply an old schoolmate and intimate ...uthful friend of Mrs. Watson, had been spending a ...w months in a neighboring State, and had crossed ...ree counties to make her old chum a visit. There ...d been consternation in Mrs. Watson's mind when she ...ceived Katherine Anderson's letter announcing her ...ming, but it reached her too late for a postponement ... the visit.

In her own room, standing before her looking-glass, ...rs. Watson had observed with a sinking heart, and ...most for the first time, how much she had aged. The ...irror revealed a sharp face, hollow cheeks, thinning ...air, and a general all-pervading appearance of exhaus...on and discouragement. Yet Mrs. Watson recognized ...e truth, that the weariness and discouragement which ...d grown chronic, had not as yet robbed her of vi...lity nor taken away very much from her physical ...sources.

"I am wiry," she said to herself. "I can stand a good ...al. I am stronger than the girls. I have had my ...y. It is only fair that they should have theirs."

The girls had been taught to think of their mother's ...iend as Aunt Katherine, and they had a half-formed ...nception of her as their mother's contemporary. When ...oshua Holder's cab brought her from the station, they ...ere surprised to see a gray-haired lady, straight as a ...ne, with a fine alert bearing, bright eyes, a beautiful complexion, and a dress and bonnet in the latest mode, stepping from it and walking briskly up the little path. She did not seem a day beyond thirty-five. She was fifty, two years their mother's senior.

A week had elapsed since Miss Anderson's arrival, and she had taken many quiet notes, mentally, of the way in which things were going. She saw her friend's husband, a man in his prime, well-to-do and able to give his wife an easier life. She saw the two young daughters, selfish, not because they were heartless, but because they were thoughtless and had been used to standing in the foreground and getting the best they could, irrespective of their mother's rights. She resolved that there should be a change.

On three or four occasions she made tentative remarks about Mrs. Watson's altered looks; but she might as well have said, "the wind is in the north," or, "the clouds are full of snow." The girls were not impressed. So, being a person who did not mince matters, she put into practice another plan. She took her host aside. He, too, was an old friend and schoolfellow. She said, bluntly, "John Watson, when you married Clara Hope, I thought you were in love with her. I see that I was mistaken."

"Why do you talk so foolishly, Kate. I was in love with her, and I am still. She is the only woman in the world for me."

"She used to be very pretty," said Miss Anderson, reflectively. "It's a pity she's gone off so. She's grown frightfully plain."

John Watson flushed. "You have no right to speak so of her," he said. "To me Clara is as pretty as she ever was."

"Clara," answered Miss Anderson, "is walking as straight to her grave or else to the insane asylum, as I ever saw a woman walk. She has lost her ambition and her beauty, and her interest in the world. She is spending her strength for three abominably heartless people. Yourself and her two daughters. You can afford to hire a housekeeper. You cannot well afford to lose your wife."

Mr. Watson was decidedly angry. He left the room and shut the door behind him. But at supper he looked at his wife and he looked at Katherine Anderson, and he made comparisons. Next morning he sought Miss Anderson with a request.

"Will you persuade my wife to go home with you and stay two months? I want to see what a good rest in her old home will do for her."

"I can and will," replied Miss Anderson, "on one condition. You must give me a liberal check, so that I can stop in New York long enough to fit Mrs. John Watson out with suitable clothes before she appears among her old friends and schoolmates."

The girls were almost stunned when they found that mother was really going to leave them for eight weeks. They were privately not a little ashamed at the meagerness of her wardrobe, when it came to packing her trunk. As for Mrs. Watson, she was like a chip in a torrent before the energy of her old friend. She seemed to herself a woman in a dream, and could hardly believe it true when, at the station, she kissed her husband and the girls good-by.

Miss Anderson let her alone on the journey. When they reached New York, they went to a quiet hotel where they spent a week. During that time dressmakers and milliners and tailors and shoemakers, affected a transformation in Mrs. Watson's external woman that no one could have looked for. The woman within her awakened and cast off some of the burdening years. It is marvelous how much can be done in a very short time, when one has a friend at hand who sees that one sleeps and eats and rests, who takes one for drives, and shows one interesting things that one has heard of, but never expected to see, and who takes pains to make one presentable, instead of a dowdy.

When the two old friends set out for Maple Corners, Mrs. Watson no longer looked much over fifty. She had a love letter from her husband every day. Mr. Watson had been piqued at the spinster's tart comments on his conduct, and was, beside, determined to leave no stone unturned to make his wife's journey away from home a great success. Whenever Cynthia and Theresa venturned to complain of any hardship that they found in their lot in their mother's absence, their father promptly changed the subject. One day he said:

"When mother comes home again, you girls are to take the heavier end. You may have all the help you want, but your mother is not to be sacrificed as she has been. She is two years younger than Miss Anderson, and much handsomer; and I mean that folks shall know it."

In her old home, Mrs. Watson entered into the pleasures and gaieties of a very social season with an impulse and vivacity that she had supposed long since impossible to her. She went to church and to sewing society, and met her old schoolmates and their girls, and when invited to a luncheon in her honor, given by the Corner's Club, she actually made a little after-dinner speech.

By and by the time came for her return. It was not the same mother who had gone away, tired, a drudge, careless of her looks and willing to stay at home while others went out and enjoyed themselves, who stepped from Joshua Holder's surrey. She came running up the path like a girl, her husband who had gone thirty miles up the road to meet her, proudly following her with bags and satchels, her cheeks had rounded, her hair was prettily arranged, her eyes were bright and she had been to the dentist. Her mouth, that had been the feature most evidently showing signs of age, was improved, and the girls, looking at each other, said, "Why did we never notice that mother needed a little dentistry?"

"Well, Theresa," exclaimed Cynthia, "we were so busy with ourselves that we never thought of mother."

As the weeks wore on, mother showed an evident intention of staying in the new grooves and avoiding the old ones. Her rejuvenation was complete. She was the same loving mother, a little disposed to be anxious, a little too self-denying, but had learned that she owed duties to herself, and that she could do better for her dear ones by taking care to be at her best than by neglecting her own rights and yielding her own privileges. She took a new place in her home, and instead of being its chief servant, she became its mistress and chief ornament.

VICTORY SNATCHED FROM DEFEAT

International Sunday-School Lesson for January 20

*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

LET us not waste life-saving moments in curious questions about the fall of Adam, but seize the story as a basis for practical consideration of the temptation and fall of men and women, of boys and girls, that are occurring now every day, and for presenting the bruised Conqueror of present sin. Some speak as if some mystic force in nature and the lapse of time is evoluting mankind upward. If that is so, healthy uplands of central Africa ought to show races of lofty virtue. Nowhere has man as a race or individual moved upwards in character, except where Christianity has helped him to counteract sin's downward gravitation.

The Temptation

1. Temptation. It is not a sin to be tempted, but it is a sin to lead ourselves into temptation, or to dally with it. Elsie was sitting in her mother's bedroom. The mother said: "You like going about with Fanny Smythe? I am afraid Fanny is not a very nice-minded girl; I wish you could find another friend." "Oh! mother, I like her so much. Besides, I am sure she will never do me any harm." Mrs. Youngman leant forward and took the tongs and nipped a dead coal with them. "Hold out your hand, Elsie," said she. Elsie just touched the coal to take it, but she instantly drew back her hand, for her fingers were soiled and dirty, and Elsie was very particular about her person. Mrs. Youngman dropped the coal, and put down the tongs. "It is a little object lesson, darling," said Mrs. Youngman, calmly. "Even when coals do not burn, they blacken. There are some friendships which cannot be called wicked or altogether bad, but which soil. Now that is what I fear about your friendship with Fanny. She is not an altogether bad girl, but I'm afraid lest innocent little Elsie should have her freshness and purity soiled." Elsie sat very still for a moment; then she impulsively threw her arms round her mother's neck and whispered: "I will do just what you say. I will give up Fanny."

Wires Out of Order

"I want a telegram sent to Tokio," said Mr. Moore, an English merchant in Osaka.

"Something has gone wrong with the wires," replied a speaker at the other end; "we can get no message through. We are dispatching a man to find out the cause." On inspection it was found that numbers of large spiders had attached their webs to the telegraph poles, and spun them right away down to the ground. There had been a heavy rain-fall the night before, and when these huge gossamer curtains got wet, they acted as conductors for the electric fluid, directing it to the ground instead of along the regular wires. Numbers of men were at once dispatched to clear the lines, but it took some days to thoroughly deal with the accumulation, and then, so fast did these spiders work, that operatives had to be employed to destroy their work.

What spider-like temptations every-day seek to break our prayer connections with God! Is it sinful pleasures that play the spiders' part in your life? Or is it some ambition, jealousy and spite, that overrun your soul? The only way to escape their power is to daily "watch and pray."

The Fall

2. The Fall. A young man met a boy on the street and tried to induce him to go with him to Sunday School. The boy answered rudely that he would not go. The young man looked at him wistfully, and the boy insolently asked, "What are you looking for? Lost anything? Expect to find it in my face?" The young man replied, "It is you who have lost something, I fear. I was looking for the image of your Creator." The boy stood wonderingly a moment and then blurted out, "Image of the devil!" Alas that the image of the devil should in many lives displace the image of God! One is reminded of the palimpsest, a manuscript which has in it two writings, one over the other, the upper writing sometimes entirely hiding the one which is under. Some of the most valuable documents relating to the Bible have been of this character, that were found by removing the upper writing by means of chemicals.

When the human face divine is written all over with the scrawls of the devil it is a living palimpsest. The only alchemy that can recover the original image is the blood of Jesus Christ. To an architect who had failed, a rich man, to whom he had appealed, brought the plan of a beautiful home and said: "This is to be a thoroughly well-built house, remember. There is to be no shoddy work about it. Don't spare expense. Carry out the plans in the best possible way. I will gladly pay for everything you may require." But as the architect began the house, the tempter said: "Here is an opportunity for you to start yourself in business again. Just keep expenses down in every way you can, and still make a big charge. The balance will be enough to set you up." He yielded to the temptation, and wherever he could he made use of inferior materials and poor workmanship. When the house was finished, its appearance was good enough; paint covers much. The builder came to the gentleman who had employed him, and said, "Your house is built." "It is for you," said the gentleman; "go and live in it." And the builder had to go and take the house as it was—as he himself had built it. He might have had a good substantial house—good and honestly built, with the best materials and fittings right through. Instead of that, he had a "jerry-built" house, with rattling windows and creaking doors, and loose boards and cracking ceilings, and roof not watertight—all his own doing. How angry he must have been with himself! How foolish he must have thought himself! How he must have longed to have such a chance over again! But it was too late. We are all builders of character, "building for eternity." And we shall have to live forever in the houses we are building now. If we do not build well, we shall cheat no one so much as ourselves.

A boy at sea, knowing the ship would cross the equator, and supposing that when they "crossed the line" it could be seen, was greatly disappointed to hear one morning that it had been passed in the night. An old sailor laid his hand kindly on his arm and said: "Listen to me, Master Eric. I promised to show you the Equator when I saw it. We always pass the line in the dark. And, young master," he added, after a pause, "there are other lines we pass in the dark, too, and it needs the grace of God to show us when we ha' passed it. . . . I remember once passing the line, and it was in the dark, too. I was always a steady sort o' man, and tried to be honest and sober, I used, though, to like my glass of whiskey-and-water, and a game of chance with the cards. I grew fonder and fonder of it—and one night I passed the line. I cheated a mate out o' a heap o' money, and got drunk. Ah! Master Eric, the line is soon passed when one is in the dark. But, thank God, his light came to show me how wrong I was—what a sinner I was—and now by his grace, I keep on the right side o' the line."

The Tempter to-day appeals chiefly to appetite, greed and lust. It is the devil's voice that, in our great prosperity, is tempting so many to gambling in mining stocks. It is a devilish voice that is leading so many, when machinery and unprecedented prosperity has removed every excuse for child labor, to sacrifice the children to increase the income of the home and the profits of even rich employers. We speak of "fallen women," but many women of great respectability are fallen women in that they have yielded to the temptation to live selfish and idle lives. Whenever one yields to the temptation to live other than the best life of which he is capable, there the temptation and fall of men are repeated.

3. Deliverance. It was a bruised Conqueror that was promised in that first Gospel at the very hour of the fall. "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head, and it shall bruise his heel." All through the Bible Christ is thus presented as at once Sovereign and Sufferer, till, in Revelation, we behold enthroned Self-sacrifice in a slain Lamb on a throne. Even among men it is not selfishness, but self-sacrifice that is most honored.

"Therefore the Lord God Sent Him Forth from the Garden of Eden"

A Train Saved

One bright October day of 1900, a squad of some twenty surfacemen were busily at work on a cutting of the North British Railway, a few miles from Montrose. Remembering that the South Express would soon come rushing along, they ran to the opposite green bank to wait there out of danger until it had passed. Presently, however, one of the party observed that a "jack" had been left "in position," right in the middle of the rails. Dreadful! The express would certainly be wrecked! Without the slightest hesitation James Watt bounded back to the spot, but just as he had succeeded in clearing the line, up came the thundering engine, striking him most severely on the shoulder, knocking him down, and inflicting life-long injuries. Yet, by this splendid deed, Watt had the joy of saving many officials and passengers.

"How did you escape?" asked a press interviewer of an interesting young Swede, one of the voyagers of the ill-fated Norge, which, in June, 1904, had been so sadly and so suddenly disabled by striking against a treacherous Atlantic rock. Let me give you her touching reply. "My only brother, seventeen, and myself, were going out to our uncle in America. When the ship began to sink, he pulled me upstairs, and led me to where the boats were. Very tightly he kept hold of me, or else I should have been trampled on. Then he spoke some words, which I didn't catch, very earnestly to the sailors who were putting people into one of the nearest boats, and, lifting me in his arms, handed me to them over the ship's side. Somebody in the boat, which was already full, helped me in and got me a seat. Of course I never doubted my brother was following, but the boat immediately rowed off, and when I looked up, there he was, still upon the Norge, waving to me from the deck! No one knows my agony: my darling, my only brother, sacrificed his life for me!"

A Courageous Girl

Quite recently a boy, residing not far from Philadelphia, had been bitten by a deadly rattlesnake. What should be done? To send him across the ocean all the way to Paris, to be treated at the Pasteur Institute, was not an easy matter. "Don't be anxious," said a young neighbor, on hearing of the mishap; "let me suck the poison from the bite, and he will suffer no harm at all." This the brave girl did. Moreover, directly she had finished, she set off with her patient to a doctor's house seven miles distant, where, upon arrival, she fainted, her lips being swollen with the most painful fever blisters. The boy has perfectly recovered.

Men come nearest to recovering the lost image of God, nearest to the restored image of God in the Crucified, when they rise above selfishness into self-sacrifice. But all human self-sacrifice is but a faint symbol of Calvary.

A lady, very ill with consumption for three years, being so low that hopes of her recovery had been given up, was benefited by the experiment of transfusing blood into her veins. A quarter of a pound of blood from a healthy young lady was successfully transferred into the arm. Later a pound of blood was successfully transferred, and a marked improvement was the result. Beautiful illustration of how we are saved by the blood of Christ, which means not alone that we escape, because he died for us, but also that his life is imparted to us. "The blood is the life."

This divine Deliverer stands ready to crush our temptation beneath his victorious tread if we will but call him to our aid.

Joy at the Bowery Mission

Fifteen Thousand Children and Thousands of Adult Poor Made Happy

"THE finest we've ever had!" Such was the enthusiastic ultimatum of Mr. Hallimond, Superintendent of the Bowery Mission. "It was, indeed, a beautiful Christmas," he continued; "one which the boys will never forget."

On the Sunday morning before Christmas the exercises at the Mission were appropriate to the sacred season. At the service conducted by Mrs. Bird for "her boys," a novel feature was introduced in the rendition of a series of beautiful Christmas carols, sung by a chorus of fifty men, each one of whom was a trophy to the saving grace of God at the Bowery Mission. The testimonies at the several meetings, the hymns chosen, all tended to bring vividly to the minds and hearts of the great throng of Bowery men present the nature and purpose of the Christmas celebration.

The baskets piled with good things, which were distributed to hundreds of needy families; the gaily decorated boxes, packed to overflowing with all the ingredients of a true holiday dinner for at least 1,500 homeless men—these were but a repetition on a larger scale of the holiday feasts of many years. An incident to remember was that of the Christmas evening service, in the course of which one of the new converts, who had been rescued from the depths, delivered, with all the qualifications of a trained elocutionist, a poem entitled "The Christmas Hymn," by Domett. He was loudly applauded.

Mrs. Bird's memorable Christmas entertainment for the "poor children of the East Side," did not include a Christmas tree, as in previous years. Instead, a great chimney corner was erected on the platform, from which a traditionally fat and jolly Santa Claus emerged, to be greeted with shouts of delight by no less than 15,000 children of all ages, from the infant in the mother's arms to the tall lad of sixteen. This multitude, whose days are empty of all that goes to make up the cheerful, well-ordered life of the normal boy and girl, had gathered by thousands in the gray dawn of the bitter cold morning, and stood for hours awaiting the happy moment when they might pass through the Mission—in at one door and out at another—and view in the passing the glories of the Christmas decorations. In each grimy hand, pinched and blue with cold, was placed the toy and "sweeties" and fruit, which it is the chief pleasure of Mrs. Bird's holiday to award.

Thus has the Christmas season passed at the Bowery Mission. Its generous patrons all over the land might well feel richly rewarded if they could behold the joy and comfort they each aid in bringing to both old and young of the "by-ways and hedges."

BOOKS RECEIVED

The Philippine Islands, by Mr. F. W. Atkinson, the first general superintendent of education in our recently acquired possessions, is an accurate and comprehensive account of just what these possessions comprise. It outlines the real conditions, geographical, economic, social and political. It photographs the people and their characteristics, and points out the possibilities and prospects from the view-point of a man who has lived there. In the administration of his duties, Mr. Atkinson was given abundant opportunity to learn the actual conditions by visits to practically every part of the Archipelago, by personal association with prominent Filipinos and with American officials, both military and civil. The result of this opportunity is a quantity of valuable material, with profuse and timely illustrations, which enable the reader to arrive at a substantial knowledge of the situation. Pp. 426. Price $3. Ginn & Co., Boston, New York and Chicago.

Eugene's Quest; by Annette Lucile Noble. A clever story, that takes the characters from America through the most romantic parts of the Old World. The author is well-known to the younger generation of readers from her popular books, Under Twelve Flags and Tarryport School Girls. There are many fine illustrations. Cloth. Pp. 308. American Tract Society, Publishers, New York City.

The Shadow of Life, by Anne Douglas Sedgwick: a charming story of the romance of two young lives, the scenes being laid in England and Scotland. Pp. 330; price $1.50. The Century Co., Publishers, New York.

The American Girl, as seen and portrayed by Howard Chandler Christy, the famous artist. Mr. Christy's beautiful delineations of American girlhood and young womanhood are here presented at their best. The book is a most attractive one of 157 pages, full of characteristic drawings and with art covers. Price $2.50. Moffat, Yard & Co., New York, publishers.

Essentials in Mediæval and Modern History, by Samuel Bannister Harding. Covers the period from Charlemagne to the present day. Pp. 612. Illustrated with index and appendices. Also Outlines of Ancient History, by Wm. C. Morey. Pp. 550. Illustrated. Price $1.50 each. The American Book Company, New York, Cincinnati and Chicago, publishers.

Baby-Craft, by Alice B. Stockham, M.D., is just what its name indicates—a linked chain of facts, replete with wise suggestions to mother and nurse. How to bathe the baby, how to dress it, how to relieve its little ailments—all such subjects are treated with knowledge and understanding. Pp. 47. Stockham Publishing Company, Chicago.

Golden Echoes, by the Rev. John G. Vance, is a collection of religious talks and "Jewels picked up," upon which the writer may congratulate himself that "that which was written was upright, even words of truth." It is "Salvation's story," told tenderly and simply by one who knows the way. Pp. 110. Price 25 cents. Roscoe Printing House, Essex Junction, Vermont.

There have been many books published on our Constitution, its making, and the elements that have made it a working guide for a great nation: but, as a usual thing, they have been written in such a technical way, that they were not suited for the lay reader who had no legal education. Edward Waterman Townsend, however, has written a book on the Constitution that is not only very interesting reading for the general public, but presents all of the technical and legal facts found in previous works. It is entitled, Our Constitution: Why and How it was Made, and What it is. It has been a popular belief that the Constitution was created by its framers with no precedents to guide them. In the first chapter on the "Beginning of States," he shows the workings of the various colonial charters and assemblies that influenced the delegates when formulating their ideas for the National Constitution and Congress. Cloth: 319 pages. Price $1.50. Moffat, Yard & Co., publishers.

Moliere — A Biography: by H. C. Chatfield Taylor. The author is as much at home in the history and literature of France as he is in the discussion of American Topics. The book is more than an account of the life of the great French dramatist, it gives a most accurate idea of the social life of the seventeenth century, and of the French people from the poorest man in the streets, to the courtiers of Louis the Great. The drawings are from the pencil of Onfray de Breville, and are works of art. Cloth; 446 pages. Price, $3.00. Fox, Duffield & Co., Publishers, New York City.

In The Pacific Islanders, Delavan L. Pierson, M.A., managing editor of The Missionary Review of the World, edits the life stories of famous missionaries and native converts, in a series of thrilling chapters, which bring vividly before the readers those island people and the uncanonized saints who have given their whole lives to the work of carrying the Gospel to them. James Chalmers, the 'Great Heart of New Guinea"; John G. Paton, D.D., whose name will go down in history bracketed with the New Hebrides; tales of Samoa and the "head-hunters of Borneo," all combine to make up a narrative of trials and triumphs second to none in the missionary world. Illustrated. Pp. 354. Price $1.00. Funk & Wagnalls Company, New York and London.

New Thought Pastels, are a collection in booklet form of characteristic rhymes by Ella Wheeler Wilcox, whose theme is as old as Christ himself. "Perfection," "A Dialogue," and "Prayer," are spiritual crutches for the weak. Pp. 45; price 50 cents. Published by Elizabeth Towne, Holyoke, Mass.

In the Book of Orations, M. E. E. Crabtree claims for himself the title of "the string that binds them." These orations, compiled from the work of students and professors in Southern universities, are a worthy collection of literary effort, vigorous and stimulating, covering such subjects as "The Hebrew in History," "American Citizenship," etc. Pp. 109; price 50 cents. Published by E. E. Crabtree, 72 Mount Vernon Street, Boston, Mass.

A BANKER'S NERVE

Broken by Coffee and Restored by Postum

A banker needs perfect control of the nerves and a clear, quick, accurate brain. A prominent banker of Chattanooga tells how he keeps himself in condition:

"Up to 17 years of age I was not allowed to drink coffee, but as soon as I got out into the world I began to use it and grew very fond of it. For some years I noticed no bad effects from its use, but in time it began to affect me unfavorably. My hands trembled, the muscles of my face twitched, my mental processes seemed slow and in other ways my system got out of order. These conditions grew so bad at last that I had to give up coffee altogether.

"My attention having been drawn to Postum Food Coffee, I began its use on leaving off the old kind, and it gives me pleasure to testify to its value. I find it a delicious beverage; like it just as well as I did coffee, and during the years that I have used Postum I have been free from the distressing symtoms that accompanied the use of coffee. The nervousness has entirely disappeared, and I am as steady of hand as a boy of 25, though I am more than 92 years old. I owe all this to Postum Food Coffee." Name given by the Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a reason." Read the little book "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs. All grocers.

Virginia's Historic Church

ONE anniversary after another reported of various churches throughout the Eastern States, reminds us that though ours is a young country, it is only so by comparison. Some churches have had a continuous existence of over two centuries. A short time ago the Scotch Church of New York City celebrated a century and a half of its founding, while in the State of Virginia, the historic Timber Ridge Church, of Rockbridge County, has been having a sesquicentennial, and the clergy and laity from far and near, gather to congratulate the pastor and people on its honored past and active and useful present.

Rev. J. A. Trostle
Present Pastor

The first inhabitants who settled on the Timber Ridge, were Scotch people from the Lowlands of Scotland, or people of Scotch blood whose forbears settled for a generation or two in the Protestant Province of Ulster, in Ireland, before coming to America. Timber Ridge extends from North River, a short distance below Lexington south into Augusta County. Here the sides of the hills were covered with a great forest, while the valleys in the neighborhood were covered with a thick coarse growth of grass. The first settler was Ephraim McDowell; others soon followed, and, as was the case in most colonial communities, hardly were the first log cabins constructed than a church was built. The first edifice was of logs, as unpretentious as that built by the Pilgrims soon after they landed on Plymouth Rock. "The churches of New Providence and Timber Ridge, were put into church order by Rev. John Blair, of the Presbytery of Donegal, Pa., during a missionary visit, in 1746." Nine years later a new church of stone was started, which has stood through the years to show how well these strong-handed pioneers did their work. A marble tablet high up on the front bears the date 1756.

Mrs. E. P. McDowell Wolff, a descendant of Ephraim McDowell, and several others in the congregation, joined together to place in the vestibule a memorial tablet to the women of the early church. It bears these words: "To the memory of the noble women who, with their own hands, helped to build this church, 1756. Erected by their descendants, 1904." The walls were built of limestone, and the sand used in construction was brought by the women on horseback, a distance of five miles. The district through which they made their ten-mile journey was a neighborhood noted for the sudden appearance of roving bands of Indians and packs of wolves. There were no carts or roads at the time, and the stone and heavy material were dragged over the wood paths on sleds. The seats at first were but split logs, the flat side uppermost. The floor was pounded earth. High up against the wall stood the pulpit, built after the style still found in some old Scotch churches.

Improvements were made from time to time, a portico added, the main building extended to accommodate the increasing numbers of the congregation, and wings built on making the edifice cruciform.

The historical pamphlet that was issued during the anniversary says: "Within its walls worship a free and devout people. It is the old stone church still, the church of the fathers, in renewed youth and increased strength."

The church was a pioneer in the educational field. The Liberty Hall Academy was founded in part by the church. The academy was later moved to Lexington and became first, Washington College, and later, Washington and Lee University. The Timber Ridge congregation furnished the endowment, and during the Revolutionary war, from 1776 to 1780, they supported it. The lands, building, library and apparatus given over to the trustees in 1782 was all given by the people of this church. The church at the present day is carrying on an active work in its neighborhood. It is interesting to note that many of the people who are prominent in its present-day work are direct descendants of those who built the first log meeting house a hundred and sixty years ago.

VICTORY OVER TEMPTATION*

IT is scarcely fair to assume, as some people are prone to do, that every temptation is an onslaught of Satan. "The devil tempted me," says the thief, "and I took it." There is an evident attempt on the thief's part to evade responsibility. The plea is an old one, as old as the race, but it is not always just. There are some people that Satan would not trouble himself to tempt. Their own propensities will do for them all that he might do. Of course, we may travel backward in the inquiry to ask about the origin of those propensities and inquire about Satan's responsibility on that count. But that is an academic question. The propensities exist, and it is those, in most cases, rather than a direct temptation of Satan that we have to overcome. Every man is tempted, James says, when he is drawn away of his own lusts.

Knowing, as every intelligent man must, that these enemies are in his own nature, how should he deal with them? Should he yield to them, do their behests, satisfy their demands, become their slave? That is the easy course, but it is degrading, and in the end, fatal. Man was intended for a better course. He was intended to gain the mastery over them, to become a man, not a brute. Realizing that fact, he sets out to bring them into subjection, and immediately his life becomes a conflict. He learns the strength of his passions, and at times doubts whether it is possible to overcome them. They are of several kinds, but each is powerful in proportion to his physical nature. We have (Romans 7:15-19) Paul's own description of the internal struggle, showing that he, too, felt as men have felt in all ages.

What, then, is the remedy? Paul spent his life in preaching it. He believed that left to himself man must fail, or in the most favorable circumstances gain but a partial victory. His confidence lay in the aid which God is ready to grant to all who seek it. He sympathizes with us in the struggle, and will help men to gain the victory. He gives us the divine nature by our union with Christ, so that in every conflict we receive supernatural help. The struggle must still be our own, but we are encouraged to make it by the knowledge that his help will always be given.

I shall ask Congress upon its next session for authority to use our rt vessels to carry flour and other the famine stricken region.

I recommend that contributions for rchase of such food, and for other riate relief be sent to the American al Red Cross, which will take care expenditures. Such contributions made either through the local Red Cross treasury, or through the Department of State, or may be sent directly to Mr. Charles Hallam Keep, Red Cross Treasurer, United States Treasury Department, Washington, D. C.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

On the issuance of the President's official appeal, the proprietor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, in behalf of its readers throughout the country, immediately sent to the State Department at Washington, a certified check for $5,000 to be applied to the work of relief.

A contribution of $1,000 was also sent by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to the Treasurer of the Missionary Committee at Chinkiang.

Latest advices from China show that the extent and character of the famine have not been exaggerated. Heavy loss of life is already reported in Anhui and Kiangsu provinces. The flooded area covers 40,000 square miles, which supported 15,000,000 persons. Tens of thousands are living on roots. The Rev. T. F. McCrea, writes:

Unless immediate relief be given, eight to ten million persons will experience famine and great numbers will perish. Hundreds are dying of famine and fever. Some throw their children into the water and then commit suicide. Many are selling their children for almost nothing. Officials are forcing the famine sufferers with gunboats and soldiers to remain in the flooded districts, while failing to supply food, and they must starve. Disturbances are taking place and will become serious. The starving people feel they may as well die by the sword as by starvation. There will be no relief until crops ripen next June, and prospects are awful to contemplate.

War on Bridge Whist

A combined effort is being made in large cities by prominent clergymen against bridge whist, on the ground that the game is, all things considered, the most demoralizing evil now working. The sermons will unquestionably be very strong, but probably the frenzied players of the game will be all taking an extra sleep on Sundays.

NEVER TIRES

Of the Food That Restored Her to Health

"My food was killing me and I didn't know the cause," writes a Colo. young lady: "For two years I was thin and sickly, suffering from indigestion and inflammatory rheumatism.

"I had tried different kinds of diet, plain living, and many of the remedies recommended, but got no better.

"Finally, about five weeks ago, mother suggested that I try Grape-Nuts, and I began at once, eating it with a little cream or milk. A change for the better began at once.

"To-day I am well and am gaining weight and strength all the time. I've gained 10 lbs. in the last five weeks and do not suffer any more from indigestion and the rheumatism is all gone.

"I know it is to Grape-Nuts alone that I owe my restored health. I still eat the food twice a day and never tire of it." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The flavor of Grape-Nuts is peculiar to itself. It is neutral, not too sweet and has an agreeable, healthful quality that never grows tiresome.

One of the sources of rheumatism is from overloading the system with acid material, the result of imperfect digestion and assimilation.

As soon as improper food is abandoned and Grape-Nuts is taken regularly, digestion is made strong, the organs do their work of building up good red blood cells and of carrying away the excess of disease-making material from the system.

The result is a certain and steady return to normal health and mental activity. "There's a reason." Read the little book "The Road to Wellville" in pkgs.

Mother or Sister?

Youthful-looking mothers need not be so rare that they are taken for sisters. It is not necessary that a woman lose her fresh, girlish beauty when she becomes the mother of children.

True, the added cares of matronage and motherhood are taxing, but a little extra attention to herself, a little aiding of nature, will enable the mother to look the sister. Massage, for a few minutes each day, with Pompeian Massage Cream is all that is necessary; it aids nature in nature's own way and gives wholesome, natural beauty —a thousand times better than the artificial "beauty" given by cosmetics.

Pompeian Massage Cream makes the skin clear, fresh, and rosy with the glow that comes from a free-coursing blood supply. It takes out "crow's-feet" and wrinkles, rounds out angles and fulls out hollows, drives away flabbiness and double chins, making the flesh firm and fine-grained, the muscles flexible and plastic.

Pompeian Massage Cream

A Haven for Little Cripples

EFFORTS put forth by individuals or societies to relieve the poverty or the ills of childhood, meets with a quick response from the warm heart of the American people. It is a national characteristic and one for self-congratulation; for the little people of to-day are to be the men and women of to-morrow, shaping the moral, spiritual and political destiny of our country, so that the least done in their behalf is indeed done "for God and country."

Hospitals and homes for crippled and friendless children have been founded in many of our cities, and yet they are far too few to meet the pressing demands. Among them, almost unique in its work, is the Daisy Fields' Home and Hospital for Crippled Children, in Englewood, N. J. It received its name of the children's favorite flower, from the fact that it is placed in fields that in summer are thickly covered with the white petals and yellow eyes. The hospital was opened in 1893. There the children of the poor are treated, cripples, it may seem unnecessary to keep patients "for years," but it is only by careful nursing for three or four years, often longer, with plenty of fresh air and good, nourishing food, that the dread disease can be overcome.

The children at Daisy Fields are provided with the best that can be supplied. The Superintendent is a most capable surgical nurse, who looks after every detail of their lives, caring for their bodies, and taking a personal interest in each child, leading many a neglected little waif out of the depths of degradation into the full light of Christian love and charity. The moral change which takes place in those who come under the influence of Daisy Fields Home, is as marked and important as the physical.

The Home can accommodate only eighteen children, and it is the earnest wish of the association to keep the full number at all times. Its ability to do so rests with others.

The Home is entirely dependent upon voluntary contributions, as nearly all the children are from among the very poor, who pay little or nothing towards their support.

Any one wishing further information, can obtain it by writing to the Secretary, Mrs. William Lemmon, Lafayette Avenue, Englewood, N. J.

who are afflicted with Pott's disease, hip disease, spinal trouble and kindred ailments. There they remain until they are sufficiently restored to be able to wear the iron braces, when they are sent to their homes or to the poor-house. If the parents want to do the best they can for their children, it is still impossible for them to attend to the cripple night and day, and properly support the others. As most of them have neither means or experience, the crippled child receives little care. He suffers great pain, is frequently maltreated and neglected, and either develops into a miserable, deformed man, or dies a lonely death.

The object of Daisy Fields is to cure and save such children. They are clothed, fed, educated and cared for until they are entirely well or able to be cared for at home. Many of the children come from the Orthopædic Ward of the Post Graduate Hospital of New York. Some are sent by private individuals, but any child who needs care is welcomed, if there is a vacancy. The expenses of the institution are reduced to the lowest figure consistent with success. There are no collectors nor outsiders to be paid commissions, the superintendent, nurse, teacher, and house servants being the only ones paid for their services, so all contributions are expended directly for the benefit of the children. The records show, so far as we have been able to find, that Daisy Fields is unique, in that it was the first home of the kind to be started. It is still, with one or two exceptions, the only one where patients are kept winter and summer until they are cured.

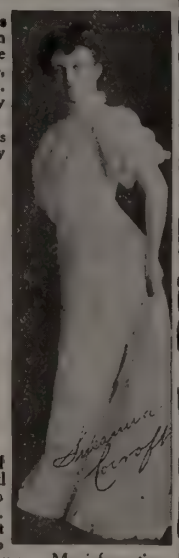
A Gift that was Welcomed

Among the institutions of philanthropic purpose whose buildings were destroyed at the time of the San Francisco disaster, perhaps none were more deserving of public interest and generosity than the Chinese Girls' Rescue Home. An appeal was made last June through this journal for funds to aid in the rebuilding of the Home. A recent letter from the secretary, Mrs. L. A. Kelley, 920 Sacramento Street, San Francisco, Cal., states: "The Woman's Occidental Board of Foreign Missions, of the Presbyterian Church, has received a handsome sum toward its building fund for the Chinese Girls' Rescue Home, in answer to the appeal made in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. In addition to many smaller amounts, one kind friend sent eleven hundred dollars, but declined to give name or address. We desire to express our gratitude to that friend through you, as we have no other means of doing so. I am still on the wing, but every letter from home brings news of gifts in answer to the appeal of your far-reaching messenger." The Board hopes to be in a position to begin rebuilding with the coming of the New Year.

Are You Too Thin?



For only 15 minutes a day's practice in your own room upon special exercises that I will give you, you can be round, plump, wholesome, rested and attractive. Nature intended you to be—why should you not?

The following are extracts from the weekly reports of my pupils:

"Just think, Miss Cocroft, I have gained 25 pounds."

"Before I took up your work, I could not eat anything without the greatest distress, and now I think I can digest tacks I am so happy."

"Every exercise and movement has accomplished just what we wanted."

"My bust, neck and chest have filled out beautifully and I carry myself like another woman."

"You have done more for me than doctors have done in 20 years. My constipation is entirely relieved and my nerves are so rested."

I have built up thousands of women—why not you? You will be so much more attractive and so much better satisfied with yourself.

I will cheerfully tell you about my work, and if I cannot help your particular case I will tell you so. My information and advice are entirely free.

On the various sections his vast undertaking there are im-

Immediately after the Boer War, the head of this novel Mission, Mr. Ellison, was invited by the Bishops of Pretoria and Mashonaland to extend operations into their respective dioceses. To-day, the South African Coach Mission has refuge-houses for its traveling workers in Johannesburg and Bulawayo, and others in Rhodesia and savage Uganda. The staff now numbers twelve pastors, three deacons, six layman, seven native catechists, and four or five volunteer ladies, some of whom are devoting themselves to the women and girls, and others to nursing. The coaches are hitched on to freight or passenger trains, and then ben the Eastern Province of Cape Col-, the Rev. P. B. Simeon worked gle-handed for three years in the Gra-istown region, along 1,500 miles of road, covering the entire distance e every three months by goods-train, road trolley or afoot. Recognizing value of Mr. Simeon's work, the ernment of Cape Colony presented with an old railroad coach, which y fitted up as a kind of combination sion-room and traveling dwelling-se. A kind of station was established the wilds of Rhodesia, in the form of mall hut, to which these Gospel pio-rs—who then numbered six—could re-n occasionally for rest and refresh-t.

gins the tremendous railway journey throughout the whole length of Africa, which is broken only for any length of time at the mighty Zambesi River. The railway camps and villages of white men and blacks engaged in the railway construction are often 150 miles apart. There are other villages in which engine drivers, conductors and other minor officials have their homes, and these, together with the isolated gangers, are periodically visited by the mission coaches.

Literature of various sorts is provided. "When we stopped at a siding on the Uganda Railway," says the Rev. Mr. Ellison, "we held Sunday School (all days of the week) for the white children, and gathered the women and girls."

Sometimes the spot where the coach periodically visits becomes a kind of nucleus for a church, and in due time a temporary edifice is built.

An Indian Chapel Dedicated

N epoch in the Gospel's progress among the Indians of our Southwest has n marked by the dedication of the John ot Memorial Chapel, near Tucson, Ari-a. At three o'clock one Sunday ernoon recently, about two hundred lians and their white friends gathered the impressive services which set apart sacred uses the adobe building which is serve as the centre for Christian work ong the 4,300 Papagoes of Arizona. e missionary pastor, Rev. F. S. Hern-n, presided, and was assisted by Rev. arles H. Cook, D.D., whose thirty-five rs of missionary effort among the neigh-ing tribes of Pimas have resulted in the ngelization and practically the Chris-nization of the whole tribe; by Rev. os. C. Moffett, Presbyterian Missionary Arizona; by Rev. H.C. Fox, D.D., Pas-of the Trinity Presbyterian Church of cson, and by the choir of Trinity Church. mong the Indians themselves, none was re rejoiced than Jessie, who was one of original ten pupils in the Training hool when it was established eighteen years ago. Before Mr. and Mrs. Herndon began their present work, she was a Bible reader among the Papagoes, and expressed her deep desire for some one to do a work in her tribe like that of Dr. Cook among the Pimas.

Mr. and Mrs. Herndon's three years of labor have resulted in a charter membership of more than thirty, of whom a number are elderly people, and one a very old man, the grandfather of one of the interpreters. One notable concrete evidence of their work has been the change in manner of living. The old thatched hut has almost everywhere given place to adobe houses, in which we find pictures on the walls, chairs, and other simple furniture. In some are inkstands and sewing machines.

PLAN NEW CHURCHES IN FRISCO
Bishops' Board of Methodist Church of World to Raise $700,000 to Replace Those Destroyed.
Rochester, N. Y., Oct. 25.—The board of bishops of the Methodist church of the world, in session in this city, decided at today's meeting to raise $700,000 to rebuild the churches destroyed by the San Francisco earthquake. A committee was appointed to report tomorrow on some plan for raising the money.

$700,000
TO BE GIVEN TO Churches

¶ What a noble sentiment such a gift expresses.

¶ How will they do it? How will they accomplish this big task? We want to offer a suggestion.

¶ We want to tell you how we are helping hundreds of churches of all denominations to raise money for church work. If your church is endeavoring to raise its share of this money, or is in need of funds for a new organ, a new carpet or for any church purpose our plans for raising money will appeal to you with particular force. They are so successful financially and above all devoid of the hard work and draw-backs common with the prevailing methods of today.

¶ We venture to say that a goodly sum of this $700,000 referred to above will be raised on

Was this Jesus' Prison House?

WHAT is believed to be a discovery of great value to the whole Christian world has just been made in Jerusalem. Excavators digging near the palace of Pilate, have found what is regarded as the veritable site of the prison house where Jesus was confined and where he was subjected to the ignominy of the stocks.

This new discovery is on the street of the "Ecce Homo" which forms part of the "Via Dolorosa," through which our Lord is supposed to have passed bearing his cross to the hill of Golgotha. The property in which the discovery was made belongs to the Greek Church. Not long ago there stood upon this site a number of old tumble-down tenements, in which the Greek Church allowed free lodgment to its poorer adherents. The time came when that church sought to put up new buildings. As the workmen were excavating for foundations they struck an underground passage hewn out of solid rock. This passage communicates with a doorway, which leads into a rock-hewn chamber or cell some eight feet square. A slab of rock protrudes horizontally along one end of the chamber. In the centre of the slab are two circular apertures, each about eight inches in diameter, leaving enough space between them to form a ledge which might serve as a seat. On the floor is a small iron ring imbedded in the rock, which was probably attached to a chain for shackling the feet. The place, the slab and the ring, at once suggests to the thoughtful investigator what the ancient Romans called the "stocks," in which criminals or political offenders were compelled to stand or sit with their limbs through apertures like those in the slab of rock, and their ankles shackled with chains to the floor.

The newly discovered Jerusalem cell was evidently not intended to hold more than one prisoner at a time, and was apparently reserved for important offenders.

Leaving the cell, one notices to the left a rock stairway, which leads down to a rock-hewn quadrangular chamber, the ceiling of which is studded with rings carved out of the rock, and which probably served to provide an attachment for chains or fetters.

The site of this entire discovery is located on the same side of the street and within a few yards of the spot that has long been identified as "Pilate's Judgment Seat." Across the street is the site of the tower of Antonio, which overlooks the Temple area to the south.

In the opinion of scholars, the conclusion seems warrantable that the find is probably the prison house of Christ, where he may have lain awaiting the final sentence, after his appearance before Pilate. He may have been confined to the "stocks" in that single upper cell.

The excavators have also discovered in the same neighborhood a cave, which seems to have been used as a receptacle for the bodies of dead prisoners or other unfortunate victims. A number of human skeletons, some of huge proportions, have been found promiscuously mixed together and lying scattered on the floor of this cave.

Future excavations in Jerusalem may reveal to us spots replete with interest and importance, from ancient historical and archæological points of view, both Biblical and secular, as yet lying underground hidden and undisclosed.

Church Union in Canada

THE proposed union of Congregationalists, United Brethren and Methodist Protestants of the United States, suggested a like movement in Canada between Congregationalists and the United Brethren, the Methodist Protestants not being represented in the Dominion.

In the autumn of 1904, Rev. J. W. Schofield, of the United Brethren, presented the matter to the Western Congregational Association at Forest, and again to the Congregational Union at Toronto in the following June, when he was supported by another representative, Rev. M. T. Comfort. Fraternal delegates were appointed by the two bodies, and committees selected to consider a basis of union. These committees recommended the reception of the United Brethren as the United Brethren Association of Congregational Churches, the retention of their itineracy, superintendency, and the administration of benevolences.

This basis was submitted to the Congregational Union of Canada at its last meeting in June and adopted, a resolution also prevailing that when the United Brethren finally voted on the matter in their autumnal Conference the ministers and churches would be enrolled in the membership of the Union. An almost unanimous plebiscite of the churches indicated the feeling of the Conference in favor of union, even at that early date. The Conference, however, has now met, and an unexpected difficulty was found in the need of legislation to safeguard the property of the body when union is effected. Otherwise the Conference was unanimous for union, and received from the presiding officer, Bishop Mills, a very cordial severance from the parent body in the United States, and a hearty godspeed in the union movement. Legislation will be granted at the coming session of the Ontario Parliament, when a special Conference will be called by the presiding elder, Rev. J. W. Scofield, and the union formally completed.

This union suggests the possibility of a larger union, and may facilitate the movement now in progress between the Presbyterians, Methodists and Congregationalists. It might be possible to form a united church, with the three denominations retaining their identity as sections of their Church. It would hasten the day for a completer organic union.

Producing Life Artificially

A French scientist named Le Duc, claims to have solved the problem of producing plant life by chemical action. In the announcement of the news from Paris, the statement is made that the Le Duc vegetables have nothing of the vegetable in their makeup, but they behave after their production as do the real vegetables they resemble under natural conditions. Into the makeup of these products nothing living enters. Prof. Le Duc makes seeds in pill forms, one part of sulphate of copper and two parts of glucose. These are deposited in bouillon made of gelatine, to which is added three per cent. of ferro cyanide of potassium and a little sea salt. The seeds give birth to plants resembling seaweeds and other marine plants. The plants thus produced are influenced similarly by heat and cold, as are the vegetables they resemble.—Washington Herald.

Delighted with Books and Calendar

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—Your premium the "Worth While Library," came to hand all right. Am highly pleased with the same, and also greatly appreciate it. Your Calendar also received. I think it a charming piece of artistic work, for which accept my thanks. ADVIN BRADLEY.

THE FIRST DISOBEDIENCE

By Mrs. M. Baxter

ERE was no inherent sin in man; ne was pronounced not only "good," but "very good" in the day of his on. But in his very individuality was the principle of self, the laying of which must prepare the oneness God sought to accomplish in his d likeness. If Satan could sow dis- between God and Adam, and be- Adam and Eve, God's purpose be frustrated, and sin would become ble possibility. Man was no mere ne, he must be put to a test; and was on the watch to profit by it. new the glory of an unfallen state; d "walked up and down in the of the stones of fire" (Ezek. 28:14). is malicious heart, in its awful rest- ss, followed its terrible instinct of ing others into his own ruin.

not despise the power of Satan. rchangel Michael, who surely knew about him than we do, "durst not against him a railing accusation, but The Lord rebuke thee" (Jude 9). God, Christ, through death, de- d him that had the power of death, s, the devil (Heb. 2:14), and in Christ ways find him an overcome foe. But beware how we attempt to meet the in any spirit of boasting. If he overcome our first parents when were sinless, he can make an easy of those who were born in sin, if we ot shielded and kept at all points n in Christ. Of those who are saved, said: "They overcame him by the of the Lamb, and by the word of testimony; and they loved not their unto the death" (Rev. 12:11).

tan came to sow doubt: "Yea, hath said, Ye shall not eat of every tree e garden" (Gen. 3: 1)? He came e woman, to the weaker one; it was him; he addressed himself to the sel- nstinct. Eve's vocation was to be a meet for her husband, "one flesh," ssing a unity of interests with him. ithfulness to her vocation, she should not have listened to, and, above all, not have answered, an inferior being, over which God had given man dominion; and, above all, she should have consulted Adam before doing so. God had given to them both one only test of their obedience: "Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day that thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die" (Gen. 2: 16, 17). Eve neither waited to consult God, nor yet her husband; created to depend on both, she acted in independence; she listened to the serpent, because she liked to listen; she yielded to self-interest, and so became disloyal to God. Thus her self-life, her human will, conceived the unbelief suggested by the serpent, and "lust" (or human self-will) when it had conceived, "brought forth sin" (James 1: 15). Thus "sin entered into the world, and death by sin" (Rom. 5: 12). Having gone thus far, it was an easy step onward. Eve's answer to the serpent was neither more nor less than the exact truth; the sin was in answering him at all. "Resist the devil, and he will flee from you" (James 4: 7); don't answer him.

Having got her ear, the devil began to show his colors: "Ye shall not surely die, for God doth know that in the day ye eat thereof, then your eyes shall be opened, and ye shall be as gods, knowing good and evil" (Gen. 3: 4-5). Poor Eve! she was now in a dilemma. Hitherto only God had spoken to his children; and Eve had believed in and loved him; now she began to mistrust and suspect God. If the serpent was right, another, a shorter and an easier way, of becoming like God lay open to her. Again acting independently of God and of her husband, Eve consulted only her own self-life; she "saw that the tree was good for food, and that it was pleasant to the eyes, and a tree to be desired to make one wise; she took of the fruit thereof and did eat, and gave also to her husband with her, and he did eat" (ver. 6)

GOD'S CONSIDERATION*

UR conception of God must always go back to Christ's revelation of him. It is not that his attitude to changed through Christ's coming, but ught us to look at him in a new light. had thought of him as a stern Ruler, t but a severe Judge; an omnipotent g far removed from us. Christ did minimize those qualities, but he told hat this Omnipotent Being was our ner, with all the love and tenderness men associate with that relation. By ct teaching, by symbol and by para- ie reiterated this view and seemed con- nt that if only men fully realize it, would love him and obey him. When get a grasp on Christ's teaching on this ect, we see how sound his theory was. fear a powerful monarch and dread ffend him, but that feeling does not nge their character. If they could k his laws without detection they ld do it; if they could throw off his , they would become rebels. Their d conduct is the result of repression, that is not what God wants. He ld have his children delight to obey , strive to please him and heartily love . So in Christ's teaching God is re- led to us as loving us, ready to forgive hen we offend, sympathizing with us ur struggles and yearning to have us with him. That is sound philosophy; attracts love. He has always loved , but they did not know it, and Christ e to bring the good news.

n order to put this truth in its strongest t, Christ went among the sick and afflicted, the poor, the despised and the fallen. Everywhere he imparted blessing. Healing where that was needed, encouragement where that was required, comfort where the heart was broken. People wondered at the young Teacher acting in that way. Great teachers have always sought the cultured and the educated, who could appreciate their teaching; but when they criticized him, his answer was simple and conclusive. Not the whole need a physician, but the sick. "I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance." So he spoke the parable of the Prodigal Son; he visited Zacchæus; talked with the woman of Samaria, and fondled the children. A genial, friendly, kindly, helpful Man among men. People wondered as they saw him and he explained it all when he said: "He that hath seen me, hath seen the Father."

An Imitation Takes for its Pattern the Real Article.

There was never an imitation made of an imitation. Imitators always counterfeit the genuine article. The genuine is what you ask for, because genuine articles are the advertised ones. Imitations are not advertised, but depend for their business on the ability of the dealer to sell you something claimed to be "just as good" when you ask for the genuine, because he makes more profit on the imitation. Why accept imitations when you can get the genuine by insisting?

Dinner Set Given Away

YOU CAN EARN this magnificent full size and gold lined dinner set so easily—so very easily—that there is really no work to it at all. You do not have to canvass and tire yourself out for this splendid premium as you do for other inferior premiums. All we need is a friendly word, a recommendation from you.

AND the dinner set is so beautiful that the picture does not begin to show the beauty of this superior china. Each dish is full size and decorated with the prettiest arbutus blossom flowers in all their natural colors, and every dish is gold lined. An ornament for the most refined home. Even if you become very rich and have the finest kind of house furnishings you will always be proud to entertain your friends with this dinner set. Just think! This chinaware won the gold medal at the St. Louis World's Fair. Among all the many exhibits of both foreign and American potteries this was the only chinaware that won the gold medal. We guarantee that you will find the gold medal trade mark on the bottom of every dish.

I am giving away $75,000 in premiums during the next few months—just to advertise our business. You can have your share, for I need your help and we are going to pay you well.

YOU can get this splendid dinner set without paying us one cent. We want to introduce our new style of art pictures, and we want you to show these pictures to your friends. By a special process we can produce these pictures so they exactly resemble famous paintings costing many thousands of dollars. They are lithographed in many colors and you will be surprised when you see them; they are so artistic and pleasing and the whole room looks brighter when one of these pictures is on the wall.

HERE are the pictures. We illustrate herewith one of the fourteen pictures that you are to introduce. The reproduction can give but a faint idea of the beauty of these pictures with their many colors and artistic designs. They are pictures fit for the most refined home.

If, as we suggest, you will hang a few of the pictures in your parlor and show them to your visitors, the full size dinner set and hand decorated motto plate will be yours in a few hours' time. Here are a few letters received recently:

PRINCETON, WIS., Dec. 16, 1906.

Dear Sir: I have received the Dinner Set, and think it's just O. K. I have earned premiums before, but there is nothing like these dishes. Thanking you very much for your trouble,

Truly yours, HULDA REETZ.

MYRA, TEXAS, Nov. 28, 1906.

Dear Sir: Have just received my Dinner Set. To say that I am delighted with it would be putting it mildly. I am more than pleased with it. Do not see how you can afford to give away such fine premiums. Any time I can aid you again will be delighted to do so. Will show it to my neighbors and tell them about it. Gratefully yours, MRS. J. E. DUGGAN.

ARBOR HILL, IA., Nov. 30, 1906.

Dear Sir: I received my Dinner Set yesterday. It arrived safe—not a piece broken. I would not take many times the cost of it. It is just lovely. Allow me to express my thanks. Please send me another dozen of pictures and also a premium list.

Yours respectfully,

MR. FRANK MURPHY.

The pictures cover a wide variety of subjects—to suit every taste, people, animals, fruit, etc. So that one or the other of the pictures will appeal to every kind of taste. We send you only 14 pictures because we know how easy it is to find only fourteen of your intimate friends to accept the pictures on this introductory offer. Such a small lot of pictures is distributed almost before you know it. There will be less than fourteen people to speak to, for some will take two or three pictures.

Explain to your friends that this is an introductory offer made simply to advertise my business in your neighborhood, and that is why we want to be extra liberal.

For a limited time we are willing to introduce these pictures on a special arrangement, only 25c. being collected with each picture, and we want you as our agent to help us.

You need not send us any money. Send your name and address and we will send you prepaid fourteen (14) of the pictures complete. Remember, we send all the pictures prepaid.

Hang up a few of the pictures in your parlor and invite your friends to come and see the beautiful colored pictures just as here described. All you need to do is to give the 14 pictures, on our special plan, to your visitors at only 25c each (or 2 for 50c). On our plan it will take no effort on your part to quickly dispose of only 14 pictures—everybody will be so glad to get them. Only 14 pictures to distribute among 14 friends, or 2 pictures to each of 7 friends! 14 times 25 cents is $3.50. Send us the $3.50 and we will send you at once the beautiful gold medal dinner set for the favor you have shown us. A full size gold medal set of china for a few minutes of your time!

Remember, just as soon as you have disposed of the 14 pictures, sending us the $3.50 collected, we send you the magnificent gold medal dinner set free, and besides, if you write at once, the gold medal, gold rimmed motto plate is free ABSOLUTELY FREE to all our agents. Better get the 14 pictures (prepaid) at once; so sign the coupon now.

An Extra Gift

FREE to All Our Agents

To those agents who write us at once —right now —we give the motto plate entirely free in addition to dinner set.

This motto plate is FREE to our agents. It is positively FREE.

FREE means free. But you should write at once if you want to get the motto plate free besides earning the DINNER SET.

These motto plates were among the famous exhibition at the St. Louis World's Fair and received a Gold Medal. Each plate has the gold medal stamped on the bottom. You can use it as a fancy plate for your table. Every plate is 8½ inches in diameter, has a heavy gold rim over ¼ of an inch and another narrower gold rim inside; decorated by hand with beautiful floral designs and the words of the motto worked in a tasty tint.

This Motto Plate is Free to our Agents, besides the Dinner Set, if you sell only fourteen of our pictures

Sign Your Name and Address—that's all

We do not want any of your money—just your help and friendly recommendation in introducing our pictures as per above offer. You need not bother with a letter. Write your name and address plainly on coupon and mail in an envelope. We'll then send you all the pictures at once prepaid. Remember—the motto plate free besides the Dinner Set if you write at once.

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but as evidence of genuineness and good faith. Where an answer by mail is desired, ten cents in postage stamps must be forwarded by the writers, with full address.

S. B., Jacksonville, Fla. I have been told that this verse is in the Bible: "If the poor will give to the rich, they will surely come to want." Please tell me where to find it?

See Proverbs 22: 16, which you have slightly misquoted.

Star, Ind. Ter. When one lives in a slack, careless manner, continually annoying others by borrowing, and injuring numerous things for which you have toiled, do you think such a one is included among those who are to be favored by the command—Matt. 5: 42?

There is a point at which forbearance ceases to be a virtue. Real need is one thing, and chronic shiftlessness and bad habits are quite another. We are not expected to waste our substance on those who are able to provide for themselves.

P. M. T., Bowdoin, Me. The ring of sincerity in Longfellow's beautiful sonnet to "Three Friends of Mine," makes me inquire if it was addressed to real characters?

Longfellow's friendships were strong and enduring, as his poems, in many passages, testify. The "three friends" referred to in his sonnet were Cornelius Conway Felton, one time president of Harvard University, and among the first classical scholars of his time; Louis John Rudolph Agassiz, the noted naturalist, and Professor of Zoology and Geology in Harvard; and Charles Sumner, the American statesman, whose life was spent in a continuous warfare in the cause of freedom for the slaves.

B. B. Lacombe, Alberta, Can. What is the distance of the North or "Pole Star" from us? Also the stars in the "Dipper" or Great Bear? Also the number of stars in "Orion," and his distance from us? Explain use or meaning of the "Milky Way?" What is the sun's size?

The severest problem man ever attempted to solve, has been to measure the distance of the stars. It is a problem that never will be solved to any great extent. Up to the present, the distance of but one star is known with any approach to accuracy. It is Alpha Centauri, a first magnitude star, a few degrees below our southern horizon. In more respects than this, it is a remarkable star; it is a double star, and also a binary star; that is, one component star revolving round the other. The sky is covered with thousands of double stars, and many hundred binaries. The longest known telescopic period of revolution is Zeta Aquaria, equal to 1,500 years; the shortest spectroscopic period is Beta Aurigæ, equal to thirty-five hours. The distance of Alpha Centauri is 24,000,000,000,000, or 24 billion miles. I will leave it to my readers to compute how long it would take a man to count them at the rate of five a second and ten hours a day. The time would be 70,000,000 years. I will also leave it to the readers to imagine how many thousand years a passenger would have to wait in the depot for a ticket. It is only by such comparisons that one can form the least idea of the distance of our nearest stellar neighbor.

The Milky Way is a mighty gulf stream of stars that winds its luminous band entirely around the sky, woven of the blended light of at least one hundred million stars, all of them self-shining suns like our star, the sun. In places they are so crowded together that no telescope can separate them. No estimate of the enormous diameter of this ring of stars has ever been made.

The diameter of the sun is 866,000 miles, or 109½ times greater than the earth's diameter. In bulk, therefore, it is 109½ × 109½ × 109½, equal to 1,300,000 times larger than our little world; but it is not that number of times heavier, as the density of the earth is the greater.

I. M. H., Fort Dodge, Ia. What were the last words of Robert G. Ingersoll and how did he die?

Of Colonel Ingersoll's last moments, Harry Thurston Peck says in the Bookman of September, 1899, "Death came with swiftness and without a warning. Whether he was even conscious of his end no man can say." He passed away at his own home.

W. V. Culver, Bucklin, Kan. I live near a railroad, which has plenty of travel, and I have been thinking of erecting a billboard some two hundred yards from the railway track, forty feet long, by six or eight feet wide, and to have printed or painted some Scripture verse or admonition. Will you request your readers to suggest what would be suitable? Why should we not advertise the wares of the Kingdom, as well as men advertise their material goods?

Possibly some of our readers may wish to send Mr. Culver suggestions, which may prove serviceable.

A. R. F., Scranton, Pa. Not long since I heard a pastor refer to the first verse of Psalm 51 as the "Neck verse." I have asked all my friends what he meant, but no one seems to know.

When the second of the Norman kings, William Rufus, reigned in England, he established what was called the "Benefit of clergy," by which anyone condemned to death could save his life by proving that he could read. The first verse of the fifty-first Psalm was chosen as a test of the would-be reader's ability, and was therefore called the "Neck verse," since the successful person's neck was thereby made safe. This law, made in 1087, was not repealed until 1700, although it had long been but a dead letter.

Student, Providence, R. I. What books, or group of books, would be most serviceable to a Bible student, outside of those of the classroom?

Concordance; Bible Dictionary; M'Clintock & Sharp's Biblical Encyclopedia; Harmony of the Gospels; Works of Josephus; Jameson, Fausett & Brown's Bible Commentary; Fisher's Manual of Christian Evidences; Vincent's Curiosities of the Bible; Teacher's Bible, with Helps; History of the English Bible, by Ayres, Satterlee & M'Cracken; Smith's Geography of the Holy Land. More might be named, but these are the best, and constitute a good practical equipment.

W. E. McD., Martinsville, Ill. Has the river Nile ever run dry in any part since the famine in Joseph's time?

There are years when the annual overflow (caused by the periodical rainy season in the tropics), has been greatly diminished, but the river as a whole has never been dry, although occasionally some of its sources have dried up.

T. M. M., Cascade, Iowa. 1. I see in your last issue J. T., of Mahanoy City, Pa., asks the question, "What was David's mother's name?" and you answer, "her name is not mentioned in the Bible." I was always taught to believe it was. See I. Chronicles, 2:13-16; also II. Samuel 17:25, where it tells David's sister's mother's name, Nahash. 2. What man of Bible history was born before his mother and died before his father?

1. We know the passages to which you refer. Biblical scholars are now of the opinion that Nahash was a man—an Israelite, or possibly an Ammonite—and that this conclusion is borne out by the peculiar manner in which they are mentioned in the genealogy of I. Chroncles—not as Jesse's daughters, but as David's sisters as if their relationship to David alone entitled them to a place in the record. 2. This may refer to Melchisedec.

M. S. G., Vicksburg, Miss. Will some friend tell me about Ben Hur—when and where did he live, and for what was he famous?

Ben Hur was the Israelitish hero of the romance of the same name, written by Gen. Lew Wallace. He was a well-conceived figure in the tale which was woven about the life of Christ. The book was written before Gen. Wallace ever visited the Holy Land, and only by careful study and sympathetic imagination were the characters made to fit their time. Ben Hur was not drawn from any real figure in history, but was a composite photograph of his age.

Reader, Syracuse, N. Y. I see that Mr. Comstock has been deposed as P. O. Inspector what is the reason?

You have been misinformed. Mr. Comstock has not been deposed, though there are doubtless many of the criminal fraternity who wish he might be. He has the fullest confidence of the Postal authorities. His work in behalf of public and private decency goes on as before. In two days recently he seized 87,000 illegal pictures, another day he made a large capture of illegal medicines, and still another day he seized 165,000 vile quack booklets. In Christmas week he secured five convictions of offenders against the purity laws.

Waiting for Letters From Home Through the Y. M. C. A.

A NOVEL feature in the work of the Young Men's Christian Association of New York City, is the Employment Club of the Twenty-third Street branch. The club consists of more than a hundred initiated members, representing many nations and religions, who have found employment—many of them holding responsible positions—through the Employment Bureau of the Association. At a recent dinner of the club, the employment secretary, Mr. Raney D. Saigeon, gave the members a grand surprise in the shape of a real "letter from home," plans for securing which had been made months previous to this annual gathering. A genuine postman had been pressed into the service, and upon his arrival with a well-filled mail-bag, the guests supposed it to be only a part of the evening's entertainment. But when the first man was called to sign for a "special delivery," he exclaimed: "Why, that's no joke! It's a letter from my wife in Scotland." The distribution continued, until nearly a hundred men, to whom the "surprise" was a wonderful success, had received a letter from home. The episode is but one of many which are constantly occurring, and which may well convince the interested public of the friendly oversight which the secretaries of the Y. M. C. A. give to the young men who come as strangers to their hospitably open doors.

EVERY now and then inquiries reach this office, from generously-inclined friends, for the proper legal designation of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD charities. While the benevolent work of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD extends over the whole world, its special charities are the Bowery Mission and our Children's Home. The corporate name of the Bowery Mission is as follows: "The Bowery Mission and Young Men's Home of New York City." The proper designation of the Children's Home is as follows: "THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home at Nyack, New York." Both are duly incorporated and entitled to receive legacies.

ENGLAND'S "LADY BOUNTIFUL" DEAD

D accustomed are we to hear the possessors of vast wealth maligned slandered and defamed, that it is a welcome change to read of the deep regret and unqualified sorrow of the English people over the death of one of their multi-onaires, which occurred on December Seldom has there been so unmixed a of panegyric, as that which has been ted from press and people by the death he lady who has for nearly seventy s, controlled a vast capital estimated any millions of dollars. They called their "Lady Bountiful"; the poor d her, struggling artists acknowledged r indebtedness to her, and missionaries clergymen in her own country and in r lands gave grateful thanks for her . Even the King, some years ago, ared that there was no lady in the land his mother, who stood so deservedly in the public esteem; and his wife, beloved Queen Alexandra, by her ndly messages and sisterly sympathy ered the stricken invalid during her last ess. More significant of national honor anything else, is it that the privilege urial in Westminster Abbey, which is rved for the very highest statesmen, osophers and warriors, has been granted er. At the age of ninety-two, after rly seventy years of wise and careful efaction, Lady Burdett-Coutts has sed to her reward, honored and esteemed a whole nation.

Her vast wealth came to her in a most antic fashion. Her father was Sir ncis Burdett, a country gentleman of et, unassuming position. Her mother one of the three daughters of Mr. mas Coutts, the famous banker, whose ncial standing was next to that of the nk of England. Mr. Coutts was so rmously rich that the proudest English les would have willingly accepted him a son-in-law; but he made no overtures any aristocratic dame. Instead, he ced his affections on an uneducated girl o was a domestic servant in his own sehold. She accepted him, and he de arrangements to have her prepared the high position she was to occupy. e girl was placed under the care of chers and professors, and made good of her opportunities. She learned ickly, and though watched by envious eyes, did not disgrace her husband. She re him three daughters, the eldest of whom married Sir Francis Burdett. Mr. utts was eighty years of age when his wife died. His eccentricity in matrimony still survived, and this time, after only seven days of mourning for his deceased wife, he married Miss Harriet Melton, a young actress at Drury Lane Theatre. Naturally, his three daughters objected to the marriage; but the old gentleman would not listen to them, and to punish them for their opposition, practically disinherited them and left his vast fortune to his young wife. After his death she married the Duke of St. Albans. The duchess must have been a lady of some grace and magnanimity, for she kept the Coutts fortune intact, spending only the income from it. She studied the characters of her first husband's children and of their children, with the idea of restoring the fortune to his family. She finally selected Angelina, the youngest of the daughters of Sir Francis Burdett, as her heiress, and at her death, in 1837, left her the whole of the fortune she had received from Mr. Coutts. Thus, at the age of twenty-three, Miss Angelina Burdett inherited the wealth of her grandfather, and became the richest woman in England.

The Late Baroness Burdett-Coutts

The young girl immediately found the circle of her acquaintance largely increased. Offers of assistance in the management of her vast fortune poured in upon her, and many scions of the nobility became suitors for her hand. But she was a conscientious girl, with ideas of her own about the responsibilities of wealth, and with a deep religious sense of her accountability. She added the surname of Coutts to that of Burdett, and settled herself to the problem of putting the huge sum intrusted to her to the best purpose. To relieve the sorrows and burdens of the poor, and to provide the means for the support of churches in needy districts, were her first measures. She is said to have made the acquaintance of Charles Dickens, who knew the slums of London better than any man living, and under his guidance visited some of the poorest quarters. There was one district known as Nova Scotia Gardens, which struck her pure soul with horror. It was a nest of miserable, squalid habitations, in which coiners, thieves, murderers, and vicious persons lived. At the suggestion of Dickens she bought the whole area, and on the site of the buildings, reeking with pollution and the germs of disease, she erected model tenements, with the best sanitary appliances, and among them she set up and endowed a common library and reading room for the benefit of poor residents. No one ever knew what this

A SPIRITUAL WONDER

TEXT:—JOHN 9:3:

"That the works of God should be made manifest in him"

THERE is something very consolatory to me in the fact that the character sketches of the Old and the New Testaments do not deal entirely with the Enochs and the Joshuas and the Josephs. These men, to be frank, are too good for me to feel fellowship with them. I read and re-read the records of their lives and I do not find one flaw in them. But when I find God offering his mercy and pardon to a Jacob and a David and a Peter and a doubting Thomas, I say to myself, "Ah, if God can cleanse such men of their sins, I know he can and will cleanse me of my sins, if I only throw myself upon his mercy and his love." Now, our Lord's disciples had the same doubts and the same failings in their nature as we have. Though they lived very close to Jesus in a physical sense, they were just as far from him in a spiritual sense as some of us are. The same problems and difficulties which are worrying us were worrying them. The same questions which are being discussed by us were being discussed by them. And here to-day we find one of the greatest of all modern questions being brought by them to Christ for settlement.

The Problem of Suffering

Jesus was one day going out of the Temple accompanied by his friends. There by one of the gates stood a young man, blind from his birth. He was a beggar. He had that mute appeal of sightless eyeballs so pathetic to look at. He stood there as hundreds of blind mendicants now stand in the East, begging for money, with the words: "Bakshish! Bakshish? For the love of God, give me bakshish!" I think that the disciples, as they were walking along, had their heads together talking earnestly upon some great Gospel theme. They wanted Christ to explain for them some of the knotty questions of theology which we all want him to do. Among these problems was probably that of suffering. Was it true, as so many Jews believed, that affliction was sent as punishment for sin? We know from the Book of Job, that such an idea was prevalent, but was it true? There were some facts that contradicted the theory. Some men who were undoubtedly good, yet were great sufferers. This difficulty was so obvious that another theory had sprung up. There were some who said: "Perhaps the sufferer is good, and his suffering may be the result of the sin of his ancestors." As they talked, they noticed the conspicuous beggar at the Temple gate, and they made his case the subject of a question to their Master. Why was this man blind? Was his blindness a punishment for his own sin or for some sin committed by his parents? That is a question which has long been a mystery, and perhaps you and I have discussed it a hundred times. What did Jesus say? Why, he said: "Neither hath this man sinned nor his parents, but that the works of God should be made manifest in him."

Have you grasped the full significance of this answer? If you do, you have the key to some of the mysteries of your own life. God has sent to you that lung trouble, or that dullness of hearing, or that dimness of eyesight, or that family trouble, or that financial distress, not on account of your sins, or on account of your parents' sins, but that God's mercy and power might be made manifest to all the world in your life. Do you believe that? Well, if not, I want to plead with you to believe it. Therefore, let us try and find out how the works of God can be made manifest in your present physical, mental and spiritual troubles, as they were made manifest in the miraculous cure of the young man of the East who was born blind, and who had his eyesight given to him when he obeyed the commands of the Lord Jesus Christ.

Healing of the Blind Man

When this blind man's eyes were opened, Christ performed a miracle which no power on earth had ever been able to do. He was not an oculist, who was cutting away a cataract which, as a dark curtain, had been dropped over the eyeball of an old man. He was not a charlatan who was making a salve out of the mud to assuage the inflammation of the opthalmic nerves. But he was a miracle worker, who could give hearing to a deaf and a dumb man who had been born without any ear-drum, without any sounding-board to catch the waves of sound as they came surging into the ivory vestibules of the ear. In other words, Christ was giving to this young man of the East his eyesight, when there was no visual organ there, when the ocular nerves were gone. The work Christ was doing for that young man's eyes, was exactly what he could do if he put a new leg upon your body, after your leg had been crushed in a railroad accident and amputated by the surgeon's knife. Never since the world was created, up to the time of Jesus, had any man ever received his sight after he had been born blind. This miracle was a test case. Christ was practically saying, "If I can give eyesight to this afflicted one, I can do everything and anything, oh ye of little faith."

Power to Save and Heal

The other day, I saw a picture of the new gallery of one of the largest auditoriums of the West. It was filled with hundreds of bags of sand and lime. They were put there to test the strength of the gallery, as every railroad bridge is tested before a passenger train is allowed to go over it. Those sand bags were practically saying, "If this gallery can hold up my weight, it can hold up the bodies of hundreds of people who shall be crowded into it." So Christ, by curing the eyesight of one born blind, was proving to the world that his superhuman power could accomplish anything, since it could cure one born blind.

If we use blindness or any other incurable physical infirmity, as the symbol of sin, we have a right to infer that the power which can give sight or remove the infirmity, is a superhuman power, and that the same power can eradicate sin. An old legend tells us that Martin Luther, when he was torn by remorse, and anguishing over his past sins, had a strange dream. At that time he was very sick. While he lay in his bed, he saw the evil one enter his room with a huge scroll upon his back.

With a demoniac leer, he suddenly began to unroll it. The scroll seemed to grow larger and larger, as it unfolded before Luther's eyes. Then, as the fiend began to unroll this scroll, Luther began to read. And as he read on, he found out that this long scroll was the record of his past evil life. "There are thy sins," the fiend chuckled. "Aha, see the record of them is all there." But as Martin Luther read on, suddenly a passage of scripture flashed into his mind. He raised himself upon his sick bed and said: "Oh, demon, you have forgotten to put something in that record. The record is all true, but you have forgotten the one promise which cancels all that ghastly list. Write it there. Write it there, now: 'The blood of Jesus Christ his son, cleanseth us from all sin.'" No sooner did Luther speak thus, the old legend says: "than the fiend gathered up his long, heavy scroll, and with a wild cry of defeat, fled into the darkness of the night." That may be only a legend, but it is the consolation of many a sin-burdened heart. Like the blind man of the East, we have been staggering along in the darkness of our sins. But Jesus has come and touched our eyes. Jesus has cleansed us. Jesus has made a test case out of our sins. On account of his shed blood, he has spoken to our repentant souls: "Thou art whole. Thou art whole." Oh, the wonderful miracle of the kindled eyesight of the blind man of the East! Oh, the divine grace which can cleanse us from all sin!

The Sufferer's Plight

But it is not sufficient here to make a general statement that this young man, having his eyesight given to him, is the symbol of our own lives being cleansed of sin by a supernatural power. We must go more into detail and tell you how this young man came to have his eyesight given to him. In the first place, we would state he was not a disciple of Jesus Christ at all. Up to the time Peter asked, "Master, who did sin, this man or his parents, that he was born blind?" I do not believe he had ever heard of Jesus, or he had ever spoken to Jesus, or that Jesus had ever spoken to him. He was just one of those miserable beggars of the East who live on charity.

There, these beggars may he met on every street. Like the Jerusalem dogs, they crawl under the very hoofs of your horses. They greet you in the country. They follow you into the city. They are at every street corner. They are cursed at and spat upon. "Get out of the way there, you beggar!" you can hear the cry on almost every hand. They are the vampires, offscourings of the East. Like the poltroons of Ro who used to cut off their thumbs, so they could shoot a bow and arrow, and would therefore be mune from conscription in the Roman army, som these beggars of the East mutilate themselves, in o to escape work and to be able to better ply their t of begging. Ah, yes, this poor blind beggar of East must have been well used to kicks and cuffs upbraidments. But no sooner had Peter finished t ing, than a most wonderful experience was his. blind man could not see, but he could hear. He c feel. And oh, the softest voice began to talk to h Every word was a gentle word of love. The sof touch pressed his eyelids. This strange Being c and put some salve upon his eyes, and then said, "S go to the Pool of Siloam and wash." The blind could not make out who this strange Being was, but felt that he must be either a God, or the representa of a God. Thus the blind man went and came see That is the symbol of true conversion. It is obey Christ as the blind man obeyed him. It is just gi yourself up to his will. It is doing what he wants to do, even though it may seem a foolish way of ting cured. The blind man obeyed Christ, even tho he could not tell who he was.

Knowledge Follows Obedience

"Oh," you answer, "I do want Jesus for my Savio but I cannot understand how he could be co-equal w God, and yet be born of Mary the Virgin. I want believe it, but I cannot. I don't understand how Jesus could be resurrected from the dead. I do understand how he could perform those miracle Don't you, my brother? Perhaps you do not see face as Paul saw it on the Damascus road. But t does not prevent your trusting him like the blind m of the East. Even though you cannot understand about him, cannot you hear his sweet voice? Can you feel the touch of his fingers upon your eyeli Cannot you hear him saying to you, as he spake to blind man of the East: "Go wash in the Pool of Si am." Cannot you hear his dear voice speaking? W you not surrender yourself and obey his will?

Oh, that we could all live in the simple faith in wh Sir David Brewster, the great scientist, lived and di When he was coming near to the end of his life, said to his Christian physician, Sir James Simpson shall see Jesus, and that will be grand. I shall see who made the worlds." Then he went on and explain to Dr. Simpson that one of the greatest desires of life in reaching heaven was to have so many thi explained which he could not understand here. The as the end drew near, he whispered: "Yes, I have the light for many years, and oh, how bright it is. feel so safe, so satisfied." Cannot you be like gentle, Christian David Brewster? Cannot you be the blind man of the East? Cannot you just ob Christ and leave the mysteries to be solved later? O how soft that voice is. How gentle is that touc Canst thou not hear him gently say, "Go wash in t Pool of Siloam." In thy blindness, wilt thou not go

But there is another fact you must bear well in min No sooner did this young man have his eyes opened the Siloam Pool, than he became brave enough a manly enough to speak the truth and tell what Je had done for him. He was not a craven-hearted u grateful coward, as were his timid parents. He w one of those high-principled, true, noble fellows, w never believed in going back upon a friend, or refus to give the credit to the person who has done them favor. But before we show what the true-heartedne of this young man was able to do for Christ, let turn for a little while and study the parents of t blind boy. You cannot praise the boy's manline without condemning the timidity of the father a mother. These two parents, of all people, ought have been most grateful to Jesus.

In the Blind Man's Home

Come, let us imagine for a little while, that we a sitting in the home of these parents. It is about noo The two old folks are taking their dinner. The bli son is not there, for he is up at the Temple begging,

Mission for Little Dinner Carriers

May Tewksbury

OVER nine years ago, a labor of love in the shape of a mission school for the children of factory operatives was started in Columbus, Ga. It was begun as a memorial to little May, the only child of Mrs. Sallie Patterson Tewksbury, who, during her short life on earth, had been particularly touched by the narrow, dwarfed lives of the factory children, often talking earnestly with her mother about rescuing these little ones from the baneful influences of the street, and sharing the sunshine of her own life with them.

al illness cut short the earthly life of the petted of love; but her mother carried into effect the which the two had happily made together.

m the beginning it was a work of faith. Mrs. sbury established her school, with packing-boxes ats, in an old building loaned for the purpose. thirty children of the Columbus cotton mills—little dinner carriers"—came daily to be taught, nly the "three R's," but lessons in neatness, , truth, and love. The hours were suited convenience of the young workers who daily dinners to the mill operatives for a small sum, , nevertheless, ekes out the scanty living at .

e work grew rapidly, and as the schoolroom could modate at most but seventy-five pupils, many been turned away from its door for want of room. ps no Christian philanthropy was ever undertaken ich prayer was more continually and trustfully ed as the sure avenue from which all needed supplies could be obtained. Prayer, "effectual, fervent," replaced the old packing-boxes with one hundred modern desks. Prayer brought in their order, books, clothing, fuel and stove. If the Mission never accomplished any other good, it has been a wonderful testimony to the power of prayer, to the many children who have spent their allotted two years in its fostering care, and then have gone out to take their places as bread-winners. These two years have inculcated lessons which serve as an "armor of righteousness" in the contaminating associations of the mill to which the little folk are graduated from their school, where the Bible is the main text-book.

So successful were Mrs. Tewksbury's efforts that she added to her day school a Sunday School, childrens' meetings, mothers' meetings, a Christian Endeavor Society, and every line of work possible to include within the scope of such an organization. Thanksgiving and Christmas feasts and pleasant summer outings have formed the only bright spot in many little lives, to whom the Mission school has beeu a glimpse of paradise. One prominent business man of Columbus said recently: "I have watched the Mission children carefully for nine years, and have seen them grow neat, polite and well-behaved, and finally useful citizens, so I know this is no 'fad,' but a means of producing good men and women."

Friends of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD were the means of starting, some years ago, the nucleus for a building fund for the Mission School. The ground is already secured, and also a part of the money needed for the building. Once again the leaders of the enterprise have had recourse to prayer, and their faith is strong that the Lord, seeing what has been wrought in his name, will inspire the hearts of his children to continue and enlarge the work, which has the uplift of the children for its basic idea.

They are confident that it is a work which will commend itself to many of God's people, who are in sympathy with all that tends to benefit the children, morally and physically, and especially the children of the poor.

Any reader who may be interested in the progress of this unique work may learn further details by addressing Mrs. S. P. Tewksbury, 825 Broad Street, Columbus, Ga., who will gladly send personal answers to all such inquiries.

Starting to Carry the Dinners to the Mills

wont. When his guide led him there in the morn-he blind boy took his lunch along. The father ist finished his meal, and he is stretching out his as he walks to the door. Suddenly he turns, and "Mother! Mother! Come here quick! Is not our James running up the road? Look, he has away his staff! Look, he is running as though he see! No, one is guiding him. Look, the people ollowing him in great multitudes! Calling, 'He sees! ees? The blind boy sees!' Yes, it is our boy, is eyes are opened. He sees! He sees!" The nother trembles with excitement. "What!" says the mother, "Jesus? the same Jesus whom the leaders of the church are g to kill? No. No. My son, don't mention ame. Why, if you do this, the church leaders will mmunicate us, and we shall never have any of our hbors as our friends. You have your eyes. Of se this man Jesus cannot take them away from Now you had better pretend that he had nothing o with this miracle." Did you ever hear anything ner? Did you ever know of an action more contible than that of the parents of that young man had received his sight? I have given to you the of their actions in my own language. Oh, yes, I w of some other actions just as contemptible. They your actions and mine, when we refuse to give God the credit for all Christ has done for us and ours. We are in exactly the same position as were these parents who refused to give Jesus the credit of opening the blind eyes of their son, when they said, "By what means he now seeth we know not, or who hath opened his eyes we know not. He is of age, ask him; let him speak for himself." Are we so cowardly that we will not give Christ the credit for what he has done for us and ours?

But, though we would blame the craven-hearted parents who would not speak one word for Jesus Christ, how gladly we turn to eulogizing the nobility and the bravery and the true-heartedness of this man of my text, in whom the works of God were here made manifest. No coward was he. Not a tremor did he have. He was not one of those who would go with a man only long enough to get all he could out of him and then drop him. Nay. A friend with him was a friend all through. When the hirelings of the high-priest came to him and said: "If you do not denounce this Jesus, we will excommunicate thee," the young man's eyes flashed and his hand clinched and his cheeks flushed as he proudly lifted his head and scornfully answered, "I will not deny him. You may kill me if you like. I will never go back on the Jesus who has done so much for me. Whether he be a sinner or no, I know not. One thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see."

The Growing Light

And what was the result of this young man's testimony? Though he had the smallest conviction of Christ; though he could not tell who Jesus was in the broad Christian conception; though he could only say, "He opened my eyes and I see," yet that young man's testimony was able to win many disciples to the Cross. Have you not read the Chapter of my text? No sooner had this young man told his simple story, than there was a division among the multitudes. Some still scoffed at Christ. Some will always scoff. But some who came to scoff, knelt and prayed. For the Bible says, "Others said how can a man that is a sinner do such miracles?" And, my brother, you may be a spiritual weakling, but if you go forth earnestly and faithfully to testify for the Master with the light you have, you will win many souls to Christ. Yes, you can win them to Christ now.

But I cannot close without drawing attention to the most tremendous fact of this story. Though this young man only had a crude conception of Christ when his eyes were opened, yet as soon as he was brave enough, and true enough to live up to the Gospel light which he had, Christ revealed himself in all the beauty of holiness to him. Just read that chapter—it is a beautiful story. It is only one step from the crude belief to the perfect belief. If you will go forth and serve God by the light you have, Christ will come to you as he came to the young man of the East, whose eyesight he had kindled, and he will say, "Dost thou believe on the Son of God? Thou hast seen Him, and it is he that talketh with thee." "And he said, Lord, I believe. And he worshiped him." Yes, if we will only continue to serve God by the light we have, Jesus Christ will continue more and more to reveal himself to us in a brighter and a holier and a truer light.

A Bishop's Fidelity

Thus to-day, whether we are old or young, rich or poor, church members or non-church members, I feel that we are one and all standing in the light of some Gospel truth. Are we ready to obey that truth as much as we see it? Are we ready to proclaim that truth no matter what earthly power bids us nay? Are we ready to be true to Christ, as was Bishop Latimer when preaching before King Henry VIII. In the midst of his sermon, he suddenly stopped and said: "Latimer! Latimer! Latimer! Remember thou art in the presence of thy king. Heed well what thou sayest to him." Then he paused again and said: "Latimer! Latimer! Latimer! Remember that thou art in the presence of the King of kings. Heed well what thou sayest. It is more important to obey the King of kings than it is to obey any earthly potentate." Oh, my friends, are you saying this? Will you be as true to the King of kings as was Hugh Latimer, or the young man of the East, who was brave enough to be true to Christ when he said, "Whether he be a sinner or no I know not, but one thing I know, that whereas I was blind, now I see."

A SETTLEMENT WHERE LOVE RULE

The Remarkable Success of Pastor Sheldon's Work Among the Negroes at Tennesseetown

WERE the reader to stop at Tennesseetown, Topeka, Kan., and visit the Mission Congregational Church, parsonage, library and kindergarten, under the management of Rev. Charles M. Sheldon, he would realize such an uplift among the people that he would not be puzzled again over the race problem. Love is the answer, and Rev. Dr. Sheldon has demonstrated it in this negro Settlement.

The early inhabitants of the Settlement were slaves from Tennessee, whence the name is derived. There are between seven hundred and eight hundred people in the Settlement.

The library is a pleasant, comfortable room in the rear of the church. It contains 1,000 volumes. The long tables are covered with current papers and magazines. Mr. B. E. Crane is librarian and has charge of the room each evening. He is also superintendent of the Sunday School, which is held every Sunday afternoon. Mr. and Mrs. Crane occupy the parsonage, a two-story white residence, in the same yard with the church.

The church room is large and cheerful. The kindergarten meets in this room every morning during the week and is known as the Sheldon Kindergarten. It was awarded the silver medal in St. Louis, at the World's Fair, for excellence in kindergarten work. Mothers' meetings are held in the afternoons and parents' meetings in the evenings. The mothers have formed an organization known as the Sheldon Congress of Mothers. To reach the parents is the key to the success of the kindergarten, and that is not always an easy matter. On the walls in both rooms are hung beautiful pictures presented by friends. Among them are some of the classics. Hofmann's famous head of Christ occupies the most prominent place on the wall back of the pulpit, with Dr. Sheldon's portrait on one side and Friedrich Froebel's on the other. It was Froebel, the "child philospher," who said: "If within one hundred years my system of education will be established for little children, I shall rejoice with the angels." As one colored mother expressed it, "Both these men were inspired of God."

Mrs. June R. Chapman is Director of the Kindergarten. This year's work opened with enthusiasm, especially so, as Dr. Sheldon had made so many improvements in the buildings. They are attractive with white paint, inside and out, neatly papered walls, new floor in the church room, new carpet in office, and gas heat and lighting throughout the buildings.

A Festival Day Among the Settlement Children

The colored people's hearts were so stirred and overflowing with gratitude and joy, that a special meeting was held to give praise and thanks to God for his great goodness, and to petition that they might be led aright through the year's work before them.

"GIPSY" SMITH IN PORTLAND

SINCE December, "Gipsy" Smith, the famous English evangelist, has been conducting meetings in the City Hall of Portland, Me., and in the churches close by. The "Mission" has been a great success. It was under the charge of a committee made up of the pastors of nearly all the churches in Portland together with many of the leading Christians in the city. This committee was headed by Rev. Dr. Frank L. Wilkins, of the Free Street Baptist church, as chairman; and Rev. Charles M. Woodman, of the Friend's church, acted as secretary.

A "Children's Meeting" on Saturday night brought 3,000 children to listen to "Gipsy" Smith, and Miss Zillah Smith, his daughter, who both spoke to the little folks. Over 600 confessed Christ at the children's meeting.

There was a chorus choir of 150 voices, under the direction of Charles C. Wyer, which furnished the music for the Mission.

The Mission opened on Saturday evening, December 1, and City Hall was packed to the doors, and it was filled almost every night thereafter. On the second day of the Mission (Sunday), in the afternoon, a men's meeting was held, with fully 2,500 present. In the evening, City Hall had the largest audience it ever held, and overflow meetings in Chestnut Street Methodist church and the Second Parish church were also crowded. On weekday afternoons the meetings had audiences of from 1,800 to 2,000, and in the evenings the crowds could not be accommodated.

On the closing Sunday night, every seat was filled and hundreds were standing, while fully 3,000 were turned away from the doors.

"Gipsy" Smith appeals to the manhood and womanhood of his auditors and preaches in a quiet, subdued way. There was not a sensational feature in the entire three weeks' services, yet there was a deep undercurreut of spiritual power, which resulted in over 1,000 people deciding to take up the Christian life. The actual number of those who made open profession was 1,030, made up as foll

A VISIT TO ANCIENT OPHIR

The Mines of Zimbabwi, Where King Solomon Dug His Gold for the Adornment of the Great Temple

UR readers will doubtless remember a recent article by Mrs. Louise M. Wodehouse, which appeared in these pages, and which gave i eresting account of a missionary y across Central South Africa. Mrs. Wodehouse told how the party of ary evangelists—which included two other white ladies, her husband, the Rev. dehouse, the Rev. Mr. Greeley, and several native workers—left Umtali, sia, July 4, and journeyed toward the interior, halting and preaching at the of friendly native chiefs. At almost every place, their reception was a cor- e, and the Word of Truth was welcomed in localities where the Gospel had before been

. Wodehouse's l of travel, which pt with remark- delity, abounds criptions of the tiful country h which the rs passed. The of grand old bao- nd palm trees, ld animals, the , and the richly- ged birds of the al forests; the e manners and customs of tive tribes, and ally the domestic of the people are all picturesquely set forth. No opportunity of telling the of Salvation was allowed to pass unimproved. In some localities where the presumably had never seen a white woman before, the children ran off scream- terror. At another place, when the missionaries spread a table-cloth, with s, forks, cups and saucers for a meal, astonishment sat on every native face at strange proceeding. The playing of the little organ which the missionaries carried, was a wonderful surprise, and seemed to give universal pleasure; but the setting up of a camera to take a photograph, was the occasion for an immediate stampede.

General View of the Zimbabwi Ruins

Fortress Wall and Monolith Within

On July 28, the party reached Morgenstern Mission Station, and spent the next two days with Dr. and Mrs. Lowe and the other missionaries there. Resuming their journey on July 31, they soon reached the famous Zimbabwi ruins, which are believed by some of the most eminent scholars and explorers, to be the ancient Ophir of the time of Solomon, whence he drew much of the gold which was utilized in the decorations of the great temple. Mrs. Wodehouse writes:

"Zimbabwi is only four miles from Morgenster, and we pitched our tents right among the ruins. After a cup of tea we went to the temple. We were amazed at what we saw; as we looked, it seemed to grow more wonderful, and imagination peopled the vast amphitheatre with Baal and Ashtoreth worshipers, while white-robed priests perhaps offered human sacrifices to their gods. No one knows how ancient these ruins are, but they are supposed to be very old, to date back probably to the time of Solomon. One would like to know the history of this 'city of the dead.'

"We held our evening service in the temple. Six of us ascended the platform. Our native boys, who make a considerable crowd at our camp, appeared a mere handful as they stood before the great platform. How wonderful it seemed to be speaking in the name of Jesus in that building, which, many hundreds of years ago, had been dedicated so false gods. At the close of the service we sang 'Abide with me,' in the native language, and then in English. As the native boys wended their way out of the temple singing, we mounted the ladder to the top of the outer wall (which is thirty-five feet high and ten feet thick), that we might see the ruins by moonlight. It was we-inspiring sight, and I have never seen anything more grand; but the brains planned and the hands that built, are long since still in death, yet their work ains to puzzle the intellects of this present twentieth century. We were very l when we reached our tents, and glad to go to bed.

On August 1st, we spent the whole morning at the ruins. They are wonderful! wonder of it all grows on you the longer you look at them. What is called the 'fortress' seems more wonderful even than the temple. How did they bring all these stones up this mountain? It seems as if it were the work of giants. Then one can hardly imagine how long it must have taken to construct—years on years, unless there were thousands of people engaged on it. There are a number of chambers in the fortress, and subterranean passages. One could easily get lost there. What could all these narrow passages have been for? There is also a smaller temple in the heart of the fortress, with a platform, or what might have been an altar, and there are monoliths like those in the temple on the top of the walls. On August 2d, we left Zimbabwi about noon. On our way we met Dr. Hall, who has for so long been making excavations at the ruins, and who is an authority on their age. He has written two books on them, and is now writing a third."

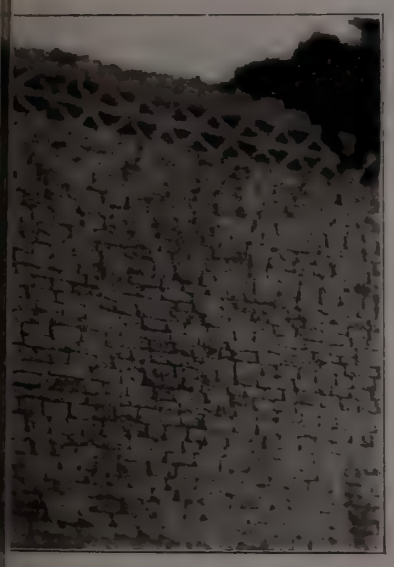
Zimbabwi (which is shown in the excellent photographs taken by Mr. Wodehouse, and which appear on this page), is called Great Zimbabwi, to distinguish it from other and smaller Zimbabwis that are found in many places throughout Mashonaland. In the Bantu tongue, Zimbabwi means "the stone houses." The discoveries of Mavehe, in 1871, and Bent, in 1891, seem to establish the fact that Zimbabwi and the mines of Ophir are identical. The ruins cover a large extent of ground, and are on a plateau 3,300 feet above the level of the sea. There is a citadel or well fortified acropolis, a great mass of ruins, in a valley below, and on the other side a hill, a large, round enclosure. This latter structure is supposed to have been both a temple and a fort. It is 280 feet in diameter. Around it is a granite wall, the small stone blocks of which are laid dry, no mortar being used in the construction of any of the Zimbabwi buildings. The wall is from five to sixteen feet in thickness, and from fifteen to thirty-five feet high. It has three gateways. The interior of the building is divided into three sections, and the divisions are made by a complicated arrangement of stone walls.

Sacred Round Tower in the Temple



Part of the Outer Wall of the Temple

At the southeastern end, in a stone enclosure, are two conical towers. They are of solid stone. One reaches a height of thirty-two feet. The second is smaller. An illustration of one of these towers appears in this article. The towers resemble the round towers found in Ireland, except that the Irish towers are of much greater height. They also are much like the phallic towers that stood inside the sacred walls of the temples built by the Phœnicians.

The valley between the circular structure and the citadel is filled with heaps of ruins. It is supposed that they mark the site of the city where dwelt the people who were protected by the fortress and who worshiped in the temple. These ruins lie to the north of the temple fort.

The citadel is perched on the crest of a steep hill, a position admirably fitted for a fortification, even in our day. On one side is a precipice with a straight drop of ninety feet; on the other a mass of great boulders. The approach is narrow and fortified at frequent intervals. The entrance side is defended by a wall thirteen feet wide at the top, and spreading out to thirty in the lower part. Once inside the outer wall, the traveler finds himself in a maze of rooms and halls. From one of the rooms a stone staircase leads down to the great caves of Zimbabwi.

The Fortress and the Narrow Door

Eastern Gate of the Temple

There are a large number of these caves and they are supposably the famous mines of King Solomon, whence came the great quantities of gold that covered the walls, floors and doors, the cedar altar and the carved cherubims of the great temple. The first explorers found here many small crucibles that still held particles of gold, and a furnace for smelting the precious metal. The Arabians referred to the stone city and its famous mines all through the Middle Ages, and it is probable that the Portuguese worked them some time in the sixteenth century.

The Missionary's Native Helper

OUR suggestion of a definite sphere of usefulness for the new year, which we made in these columns recently, has evoked a cordial and enthusiastic response. We were not too sanguine in our belief that Christians in every part of our land were eager to make this year one of special effort and consecration. There is apparent in the letters we have received, a profound conviction that there is no object in life so satisfying, no achievement so desirable, as that of advancing, by ever so little, the Kingdom of our Lord. There is much that we must do in our daily lives that is necessary, and success in which is gratifying; but it is necessarily ephemeral, and must in any case be left behind when we die; but to have a share in the advancement of our Lord's cause, that is abiding, and will be with us through eternity, and will increase even the joy of heaven. Our correspondents evidently feel this, and rejoice in the possibility of realizing it. There are none of us who want to be among the branches of the vine that bear no fruit; none who would willingly enter heaven without having given some sign that we were grateful for the Gospel that saves us.

The project, therefore, of largely increasing the native missionary force in heathen lands, commends itself to all who have this desire. There is no better service we can render to Christ than that of making him known to people who have never heard of him. It is appalling to think of the great regions which the missionary cannot reach. We are told of vast provinces in China where the missionaries are scarcely one to a million of the population. In Africa, there are whole tribes that have never heard the Gospel, and in Central Asia the number of missionaries is ridiculously inadequate to the work to be done. We rejoice, as we have a right to do, in what has been accomplished by the faithful men and women who have devoted their lives to preaching to the heathen. Their difficulties have been enormous and their success phenomenal; but even that fact has its lesson. If so much has been done, with means relatively so small, how much could be done by a larger force. There is no missionary who does not tell us of fields he would be glad to cultivate if his physical powers permitted, of districts where a harvest might be gathered if only a missionary was there to preach and teach. Truly the field is great, but the laborers are few.

It is this fact that raises the question whether we have sufficiently availed ourselves of native help. The native has many advantages that the white missionary does not possess. He understands the prejudices of his people; the idioms of their language are familiar to him; he knows their traditions and the best means of approaching them, and above all, they are his own kin for whom he feels a natural affection. Besides this he is acclimated, and his native climate has not the terrors for him that it has for the white man. Carefully selected by the missionary who knows his converts, thoroughly trained in the Gospel and sent out under the direction and supervision of the white missionary, he might accomplish great things. He might enter circles from which native prejudice bars the white man, and might find a welcome for his message that is not given to the foreign advocate of the Gospel.

As usual, we are told that the missionary societies have no funds to increase the army of native helpers. Their income is always below the demands upon it. Though the native is willing to work for a pittance, even the small sum he needs is not forthcoming. Why, then, should not the Christians at home apply themselves to the problem? If a few members of a young people's society, or a few Sunday School teachers united, the necessary support of a native worker would easily be raised, and they would have the satisfaction of having a representative of their own in the great missionary field.

Joining the Church in Childhood

THOSE who would shut the door of church membership on childhood are far less numerous than in a former period. The church invites the lambs of the flock to come within her fold, and once there she continues lovingly to lead them in the paths of righteousness.

Many pastors have classes in which they personally instruct children and young people who desire to be enrolled as members of Christ's church. No greater mistake can be made than to discourage a boy or girl who, loving Jesus Christ, wishes to profess his name before men. Equally, there can be no mistake much greater than to omit all Christian guidance and training after converts have been received as communicants. They are still in need of affectionate watchfulness, and as soon as possible they should be led to assume some definite work adapted to their years. The Christian Endeavor society, the Epworth League, the Junior Mission Band, and that nursery of the church, the Sunday School, present opportunities in which the young may find fields of occupation for the Master.

To join the church is only one step. It is the outward and visible way of showing where one stands. Whoever joins the church also joins the company of the Lord Jesus, and statistics show that those who postpone decision and declaration until childhood is over and youth past, seldom come to the Lord's table in later life. Every Sunday School is Christ's recruiting station.

Death, the Portal to Life

SCIENTISTS tell us that the slavish dread of death, which afflicts a large proportion of the human race, is the result of ignorance; that the act of dissolution is as painless as that of being born, and that, in practically all cases, nature has run up the flag of surrender before that event comes, and pain ceases with resistance. Dying, they say, is tranquil and painless.

Such is the general affirmation of science, and it is doubtless true, speaking in a purely physical sense. But the fact remains that to the unpardoned sinner there may be long hours, days and weeks of mental agony and remorse before nature interposes her balm of relief and unconsciousness.

In a recent address in New York before a gathering of scientists, it was stated that some 20,000 persons in this country annually die of violence, either by accidents on the street, in the railroad trains, in factories, mines, or elsewhere. The figure is a startling one. Perhaps it is not often well or effective to appeal to the danger of sudden death as a reason why men should not delay to seek God's forgiveness, because death is not the grand occasion for which the salvation of the Lord is provided. Forgiveness and grace would still be wanted, and would be indispensable, even if we did not have to die, to bring us into harmony with God, into peace with ourselves, and into the rest and joy which are only possible when sin in us has been overcome.

Appeals that are based on alarm make slight impression. Most people are not easily made to realize the nearness of death, nor to think of it in connection with themselves. They even sometimes trifle and mock at it. They seem to defy it and sometimes even to court it. Yet such an attitude is not to be accepted as evidence of real preparation or fitness for the change from time to eternity. There are people who, knowing nothing of spiritual religion, do not fear to die, because they are physically brave, and spiritually blind.

So it is frequently with the ungodly; it often happens that they are in no dread of death while they live, and they even lie down and die stoically. None the less, their fearless leap into eternity involves a terrible waking. But he whose trust is stayed upon God, and whose soul is filled with the divine peace, can meet the great change calmly, knowing that it is only the portal to the more glorious life beyond.

Causes of National Decay

EVER since the world began, it has been the peculiar privilege, apparently, of a certain class of people, brilliant but eccentric, to do things that set other people talking. It is only a little while since a clever Englishwoman startled society on two continents by her bold suggestion of "trial marriages," but her book was promptly vetoed as "wicked," and already it has seemingly passed into the limbo of forgotten literature. Now an American, more clever and far more serious than her English sister, comes forward with a book in which she foreshadows the extinction of the American nation. This, she holds, will be mainly due to the idleness of our women, and their disinclination to assume the cares and responsibilities of rearing large families. This lady gives point to her criticism by calling attention to the fact that many women prefer dogs as pets. Such people are abnormal, of course. New York, she says:

> has a large class of these parasites. Rome had them. Greece had them. They are always a cancer spot in any civilization. They live from the labor of others, and they are the most exacting of all womankind. Our idle women and our declining birth-rate are results of industrial and economic conditions, which, unless rected, will destroy the American race, if not the nation. An cans have become economically conscious. They have awake to the responsibilities of parenthood under present conditi and only the irresponsible have large families. Americans of middle class are too enlightened to take the responsibility of ing large families that they cannot provide for properly. Un present conditions their incomes are not large enough. I speaking now of the honest and not the idle class.
> If the conditions are the result of causes so widely tributed, it would seem hardly just to criticize woman the chief offender. We imagine, however, that clever critic had in mind, when she wrote, the startl extravagances and eccentricities in which the idle r occasionally indulge. It is only a few days since newspapers printed the story of a Chicago woman, w while visiting in Colorado, trimmed a Christmas tree her six dogs, and hung upon its branches gifts that ma children would have envied—candies, nuts, tidbits chicken tied up with baby-blue ribbon, silk dog-qu and blankets and gold and silver collars for each of animals. We can readily believe that incidents of t sort would excite varied comment among womanki generally; but fortunately such freaks are few and between. Certainly it would be foolish to regard se ously any prediction that is founded on the vagaries o comparatively small portion of the American peop We prefer the optimistic view, which assures us that o nation, far from having reached its maximum, is st developing toward better things, and that the mothe sisters and daughters of our land—the noblest of the kind!—will exert a potent and beneficent influence that direction.

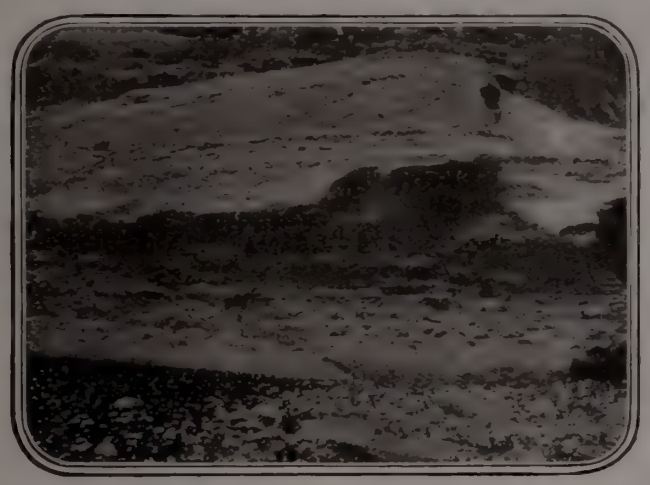
The Projected Tunnel Under the Sea, Between England and France, and the Chief Engineers

An International Tunnel

ES ago, geologists tell us, England was probably joined to France, but that was a prehistoric time. The earliest maps and records show that as far as human history goes, the sea has rolled between two countries, and England has had occasion more nce to congratulate herself on the fact. The voyom one shore to the other, though short, is often rying to the passenger, who, if he is liable to seaess, is sure to discover it in making the trip. ea of saving him the unpleasantness, and facilitaavel between the two countries, suggested to the ot engineer, M. Thome de Gamond, seventy years he project of a tunnel under the sea. He found etween Dover in England, and Calais in France, are about thirty miles apart, the bed of the sea is sed of gray chalk. This stratum is easy to excaand is impervious to water, an ideal material for work. M. de Gamond organized a company to uct a tunnel, and after some financial vicissitudes, ing a change of management, work was commenced. vas entirely successful, justifying the opinions of gineers. The shaft was driven about a mile and a r under the hen public n was aroused e interference English Parent was in-. The Parliament could not be convinced that s safe to thwart the provision nature had made for nal safety and refused to endorse the project.

e scheme abandoned at that time has been revived, the new friendship promoted by King Edward has n the two peoples together. A bill was introduced in ament last month to authorize the construction of the el, and as it is favored by the leaders of both politiarties, it will probably pass. The company proposes y two tunnels at a depth of 150 feet below the bed e sea, each eighteen feet in diameter, and forty-five apart, with a drainage gallery beneath to carry off rated water. It is estimated that the cost will be y million dollars, which will be divided equally ben the two countries, and that the whole work may nished in seven years. Strong fortifications are to ected at each end, so that in the event of war, either n may guard the exit or even destroy the tunnel. ay be assumed that if the difficulties arising from nal fear are overcome, the tunnel will be constructed, for the engineers say that the natural difficulties are not formidable, so skilful has man become in dealing with the forces of nature. In this matter of skill in the control of nature, though unhappily not in character, man becomes in every generation more like God.

Who maketh a way in the sea, and a path in the mighty waters (Isa. 43: 16).



The Chalk Stratum to be Cut

The Exit at the English End

Warning of a Landslide

A dangerous landslide occurred a few days ago on the West Shore Railroad, near Newburgh, N.Y. A farmer who lives near the place was sitting in his house in the evening, and in the intense stillness, about eight o'clock, heard a low rumble followed by a crash. He started up with a vague apprehension of danger, and ran with a lantern to the cutting beside the track. Following the edge he came to a huge gap. Holding up the lantern, he could see a wall of debris thirty feet high piled on the rails. He knew that the first train to reach the spot would be one from Weehawken, N. J. He was an aged man, but he ran as fast as he could to meet the train, swinging his lantern as he went. The train was approaching at a speed of fifty miles an hour, but the engineer saw the warning lantern and slowed down. The train was brought to a standstill only a few yards from the heap of rocks and earth that covered the tracks for a distance of a hundred feet. Trainmen were despatched both ways to signal approaching trains and gangs of men summoned to remove the debris. It was not until dawn of the next morning that all was cleared away. It was then realized that a fearful disaster had been averted only by the farmer's exertions. It was a valuable service that he rendered; but all his efforts would have been futile if the engineer had not heeded the warning, which, not being a regular railroad signal, he might have disregarded. The Christian who warns another of moral or spiritual danger is sometimes bidden mind his own business, and disaster follows in spite of warning.

He heard the sound of the trumpet and took not warning; his blood shall be upon him; but he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul (Ezek. 33: 5).

Deifying a Teacher

An Imperial edict issued from the palace in Peking, China, announces the promotion of Confucius to divine rank. It is similar in effect to the decrees which confer the exalted button on ruling mandarins. The sayings of the famous teacher have been held in devout reverence in China for more than two thousand years, but his person, until now, has never been an object of worship. It is declared, on the authority of the Emperor and Empress-Dowager, that Confucius holds the same rank in heaven as on earth. A curious reason is given for this dogma. It is that it is an act of deference to the scruples of Christian students, who have objected to paying divine honors to the tablets erected to Confucius in the colleges, on the ground that he was not entitled to them. He is now declared to be divine, with the expectation that the Christian students will no longer object to ko-to to his memorials. The Christian students will be less disposed than before to worship the great teacher who has this strange honor thrust upon him. Not by the edict of Emperors or Popes can man be raised to the Godhead, and the attempt shows how backward China is in modern culture.

Shall a man make gods unto himself and they are no gods? (Jer. 16:20).

Prevalent Superstitions

A Washington, D. C., journal publishes a long list of superstitions which, it says, survive even in this enlightened time among people who are regarded as intelligent. It appears that there is no country where they are so prevalent as in Austro-Hungary. There it has been necessary "to change the number of box 13 in the Imperial Opera House and the Imperial Court Theatre, because the public objected to sitting in a box bearing this unlucky number. But this superstition reaches its height in medicine. Speaking of the health exhibition, Dr. Heinrich Grun declared that in many instances the existence of superstition was a menace to public health. In the Austrian hospitals one finds no block or pavilion 13, no ward 13 or staircase 13. Very few patients will consent to be operated on on the 13th. And in that respect Friday, too, is considered just as unlucky." The beliefs in superstitious remedies are also prevalent in that and other countries, and have been brought here, where they flourish. "German Canadians believe that the hair of a dog, the pelt of a black cat and the skin of a snake possess curative qualities. For erysipelas, a fire is lighted and a pinch of ashes from it is rubbed on the skin, to the accompaniment of a saying. This remedy for cramps is used to-day in other places than Georgetown. On going to rest, put your slippers under the bed and turn the soles upward. In the wards of Garfield Hospital last fall there was a patient who insisted on keeping several apples under his bed to help the dropsy. The things that people will carry within their pockets, wear around their necks or bodies, or put on their fingers are legion." It is strange that men should be so credulous while the sure remedy for sin, the worst of all diseases, is often offered to them in vain.

Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered (Jer. 8: 22).

THE AMERICAN WOMAN'S BURDEN

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

AMERICAN men are keenly interested in public affairs. Notwithstanding an impression to the contrary, American women know little and care less about the affairs of state or nation, than they do about any other subject of general concern. Very few women are able to tell an inquirer the name of their representative in Congress, and three out of six are aware of a certain hesitation, when suddenly confronted with a query as to the personality and even the name of their Governor. State, county and city officials occupy so small an amount of their time and thought, that they do not burden their memories with items relating to them, and to affairs that naturally drift into the keeping of their husbands and brothers. Wherever one finds a woman who takes an enthusiastic interest in public affairs, excepting alone in the culminating periods of a heated national canvass, one is almost sure to discover that she belongs to a family where the men adhere strongly and intelligently to well-defined party lines.

In other words, American women not being voters to a great extent, have on their minds and in their hands matters that seem to them more urgent, more peremptory and more worth while their attention than matters directly or potentially related to politics.

Even in those newer States of the West, where women have been admitted to suffrage, experience shows that they take a languid and intermittent, if not perfunctory interest in their responsibilities toward the State. There are shining exceptions, but they merely prove the rule.

The women of our country in very large numbers are bearing the burden of duties that they can neither delegate nor shirk. In a few of the larger towns, women of wealth are able to carry on their housekeeping, aided by a staff of well-trained and efficient servants, and they have, therefore, immunity from the drudgery of housekeeping, and have leisure for study, travel and society. The great mass of American women have no such decided advantage, and are compelled to give their attention and their strength as well as their time, to the daily ordering of their homes. With them, the margin left over for acquaintance with politics is very narrow.

I heard the other day of a college professor and his wife, both of whom are people of brilliant ability and versatile information. The man engaged in moulding the characters of young fellows who are presently to be among the leading citizens of the future, received a salary that would be scorned by the chef of a second or third rate hotel in New York or Chicago. His wife, who some years ago was graduated with distinction from an Eastern college, and who has studied along special lines in Berlin and Vienna, does her own housework, conducts the primary education of her three small boys, mends their trousers and their stockings, and gives lessons in music to the daughters of her neighbors. She, at least, has a life so full already, that public affairs are on its outer edge, and touch her only occasionally when her husband comes in, pleased and excited from a meeting of his townsmen, where he, perhaps, has made a ringing speech.

In suburban life, let it be ever so refined, ever so beautiful in its environment, the trail of the serpent is everywhere visible and the cry of American women is for "help." Not, be it noted, help about the great causes that must one day lock horns in a tremendous political contest, but in those smaller though not less vital interests that have to do with the nursery, the kitchen and the drawing-room. When men return hungry from business, they must be fed. At the moment neither love nor money assures the suburban matron that she may obtain a cook, a nurse a housemaid or a scullion worth her salt. Poles, Russians, Hungarians and negroes, alike untaught and untrained, many of them too ignorant to respond intelligently to training, demand enormous wages in return for which they almost drive their employers to insanity.

The hour has not struck as yet when the suburban housekeeper may devote much time or thought to current politics. Whether or not she be permitted to vote, whether or not she own to a pronounced sentiment for or against equal suffrage for women, has practically nothing to do with the case. She is bearing the white woman's burden, or, strictly speaking, the educated woman's burden, in that she is wrestling with the subject of home-making under difficulties, and trying, as best she may, to uplift the host of immigrants who are hopefully knocking at our doors.

Nevertheless, there are themes that perennially interest women, old and young, cultured and illiterate alike. The woman of fashion and the woman who leaves her baby at the day nursery while she goes out to her day's work, share precisely the same opinion when there is forced upon them any question that assails the integrity of the home or the permanence of the family.

When, a short time ago, Mr. Reed Smoot observed airily that he had no reputation to lose among American women, and, therefore, he should throw his influence in the scale for the army canteen, he announced a real truth. It would be extremely difficult to find a decent woman anywhere beyond the confines ruled by the Mormon hierarchy, who upholds Mormonism. Millions of names affixed to petitions must have convi Mr. Smoot that, politically, he has not a remna friends among the women of the United States. Al as a unit, American women are opposed to the cur drink, and refuse to listen to arguments that direct indirectly favor the saloon.

Women acting individually and through their c have been successful in bringing to pass greatly ne reforms in the administration of justice to juvenil linquents, and in the management of prisons wher male offenders are held under restraint.

It must be acknowledged, too, that hundreds of towns and villages are clean, well-kept, adorned flowers and parks, and protected from dangers to public health through the active agency of l less and energetic women, who carry into town housekeeping the spirit that pervades housekeeping of the single home.

To sum the matter up, we cannot clain American women either the knowledge o interest in public measures and representa men that is almost universal in Great Brit Cultivated women, either in England or Colonies, are usually keen politicians. An can women are the reverse, yet American wo are never indifferent when the issue is a m one, or when it appears to them that some a of visible and immediate importance is at st

Sing to Your Children

In these days when babies are brought u scientific rules; when their food is weighed measured, and their little lives are ordained them in accordance with a carefully appoin schedule, the good old custom of singing to children is passing away with some other hom things. When a mother held her little one in arms and rocked her to sleep, singing, "H a-bye baby upon the tree-top," or

Hush, my babe, lie still and slumber,
Holy angels guard thy bed,
Heavenly blessings without number Gently falling on thy head, there came into the infant life a blissful se of protection and brooding that is wanting wl a mother never sings in her nursery. The pass of the mother-song is to be regretted. In twentieth century we have the gramophone the telephone and the pianola and many a m ern improvement, but these do not take the pl of the old sweetness, the familiar intimacy, a the constant hovering that used to be taken granted when a mother sang to her children, a bent over their little faces to kiss them in rosy sleep that followed cradle songs.

Illustration and Application

...at truths in this lesson need to be illustrated to ... them clearer and more impressive! God accepts ... r only when the heart is in it. The impenitent ...ot offer acceptable prayer or worship. Because ...ph was purer, and for ... reason, and as the ...ngest, more favored by ...ather, his brothers hated ..., threw him in a pit to die, and spared him only to ...e more money by selling him as a slave. Even ...iam, the prophetess, became jealous of the honors ...owed by God and by the people on Moses, and ...l showed, in the curse of leprosy that he put upon ... how that sin looked in the God's eye view. Daniel, ... pure, brave statesman, was also envied by men, who ... rwards sent him to the den of lions. Most of all, the ...y of the Scribes and Pharisees because of the popu- ...ty of Jesus, led them to crucify Christ. So deadly a ...n we may well seek to keep out of our hearts.

Things that Poison the Heart

...hat are these truths like in nature? Artificial trees ... flowers that have correct form, but are dead, and ...e no fragrance or fruit, are pictures of worship that ... no living, loving heart behind it. As to Cain's envy ... murder, "Do men gather grapes of thorns?" If we ...w thorn bushes to grow in our hearts in the form of ...red and envy and jealousy, we may be sure it will ...ld no fruit of the Spirit, but only the fruits of sin and ...ne. A unique "Poison show window," in a New York ...y drug store displays little piles of various deadly ...gs, placed in a semicircle around a human skull. In ... centre of the semicircle are these words: "Every- ...ng in this window is poison." Besides the drugs, the ...er poisons are a cigarette held between the jaws of ... skull, a deck of cards, some dice, a quart of whiskey, ...l a quart of wine. A heart full of poisons such as ...y, jealousy, hatred—that is worse than a window full. ...A little plant had been broken and crushed till it ...med utterly dead, and had been cast out into the street. The gardener found it and took it into his garden and planted and tenderly nurtured it. The sun poured his summer beams upon it, and the clouds poured their genial rains upon it, and it began to live, a graceful and beautiful plant, with tender branches, green leaves and fragrant flowers. So the most sinful heart, if it will penitently ask the divine Gardener for restoration, shall be restored to strength and beauty.

"Cain rose up against Abel, his brother, and slew him"

The Beginnings of Sin

What are these truths like in common life? Cain's murder was the last in a series of acts. He first hated his brother, then quarreled with him, then killed him. Here is a good illustration of the importance of guarding against the small beginnings of wrong doing: "Dear me," said little Janet, "I buttoned just one button wrong, and that makes all the rest go wrong"; and she tugged and fretted as if the poor button were at fault for her trouble. "Patience, patience, my dear," said mamma. "The next time look out for the first wrong button, then you'll keep all the rest right. And," added mamma, "look out for the first wrong deed of any kind; another and another is sure to follow." Janet remembered how one day, not long ago, she struck Baby Alice. That was the first wrong deed. Then she denied having done it. That was another. Then she was unhappy and cross all day because she had told a lie. What a long list of buttons fastened wrong just because the first one was wrong.

A rebel has no right to send bouquets to a king until he lays down the weapons of his rebellion. So Cain had no right to be offering a thankoffering until he had prayed, "God be merciful to me a sinner," by a bleeding sin offering. This means that saying prayers at night is useless, if we refuse to submit our hearts to God, and to put away our sins. Two boys were playing ball. One of them wanted to keep the bat when it was the other's turn. "Stop," said John, "it is my turn now." "I am going to have another turn first," said Frank. "No you shan't." "Yes I will." "There, then, take that," said John, and he struck him in the face. Thus from talking they went to fighting, until at last Frank, who was thrown to the ground, took out his jack-knife, and stabbed John, who was holding him down, near the heart, so that he died a few days afterward. Anger has begun many a murder, as envy began the first one.

Disappointed Parents

What a contrast between what Eve hoped for her first-born, and what he became! She seems to have mistaken him for the promised "seed," for she says at his birth, as some render it: "I have gotten a man, even Jehovah, he who will be." He whom she hoped was Christ proved to be Cain. We shall often see as strange a contrast if we compare the mother's cradle picture, "what he was to be," with the real manhood picture "what he was." Every child has the capacity to be Christlike or Cainlike. There is a legend of a priest who was called Fra Angelo —Brother Angel—who gave up his holy place and became a robber, and they called him Fra Diavolo—Brother Devil. We can make ourselves very near to either angels or devils in character, as we choose. There is a great deal of jealousy among otherwise good men. They see others occupying positions which they would like to fill, but to which they are not called, and this, instead of prompting them to qualify themselves for such positions, only excites unkind feeling toward those who fill them, and whom they regard as more fortunate than themselves. Men who are always seeking responsible positions are generally the least fit to fill them, while men of real worth seldom seek the place, but wait for the place to seek them. Positions of trust are always positions of responsibility, which men of true merit, unless duty requires it, do not care to fill. Ambition would lift a man up, but jealousy would pull others down. It is a mean spirit, which no good man should indulge.

Dr. Guthrie says: "A man may feel assured that he has begun to rise in the world so soon as he hears the buzz of detractors, and feels their poisoned stings." Thus, indeed, is not a bad test of merit, just as we know that to be the finest and the ripest fruit which bears the marks of having been attacked by wasp, or hornet, or other such winged or wingless insects.

> He who ascends the mountain peaks,
> Shall find the loftiest heights
> Most wrapped in clouds and snow.

What are these truths like in history? A boy named William, who often got angry and threw his books about, on reading the story of exclaimed: "I tell you he was grand! I like him." "It is a pity not to have a successor of that king here and now," said his father, significantly. "I know a William not far away who has about as much to conquer, according to his position, as the old king, if he only chooses to 'rule his own spirit.'" "It would be harder for this William," said the boy, coloring. "Hard things are not impossible, if they are right. It is a pity to have all the conquerors belong to past history, when we need them now."

Cain's hatred of Abel because he was a purer man, is a history oft repeated. At the time Aristides was banished, when the people were inscribing the names on the shells, it is reported that an illiterate burgher came up to Aristides, whom he took for some ordinary person, and, giving him his shell, desired him to write Aristides upon it. The good man, surprised at the adventure, asked him whether Aristides had ever injured him. "No," said he, "nor do I even know him; but it vexes me to hear him everywhere called 'the Just.'" Aristides made no answer, but took the shell, and, having written his own name upon it, returned it to the man.

Goldsmith is one of the great men who allowed the small vice of envy to hold a place in his heart. He felt all praise to others was taken from himself. We are told by Boswell, that once when Dr. Johnson, in the presence of Goldsmith, spoke in flattering terms of the performance of a clown in a circus he had seen that day. Goldsmith grew so furiously jealous of the approbation, that he leaped from his seat full of anger, declaring he could do the feats better himself. And then he actually began to turn summersaults there on the carpet.

The Habitation of Envy

This may well picture to us the folly of our petty envyings. Instead of Cain envying Abel, he should emulate him. We are reminded that the poets of classic literature were wont to say that Envy dwelt in a gloomy cavern by the sea; her figure was gaunt and pale, her vision was distorted, her teeth were black, her breath was bitter; she had no joy, save in others' pain; she had no rest while others were happy; she was ever in suffering anguish because she gnawed her own flesh. Socrates used to define envy as "the saw of the soul." It cuts raggedly into the sensitivity of the man who habitually indulges it; it renders him the unhappiest person alive. We have seen an entire evening destroyed in the experience of a young maiden, because of the applause bestowed upon a companion for singing a song.

Abel's spirit of penitence is illustrated by the case of good old Cotton Mather, who used to receive a great many communications from his enemies through the mail, often abusive and violent in misrepresentation. After his death the packet was discovered among his papers, carefully sealed from notice, so that no retaliation of any injury could be made even by impulsive friends: the label was, "Libels! Father, forgive them!"

GREATEST OF MOSLEM COLLEGES

BY D. L. PIERSON

THE "Gamia El Azhar" of Cairo is the intellectual centre of Islam. It is famed the world over as the great Mohammedan University, where eight or ten thousand students study to become sheikhs, or teachers, in their native villages. Some years ago when Dr. Lansing, of the American Mission, wished to visit this hotbed of fanaticism he was warned that it would be at the risk of his life, and finally only ventured to do so after securing permission from the city authorities. As he entered the gate, he overheard the students say in Arabic, "He enters, but if Allah wills it, he will never go out," meaning that he would pay the forfeit with his life. Dr. Lansing was, however, under guard, and received no hurt at their hands. For many years after, each visitor needed to secure special permission and the escort of a government cavass in order to make a visit to the Azhar in safety.

To-day, so great has been the change that we not only went to the celebrated Mosque University without guard, but we actually preached Christ within the walls. Early in April, with a Cairo friend and a missionary from Arabia, Dr. S. M. Zweimer, I visited the Azhar Mosque. It is an imposing structure, covering several acres, but is in a poor state of repair. At the "Gate of the Barbers," where all students formerly had their heads shaved, we were obliged to don Turkish slippers, a modern substitute for putting off the shoes on holy ground. Under the escort of a guide we passed into the main court, where hundreds of students were seated on the ground in the bright sunlight. They were mostly gathered in little groups around various sheikhs, or teachers, who were instructing them in the Koran and its commentaries. The students, of whom there are said to be from 10,000 to 13,000 in this university, ranged in age from ten to thirty and remain here from three to ten years. They study reading and writing arabic, logic, poetry, literature, theology and philosophy peculiar to Islam. Some of the younger students were swaying back and forth from the waist up, as they sat reciting, at the top of their voices, portions of the Koran. Others were practising writing on peculiar wooden boards, or pieces of tin cut from American kerosene cans. Others were discussing points of logic and theology with their professors, and were learning how to baffle Christian missionaries in arguments on the Bible and the Trinity. Here and there were students stretched out on the pavement, sleeping in the warm sun, and again other groups took recess, squatting around a common dish and eating bread and rice.

The court and side rooms of the Azhar are not only study and recitation rooms, but dormitories and dining-rooms as well. The students are not asked to pay tuition, as the Mosque is richly endowed. They live on what they supply for themselves, and what is given them by faithful Moslems.

The various study rooms or riwaks around the court are assigned to students of different nationalities—Abyssinians, Turks, Moroccans, Indians, and one is occupied by blind students. These rooms, with their confusion of tongues and disorder of contents, are the opposite of what a Westerner would consider indicative of a collegiate education.

As we entered one of these riwaks we saw a cat, which was evidently very much at home, and Dr. Zweimer asked one of the men if the beast did not make the room unclean for prayer. This started a discussion, which ended with the declaration that if Tabby had wet feet, she made the place unclean, but if they were dry she was clean. We stopped before another group and asked one of the students to write for us on a paper. He copied the Moslem creed "There is one God and Mohammed is the prophet of God." In response, Dr. Zweimer took the paper and wrote, "Jesus Christ is the light of the world," in Arabic. This started an explanation and discussion, and in a few moments the students were listening to the Gospel. But as the crowd was increasing, our guide hurried us on.

We stopped at other groups in the various rooms, now eating bread and rice out of the common dish, now watching boys make the Moslem toothbrush (without which they hold that prayers are ineffectual), and entering into discussion with a sheikh on some poi Moslem or Christian theology. Now and then was the suspicion of a hiss from some fanatical stu who disliked the invasion of the sacred precincts o Mosque on the part of "Christian dogs"; but on whole, our reception was good-natured and cor Once, when Dr. Zweimer triumphed over our guid an argument, before a group of Moslems, we were ried away, and the guide remonstrated: "You bea that time, you mustn't do that here."

One of the noticeable things was the absence of niture in the Mosque. A carved pulpit, one or reading desks, and some stoves were almost the movable objects, beside the mats which covered floors. Two chairs of state for the Grand Sh were chained to the pillars, lest they be carried by the theological students.

Our experience proves, that, with tact, a missio may preach Christ and his Gospel in very centre of Islam. The crowd g ered now and then in large number that it seemed best to move on; but t was no hostile demonstration, such as t would have been in former years.

Leaving the Azhar, we went wit Christian convert from Islam (a grad of the Azhar), to the shop of a very oted follower of the prophet, who written many tracts against the Tri and other Christian doctrines. Here sat down in the Turkish style and ent into conversation, again preaching Gospel to the crowd of Moslems that s gathered. Then, moving on to anot shop, a similar meeting followed. Here leader of the opposition argued, "Christ a Man?" "Yes." "Did he hav body like ours?" "Yes." "Then his b performed all the functions of our bo and he could not be God, for God has flesh and bones?" This was the teach of the Azhar, and it was apparently n convincing to the crowd around the sh Our answer was, "the spiritual and div divine nature of Christ tabernacled o temporarily in human form"; but the Moslem cannot readily understa for the Trinity and Christ as the God-Man are rocks on which Moslem thought goes shipwreck.

In view of the progress made during the past ten fifteen years, it is not impossible to conceive of the Azh from which hundreds now go out to perpetuate the fa theology of Islam, becoming a centre for the disse nation of Christian truth. The thought taxes faith, i with God all things are possible. Perchance, the ti may come, as was boldly suggested by Dr. Zweim when a conference of Christian forces for the convers of Mohammedans, may be held even within the w of the Azhar itself.

undertaking cost, but it was estimated at more than five million dollars. In her mind, philanthropy was ever associated with religion. She had no faith in any scheme for the benefit of the poor that did not include religious help. She sought out churches in the poorest districts of the city, where it was impossible for a clergyman to find support. She would put the church in thorough repair, renovate it, and give a permanent endowment for the continuance of the services. If she found a district without a church, she would build one, find a hard-working clergyman, and place him in charge with an assured income.

The life of Miss Burdett-Coutts soon became one of the busiest. She had advisers, but she exercised personal supervision over all her enterprises, never wasting her money and always taking care that it was placed where if had a fair prospect of doing good. In Spitalfields, one of the poorest districts of London, she opened a sewing school for girls and had them trained by skilled teachers, and when they were competent she used her influence with the government to obtain contracts which provided them with remunerative occupation. In one of the trade disputes, she provided funds for the voyage to Australia of any of the strikers who desired to go, and her offer was eagerly accepted. She had a Shoeblack Mission, which took bright boys from their stands in the streets, educated them and helped them to enter industrial occupations. During an epidemic in the city she established a hospital and dispensary and paid the salaries of physicians and nurses for gratuitous service. Nor did she limit her philanthropy to the deserving poor. She was a pioneer in founding institutions for the rescue of fallen women, and in organizing a system to aid discharged prisoners, who were trying to lead an honest life.

When the Crimean War broke out, Florence Nightingale found in Miss Burdett-Coutts one of her most liberal supporters and a whole corps of her nurses were provided from the same generous source. In Ireland, too, her name is enthusiastically honored. None of the fishermen who bore the brunt of the distress can forget the money she provided to carry them through the dreadful winter, nor the fishing school she established to teach their boys the mysteries of boat building. Appeals reached her in masses from foreign lands. She established the Turkish Compassionate Fund, for the relief of the sufferers by Turkey's many wars, chiefly for the widows and orphans, and was the main contributor. Hearing of the suffering of the people of Jerusalem through the defective water supply, she furnish the means for restoring the ancient aqueducts. T work was never thoroughly carried out, but the Sult who probably profited by the gift, conferred on M Burdett-Coutts the order of Madjidieh, the first time was ever given to a lady.

The home of Miss Burdett Coutts was ever open distinguished men in all departments. David Livin stone, the missionary explorer, was a welcome gue when he was in England, and found in her purse source of help in his urgent need. General (Chine Gordon was an intimate friend, and a host of good a great men were encouraged to visit her and sugge spheres of usefulness. In 1871 Queen Victoria reco nized her munificent service by conferring a peera upon her, and from that time forward she was know as the Baroness Burdett-Coutts.

One of her most efficient aids during her philanthrop career was her American friend, Mr. William As mead-Bartlett, a native of Philadelphia, Pa. He went t Turkey to distribute the charity above mentioned, an to Ireland, and was the general adviser of the Barones Her confidence and respect for him grew until, in 188 she married him, in spite of the opposition of he friends and prospective recipients of her bounty. Re cognizing in him a man of a spirit kindred to her own a man devoted to philanthropy and the cause of th poor; a man, too, of the highest intelligence and energy she overlooked, as he did, the disparity in their ages and found in him a companion in her declining years.

Then the writer was invited to speak. Can you imagine my audience of Kimono-robed little Buddhas, watching me with questioning eyes? I could not speak one word in their tongue; but I had an interpreter in Miss Phelps. I took for a text one of the little ones at my feet—Toru, a mite of a four-year-old, who came to me. I lifted her to the table. I wish you could have heard her sing.

Little Toru

Many of my listeners were less than four years old. Between Toru and my old watch we children had a great time. I never had a more appreciative audience. At the close they all said: "We understand. Toru we can't see, only her outside, like the case of your watch, is visible. The case will be buried some day. Toru will be buried, too; but her spirit will be carried by angels to Jesus, who will give her a more beautiful body."

Sweet little Toru and her nearly 300 associates constitute the best argument in favor of the permanent maintenance of the Home in Sendai, the only shelter for those helpless little ones. I have Men stand ready to buy Toru and her sweet-faced, kimono-draped, doll-like mates—to buy them for the bagnio. Agents of homes of shame swarmed through the famine district last year, buying attractive girls at prices as low as two dollars. Toru, prettier than a cherry blossom, must not be sold!

In the name of the girls of Nippon and of all their friends in that land of children, more beautiful than the flowers, I thank THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers and the hosts of other friends who have fed the hungry, clothed the naked, sheltered the homeless in the time of famine, and who will, I am sure, continue to care for the dependent little ones.

A Night at the "Idle Hour"

By MAY WOOLEVER

IT had been a profitable evening for the Idle Hour saloon. Pay-day at the factory, and the thirst-producing temperature of a mid-July night had both tended to swell the stream of patrons who poured into the wide open doorway of the most popular saloon in Courtney.

Upon this particular night, as Joe Brandon, the proprietor, watched the last shuffling figure descend the two dangerous steps leading from the saloon door to the street, and then closed, and as he locked the door from within, the expression upon his face was scarcely one of as complete satisfaction as the evening's business might have seemed to warrant. He turned off all except the night light, and going behind the counter, opened the money-drawer and counted its contents.

This latter proceeding was usually a most interesting and gratifying one to Joe. This evening, as he slowly counted the unusually large pile of coins which lay in the drawer before him and transferred them to a bag upon the counter, there was not the usual gleam of gratified avarice in his eye, but rather, a disturbed, half angry expression, which made evident the fact that something of an unpleasant nature had crossed his path.

The secret of the matter lay in a small white envelope now in his coat pocket. Early that evening, there had been an unusual occurrence at the Idle Hour. A woman had entered the saloon, not through the "Ladies' Entrance," but by the front doorway. She was somewhat past middle age, well and becomingly dressed, and possessing a face of refinement and culture, a figure markedly out of place among that boisterous company of rough men and boys. There was a slight flush upon her pale face as she advanced, and passing quietly among the tables where the men sat drinking and playing cards, handed them each a leaflet. She received a quick, surprised stare from most of the men, while to some of the younger faces a blush of shame arose as she said, "I am sorry to see so young a man in such a place as this." She spoke little, but her presence restrained, for the time at least, the noisy hilarity of the crowd. When she had completed the round of the tables, she approached the counter behind which Joe stood.

"A temperance crank!" he muttered to himself. "One of those White Ribbon women who 'tend to every body's business except their own."

As she came toward him, Joe stiffened. He threw back his broad shoulders, set his square jaws in firm defiance.

"You are the proprietor?" asked the woman in a quiet voice.

Joe merely nodded in reply to the woman's question, and as she handed him an envelope addressed to "The Proprietor," with the request that he read it at his leisure, he accepted it from her hand without a word, and the woman passed out of the saloon. When he opened it an hour later, he found it to contain two slips of paper, upon one was printed an extract from an address by Dr. Talmage, entitled: "No Counter Between You and Your Customers." And upon the other, in a neat, feminine hand, was written:

DEAR SIR:—You may say, "The Government grants me a license to sell liquor, and if I do not sell it, others will, and they will receive the benefit." But the question before you is this: What is the effect of my selling? And what will be the result to my own soul?

That last question, "What will be the result to my own soul?" seemed to repeat itself in Joe's mind. In all his life the matter of his soul had never troubled or interested him. He took up the bag of money and deposited it in the safe at the farther end of the saloon, and then passing out of the back door, started for home.

Although the hour was late, the heat was oppressive, and upon arriving home, instead of entering the house, Joe threw himself into a hammock which hung invitingly at one end of the veranda. He had not more than comfortably settled himself, when the disturbing question arose in his mind as to whether he had locked the back door upon leaving the saloon. The more he thought of it, the less certain he was that he had done so, until, finally, realizing that there would be no further rest for him until he had satisfied himself in the matter, he arose and retraced his steps to the Idle Hour.

He was surprised and startled upon coming within sight of the saloon, to see a bright light streaming from the window. What could it mean? He had a distinct recollection of having turned off the lights. Upon near approach, he saw also that the front doors were thrown wide open, and that the figure of a woman stood in the doorway. It did not require a second glance for Joe to recognize in this woman, the one who, a few hours before had visited his saloon with her message of warning and rebuke.

"You have come, as has been decreed," she said, as Joe paused before the doorway. "To-night is the twenty-fifth anniversary of the opening of the Idle Hour saloon. To celebrate this event, a reception is presently to be held. The guests will be those to whom in the last twenty-five years you have passed across your counter the glass that intoxicates. They have been invited to meet you here, and, contrary to the usual custom, the guests will provide the entertainment. Each will have a story to tell, and your part is but to listen."

She then led the bewildered Joe to the rear end of the saloon. Upon a small platform, just in front of a pile of beer and whiskey barrels, stood a chair, to which the woman pointed, saying: "This is the seat appointed for you. The time has now arrived in which you are to meet your customers face to face, with no counter between you."

Joe seemed to have no will but to obey. He was no sooner seated than, looking toward the front doorway, he saw the shambling figure of a man enter. He recognized at once the besotted features of Tom Dexter, who had been a daily visitant at the Idle Hour for many years. The man looked neither to right nor left, but came directly toward Joe; when within a few feet of Joe's chair he paused.

"It seems that the stories we have to tell here to-night," said he, addressing Joe, "are not the kind generally called for in this place. They are not of the jolly sort—at least, mine is not.

"It isn't every one who remembers a time when I was a man, and not, as now, a drunken loafer and—worse. But you remember, Joe. It was the night that you opened the Idle Hour, twenty-five years ago, that I drank my first glass. You called me in to look over the place, and then invited me to sample some liquor you had in stock. I hesitated at first, because, as a boy, I had been taught to let the stuff alone; but you urged, and I yielded. I found it was good to the taste, and I continued the occasional glass. Then came the frequent indulgence, and the thirst for something stronger. This part of my story is, I suppose, just like thousands of others; but there is a blacker page, the blackness of which no one but myself and God has ever seen until to-night.

"You remember when my baby died young man with a face that might

"I have not been a student in this college of vice for very many years," said he, "but I have been taking the full course in half time, and I think I shall graduate with the highest honors of the class at an earlier age than the average. I came of respectable parents, who had other plans for me than the entering of this institution called the Idle Hour saloon; but when I was only thirteen, on my way home from school one day, you called me and some of my companions in to see a new game that you had placed in your room back here for the amusement of your patrons. It was a game that fascinated us, I remember, and we lingered over it. As we were passing out, you said you had something else that was new, a delicious soft drink that would not intoxicate, and was as harmless as lemonade. You were giving it out free at this time to introduce it, and wanted us to try a glass. We drank it, and liked it. Then you gave us an invitation to come in again, and make use of the game, which a number of us did. The soft drink which I know now to have been 'doctored' by you, became more and more the attraction which drew us here. The 'harder' drinks followed, and you know something at least of my career from that time on. I think I have had a hand at about all the crimes of the category. Sometimes I have been found out and had to pay the penalty; sometimes not. But when the verdict of guilty is pronounced against me for the crime of which I am now justly suspected, although committed while under the influence of liquor, and when the sentence which says a 'life for a life' shall have been executed, then, Joe Brandon, I shall receive the highest honors which your college bestows."

The miserable procession still filed in at the open door. As the young man finished his story, she of the white ribbon, turning to Joe, said:

"Do you wish to hear them all, or will you offer now your defense against the charges made by these whose lives you have ruined?"

Joe started. "Defense!" he stammered, "I have no defense."

"Then you can give no reason why the woe which is pronounced against him who giveth his neighbor drink should not be yours? Why should not your own soul now suffer the punishment which your evil deeds have been gathering as the just reward of a life of sin against your brother man, yourself and your God?"

"I have no defense," Joe repeated, with increasing agitation. "Is there no escape from this punishment? God knows I would undo the work of my life if I could."

"There is no escape," replied the woman, "for him who continues in his evil way; but if the wicked turn from his wickedness, and do that which is lawful and right, there is promised a way of escape. It is for you to choose."

The room gradually darkened, the figures faded away in the increasing gloom, and Joe Brandon found himself at last alone. Turning slightly, he saw a faint light gleaming through a half-closed shutter. It was from a small lamp which had been placed as usual upon the table beside the window, for his use upon his return home from the saloon at night. He was in the hammock again, upon his own veranda. Everything was as he had left it a few hours before. But was he the same man?

After that night, the people of the town began to say that Joe Brandon was another man. The Idle Hour saloon never again opened its doors for the sale of intoxicating liquors, and its proprietor is building up a new reputation for himself as an honest and upright citizen.

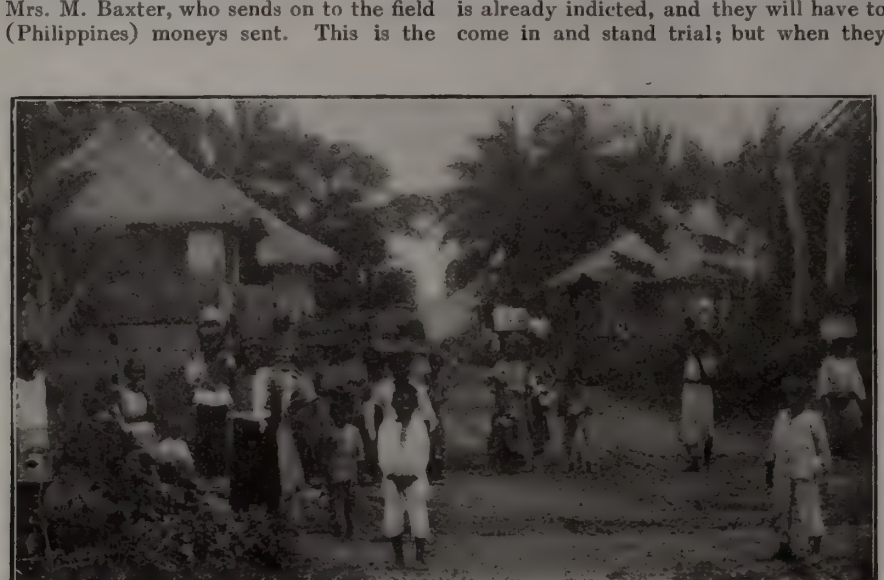
Among Filipino Outlaws

What Two Godly Native Bible-women, Supported by "The Christian Herald," are Doing in a Perilous Field

THE gift of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD readers for the support of a Philippine Bible-woman was greatly appreciated. It was at once forwarded to Mrs. M. Baxter, who sends on to the field (Philippines) moneys sent. This is the second Bible-woman whose support has been fully undertaken through your paper.



Stereograph, Copyright by Underwood & Underwood

A Scene in Cebu, Philippine Islands

The last news from the Cebu field was very encouraging. Among other things, the native workers are much stirred by God's Spirit, and are showing a great sense of their responsibility in spreading the Gospel. They are working as faithfully as if they were well-fitted American missionaries, and, in several instances, are working to support themselves, while carrying the Gospel to their people. One man quite recently requested Mr. Jansen to return him to his mountain district, because he wished to support himself on his native farm while carrying on the work.

There is nothing in the Cebu climate to stir anyone up to work, but very much the contrary. This young man had laid it on his heart to teach his people. He endured hunger and weariness as he went to get Bible instruction; but he returned to his people full of the Holy Spirit. He was accepted as evangelist and given the necessary support. After giving much cause for praise to God in his mountain villages and district, to which he had been sent back, he was transferred to another spiritually needed place. Now, at his own request, he has returned, and, without salary, as he requested, expecting to live by farming.

One of the villages under his care is largely made up of revolutionists, who have lately come in as "friends of the government," through the influence of the individual converts, and the attraction of God's Gospel of love and peace. Some were known as "pulejanes," and regarded as dangerous outlaws in the mountains, being hunted down by the constabulary, and would have been shot down if found, or kept and tortured by the native constabulary, to compel them to divulge the names or whereabouts of their leaders. The faces of suspects who are supposed to be "pulejanes" (or robber revolutionists), express nothing but the dull hoplessness of misery. The Gospel in its liberating power has been doing a marvelous work among these people in the Cebu mountains. There are now some fine brave workers winning others to the Lord, who formerly were recognized outlaws. Two were once revolutionary leaders, one an ex-governor; they are now active volunteer Gospel workers in Cebu Island.

Recently fifteen of these outlaws sent word through one of the native evangelists, asking if they might come in under Mr. Jansen's protection. The leader, however, is already indicted, and they will have to come in and stand trial; but when they come in this way, the constabulary are likely to be as lenient as possible, in order to encourage others to give themselves up. In one of the mountains, where the farmers have to live, by constabulary order, in camps or villages (to hinder the revolutionist robbers from supporting themselves through robbing the families), the Protesant farmers have by their own earnest request gathered in one camp, called the "Protestant's village." It is here that many of the ex-puleganes come to be brought into the city of Cebu before the authorities, for if they were to travel over the mountains to the city without some recognized friend of the government accompanying them, in all likelihood, if seen, they would be shot down. It is to this village and mountain district that the voluntary or self-supporting evangelist hopes to return. It is no easy field. Many of the Lord's earnest and devoted servants are among the people, but the roughest element, too, has congregated in the mountains. So this young man and his wife need your prayers.

One of the two Bible-women supported through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, wrote to her evangelist son lately. She is over sixty years of age, and went at her own desire as a missionary Bible-woman to open up one of the most difficult and fanatical parts of Cebu Island. Were you to see the form of pagan Romanism which binds the intellect and conscience of the Cebuans in superstition and image and wafer worship, you would marvel at the courage of this woman. Her fellow-worker is a Christian who formerly worked in the pay of Rome. She was called "the abbess," though not one really. The Bible-woman writes: "Although we are only two feeble women here, we have been able to build a little chapel, and we have some real spirit-filled people who have surrendered all to the Christ, and are full of joy in the Holy Ghost."

* * *

Should your readers desire to do more toward the support of Bible-women in Cebu and other islands, opened up through the native workers and missionaries, the moneys will be acknowledged through the coming year; some further account will be sent of the work of the Bible-women of the Cebu Mission.

ELIZABETH WHITE JANSEN.

Called Higher

Mrs. A. B. Rea departed this life on Dec. 3, from her home, at Notch Road, Paterson, N. J., aged seventy-five years. She trusted her Saviour for all things in life, and is now at home with Him.

Mrs. John Aitken, of Montreal, Canada, recently passed away at the age of eighty-six years. Her loved ones are comforted in the knowledge that she is now "safe in the arms of Jesus," as she was a thorough Christian, and never refused help to the needy.

Mrs. Frances Williams died in Oconomowoc, Wis., on the 21st of June, aged nearly ninety-six years. She was a faithful Christian, and the example of love and kindness which she left will never be forgotten by those who knew her. Her home had welcomed THE CHRISTIAN HERALD every week since its first issue.

Mrs. John W. Powell entered into rest at her home in Dayton, Ohio, on July 18, in her eighty-third year. Mrs. Powell had been the mother of nine children, and her declining years were soothed by their ministrations. For twenty years she had called THE CHRISTIAN HERALD her "dear paper," and her sons will always keep it in their home in memory of their mother.

Sarah A., wife of Henry H. Hoffman, passed from this life at Haworth, Kan., on the 23d of September, aged sixty-one years. She had been a member of the church from her girlhood, and has since lived a true Christian life, dying in the triumph of a living faith. Her eight living children have lost a loving mother, her husband a devoted wife, but she left to her loved ones the assurance of being ready whenever the Master called.

Thomas Henry Messer passed away at Yonkers, N. Y., on October 24, aged seventy years. Mr. Messer was a Deacon in the Baptist church on Warburton Avenue, and an active worker in the Sunday School, where he had taught one class in the infant department for thirty-five years. He leaves a widow and three children. At a memorial service held in his honor, the keynote of the character of the departed Christian was struck by his friends, as they testified, one by one, to his "wonderful love for the children."

Mr. Joseph Clarke and Claramond B., his wife, passed away in November, within sixty hours of each other, from their home in Jeffersonville, Ind. Mrs. Clarke was seventy-one years of age, and her husband was nine years her senior. So united were the couple in purpose, aim and habits, that a description of the life of one is fitly applied to the other. They exemplified the Christian spirit in their daily lives, which were marked by a thoughful charitableness and an abiding affection for each other and for their family, which enable their stricken children to recognize the merciful dispensation which united them in death.

"They were lovely and beautiful in their lives,
And in their death they were not divided."

He was by occupation "a tiller round," while his brother Abel was er of sheep"; and, from the very ype of the Good Shepherd. Cain's tion of improving and cultivating th was just a type of the earthly- who develop human nature; and orms, always occupied with the who mind earthly things" (Phil. whose heart and treasure is here

e is every difference between those se this world without abusing it" 7:31)—as our Lord himself did rning his bread in the carpenter's Moses did when keeping sheep, el did in the court of Babylon— se who, like the rich man in the (Luke 16:19-23), live for earthly The first mentioned are "pilgrims and strangers" upon earth, and "they seek a better country, that is, a heavenly; wherefore God is not ashamed to be called their God; for he hath prepared for them a city" (Heb. 11: 16). The others have their hopes and their aspirations, their joys and their sorrows, entirely in earthly things. Their position and reputation, their possessions and appearance, their physical and mental enjoyments, these things are the sum total of their lives, and that which is spiritual is so strange to them that, for want of personal experience they look upon it as entirely visionary, and regard those who have real, face to face intercourse with God, as fanatics.

Each of the sons of Adam brought, after their own order, an offering to the Lord: "Cain brought of the fruit of the ground" (ver. 3); he saw himself in his offering; there was no faith in it; it savored of self-recommendation. It said, "I have bestowed labor on these fruits; I have arranged them upon the altar; I have brought them; they speak of my care, my industry, my devotion; God ought to respond to my goodness, he ought to feel himself under an obligation to me."

Abel's offering was in complete contrast: "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent offering than Cain, through which he had witness borne to him that he was righteous, God bearing witness in respect of his gifts, and through it, he being dead, yet speaketh" (Heb. 11: 4, R.V.). "By faith": faith sees God—recognizes God. With Abel the question was: "What will please God?" He brought of the firstlings of his flock and of the fat thereof. May there not have been included in Abel's offering the deep humiliation which befits a sinner before God, and then the acknowledgment also of conscious trespasses, as well as the peace-offering testimony to communion between him and God?

FOOD DOES IT

The Most Natural Way to Get Out of Trouble.

"I have been troubled with my stomach for years, having the habit of vomiting and spitting up my food and was all run down and September last I had a fearful hemorrhage which completely prostrated me. When I got up even a rare porterhouse steak distressed me.

"Then I happened to meet a lady who had trouble just like mine and who used Grape-Nuts food and it agreed with her so I bought a box and found I could keep it down and it nourished and built me up and I have used it constantly since then, usually twice a day. I have gained in flesh and can eat almost anything I want and my stomach takes care of it without any hesitation but before I toned and strengthened my stomach on Grape-Nuts I could not handle any food but it was liabel to come up again.

You have seen and read our advertisements dozens of times, but the only fair, reasonable way for you to judge me and our business is to write to me so that I can send you our printed matter.

When you have read it we will have become better acquainted, and you can decide for yourself the value of our services in your personal connection.

Our magazine is called

"THE MONEY MAKER"

and I want to send it to you six months—FREE.

THE MONEY MAKER is a very handsome monthly publication, beautifully illustrated and printed in two colors.

Beside describing the high-grade real estate investments we offer our clients from time to time, the magazine is a veritable mint of information regarding real estate in general.

Every issue contains interesting articles descriptive of the growth and development of real estate in various sections of the country, as well as a vast amount of matter of general interest that cannot help but prove interesting and instructive.

The magazine will prove a faithful guide to the investment of small sums in real estate, no matter where located.

It will tell you how and where to buy; how long to hold a property; what class of real estate grows in value most rapidly, etc., etc.

You will never be sorry you asked for it, that's certain; and in any event your sending for it does not obligate you in the least.

We have sold real estate to nearly 7,000 satisfied clients located in every State in the Union, and can refer you to any of them or to National Banks in New York, Chicago and Philadelphia.

But these are details. You will want to know about them later. First let's get acquainted. Your name and address on a postal card, mailed to-day, will be all that is necessary.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, ON MAY 9, 1906, IN REVIEWING THIS GREAT PUBLICATION, SAID IN PART:

"Ridpath's History of the World may be regarded as a complete library in itself. No other work of its kind has ever supplied a History so well suited to the needs of all classes and conditions of men. We mark the marvelous influence of Christianity upon the world's progress. He would be a blind reader of history indeed who did not discern, throughout all, the influence of a great Omnipotent hand, guiding and developing all things.

We cheerfully commend this most popular and complete of all world histories to our readers."

Ridpath's History—A Household Treasure

President William McKinley sa

"I am familiar with the merits of R path's History of the World, cordially commend it to the scholar as v as to the plain people generally."

Bishop J. P. Newman, D.D., LL.I said:

"In reading Ridpath I experience pleasure often realized when looking some grand panorama. The superb pictu of temples, palaces, scenes, events and m add a charm to the clear and vigorous st of the learned author."

Prof. W. F. Warren, S.T.D., LL.I Pres't Boston University, sai

"I should be glad to see it placed in library of every young person in the Uni States, and even in the English-speak world. In families where there are bri children it will render excellent service the cause of popular intelligence."

RIDPATH takes you back to the dawn of history, long before the pyramids of Egypt were built; down through the romantic, troubled times of Chaldea's grandeur and Assyria's magnificence; of Babylonia's wealth and luxury; of Grecian and Roman splendor; of Mohammedan culture and refinement; of French elegance and British power; of American patriotism and religious freedom, to the dawn of yesterday. He covers every race, every nation, every time, and holds you spell-bound by his wonderful eloquence. Nothing more interesting, absorbing and inspiring was ever written by man.

RIDPATH in your home means you need never spend a lonely evening. You can associate with the world's heroes; you can walk in the Valley of the Euphrates and watch the cradling of civilization as it emerges from the darkness of barbarism; you can journey with Alexander the Great and his little band of Greeks as they conquer the known world, or cross the Rubicon with Cæsar, after which Rome was free no more; you can touch shoulders with Washington, as he wisely and grandly through the nation's early days; and learn patriotism of Lincoln, the gentlest memory of our world. It is ennobling and enlightening to commune with these children of destiny. To be associated with great men and events is to be great one's self. There is nothing that solidifies and strengthens a nation like the people knowing the nation's history.

RIDPATH'S enviable position as an historian is due to his wonderfully beautiful style, a style no other historian has ever equalled. He pictures the great historical events as though they were happening before your eyes; he carries you with him to see the battles of old; to meet kings and queens and warriors; to sit in the Roman Senate; to march against Saladin and his dark-skinned followers; to sail the southern seas with Drake; to circumnavigate the globe with Magellan; to watch that thin line of Greek spearmen work havoc with the Persian hordes on the field of Marathon; to know Napoleon as you know Roosevelt. SEND COUPON TO-DAY.

M. E. H., Calton, Can. 1. Was Christ born on Christmas day? 2. Was Paul married?

1. There is no positive knowledge of the date. Prof. Andrews who has made an exhaustive study of all the sources of information, believes that the probabilities are strongly in favor of some day in the latter part of December, and there is no reason to doubt that the day we observe is the correct one. There are many reasons for rejecting the theory that he was born in the spring. 2. There is no evidence that he was married. Some conclude that he must have been, in order to be a member of the Sanhedrin. But it is not absolutely certain that he was a member of that body. Acts 9:2, seems to indicate that he had not power of his own. If he had been a member he would probably have mentioned it in Phil. 3:5. On the other hand, I Cor. 7:8, is a direct statement that he was unmarried at that time, and if he ever had a wife, she must have been dead.

Mrs. L., Dansville, N. Y. We were much interested in your presentation of the case of the little Japanese schoolboy. Are there many of his race in the San Francisco public schools?

There are 93, of whom 68 were born in Japan and 25 in this country; 28 are girls and 65 boys. They are in 23 different schools, and their ages run from 5 years up to 20, only 12 being over 17. They are below the average age of the other school children in the various grades. Almost all are very bright pupils, well-mannered, and popular with their teachers.

George McC., Eleanor, Pa. If a man is spiritually dead, as you say in one of your editorials, is he responsible for not accepting Christ? If it is God who does all, then man cannot have a part in accepting or rejecting Christ.

A man is responsible if he rejects the offer of Christ, because he is physically alive and knows what he is doing. The offer of Christ is, "Arise from the dead and Christ shall give thee life" (Eph. 5: 14). The Holy Spirit is a quickener and it will be given to those who ask for it. Suppose a man is dead to art. The most beautiful picture or statue does not appeal to him. Some artist makes his acquaintance and shows him the beauty of color, teaches him how to recognize the perfection of form. That side of his nature becomes alive and he learns to appreciate the beauty of art. The influence of Christ is infinitely greater. The man who desires to be saved mourns over the deadness of his nature and prays to be quickened, and Christ speedily quickens him. It is true that salvation is God's work, but he does not force it upon an unwilling man. Christ came that men, though they were dead, might have life (John 11: 25).

C. G. F., Aurora, Ill. Who was Josephus? Did he live when Jesus Christ lived?

He was the greatest of Jewish historians and was born A. D. 37, in Jerusalem; died about A. D. 100. The crucifixion of Christ took place A. D. 30.

G. K. D., Philadelphia, Pa. 1. Do you think Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses and David were converted in the sense in which the Protestant churches to-day understand the term? 2. How old was David when he wrote the Fifty first Psalm? 3. Does the New Testament forbid a man having more than one wife?

1. Conversion indicates a changed life. Such a change occurred in Jacob, at Penuel (see Gen. 32: 24-30). We have not the record in the other cases, but we can imagine there having been turning points with them, too. Abraham may have had some such struggle before obeying the voice that called him in Ur. Few men grow up godly; there is a time when they voluntarily turn from evil and seek God. 2. Probably about sixty-five. It was after the scandal over Bathsheba. 3. There is no specific prohibition, but it seems to have been taken for granted. Christ evidently had the idea of one wife in his mind (Matt. 19: 3-9), and Paul made it a condition of office in the church (Titus 1: 6).

J. J., Milwaukee, Wis. 1. How does the national wealth of the United States compare with that of other leading nations? 2. What is the value of our annual production of food and kindred products?

1. Roundly stated, our total national wealth is $100,000,000,000, or larger than that of Great Britain and Russia combined, or of France and Germany combined. Moreover, it is increasing at the rate of $10,000,000 per day. 2. In 1906 it was $1,600,000.

J. A. T., Markle, Ind. Why did Jesus forbid Mary to touch him after his resurrection (John 20: 17)?

He probably wished her to understand the change that death and resurrection had made in their relations. The old familiar intercourse must now give way to worship. As Paul said (II Cor. 6: 16), "Though we have known Christ after the flesh, yet now henceforth know we him no more." There would come a time when he would be present in the spirit with every disciple, but that time would not come until he had ascended to the Father.

E. H., Canton, Ohio. How old was David, King of Israel, when he died? I can't see that he was more than 70 or a little older, and it says in I Kings that he was old.

Josephus, the Jewish historian, also says he was 70 years old. There would seem to be no reasonable doubt about it.

W. S., Carlock, Ill. Were there idols among the Jews in Christ's time?

No, we should say not. They had long persisted in the sin of worshiping images, but apparently it had been abandoned, otherwise Christ would have denounced it. Doubtless they made money an idol, as we are apt to do to this day, but the old idolatry in the coarse form of worshiping a carved image had probably ceased with the advanced civilization.

D. O. W., Whiting, Kans. 1. Do Christ's words (Luke 22: 32) imply that Peter was not converted? 2. What is the unpardonable sin?

1. No, they imply that Christ foresaw that Peter would fall, and that he would be restored. Conversion in the sense Christ used the word meant a turning again. Peter would turn to evil, and would turn again to Christ. When that occurred, he was to strengthen his brethren. 2. You will see what the unpardonable sin was if you read the chapter in which it is described (Matt. 12: 24-34), Christ had wrought many miracles by the power of the Holy Spirit; the Pharisees charged him with working them by Satanic power, and he tells them that such a charge indicated a spirit so vile that it was unpardonable. It is a matter of dispute whether the sin can be committed in these days, but those who ridicule conversions and revivals come perilously near to it.

Reader, Saffordville, Kans. Can a person drop a letter out of their name, like "h" out of Chilman?

Yes. There is nothing to prevent you from spelling your name as you wish, but any radical change might work to your disadvantage.

P. J. N., Toledo, Ohio. Your reference in a recent editorial to the promise in Ezekiel that the sins of the penitent would not be mentioned to him, is all right; but you seem to have overlooked the next verse (Ezek. 33:13) which says that righteousness too shall be forgotten in certain circumstances. There is a similar warning in Prov. 1:24-31.

No, we are familiar with both passages. They are not contradictory, as you appear to think. The people for whom Ezekiel wrote thought they were (See Ezek. 33-17). God's ways are just and equal, as t prophet says. When a man changes course God deals with him on his new wa If the sinner repents and becomes righteo God receives him and forgives him; wh the righteous turns to sin, God punish him. Baptism of a Zulu Convert at the Lansdowne Mission, Sonkele, Africa

A YOUNG, but growing, Christian work is that of the Lansdowne Mission Station at Sonkele, in the heart of Zululand, Africa. The station is an offshoot of the Natal Baptist Association (composed of four churches), and is located in the centre of a large native reserve, far removed from civilization. The Rev. J. Hawkins, resident missionary at the Station, sends us the accompanying photograph of a group of earnest converts engaged in the rite of baptism. He writes that the doors are wide open, nothing but financial aid being needed to enable the workers to enter and take possession of that pagan land for Christ.

A WEEKLY ILLUSTRATED MAGAZINE FOR THE HOME

The Babylonian Desert, Once the Site of Ancient Babylon, but now Submerged by the River Euphrates' Overflow

HOW BABYLONIA WAS BURIED

BY PROF. EDGAR J. BANKS

down and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon." MAGINE a country which in its day was the most prosperous and civilized in the world; a country abounding in populous cities and adorned with huge, apparently indestructible temples, which stood for 2,000 years or more; with a system of vital canals, like mighty rivers, which carried water to every part of the empire, making it one vast garden; armies which had marched victoriously where the invincible Roman legions feared to go, and conquered the world; with a teeming population, with great wealth, and with a history which for fully 4,000 years showed a steady growth to the leadership of the nations.

Then imagine a man, a traveler, standing alone in the midst of the city of that great empire, at just the time when its power and prosperity were at the highest, and crying that it should sink into the earth and be the haunt for the wild beasts of the desert.

Then again imagine, or better still, travel to that great valley between the Tigris and Euphrates, and see the once fertile valley which has become a desert, cities which have turned to mounds, and palaces and gardens to beds of reeds. Travel from the northern border above Nineveh, southward a thousand miles to the Persian Gulf, and count, if you can, the mounds which rise above the level plain; no man has ever yet counted them. Some are so low that they scarcely rise above the surface; others tower like mountains high into the sky. There you have found a nation's cemetery, and every mound is a tomb-hill which marks the grave of a city, or town, or hamlet. Look about for the palaces of that great empire, and you will not find them. The country is dead; its cities are buried; only the wild beasts, and the wilder roaming Arabs, linger about their graves. Dig into the tombs, and there you will find merely the skeletons of that ancient civilization, with here and there a treasure which was buried with the dead.

It is difficult with us, in this country without ruins, to understand how the great Babylonian cities were buried, and for several thousand years remained quietly resting beneath the ground. We naturally ask: "How can one city be buried beneath another? How was Babylon buried?"

It may be the general impression of many that the shifting desert sand, blowing into the streets and houses, gradually filling them, have hidden them from view. Babylonia is not a sandy country; there is perhaps less sand upon the surface than in our own New England States. The soil is the clay-like deposit of the rivers, as level as a floor, and so hard that the foot of a horse leaves but a faint impression upon it. Sand never buried a Babylonian city.

In Babylonian architecture, stone, excepting in a few of the larger buildings, was seldom employed, and then only thin slabs adorned the wall. Bricks from the clay of the soil, were practically the only building material. Some were burned in the kiln until they became as hard and as durable as any which we now use, but by far the greater part were sun-dried. These unbaked bricks were easier to make, and cheaper, and unless exposed to the rains, they were as endurable as if they had been burned. In the larger buildings, the roof beams were of cedar or cypress, but in the smaller houses they were the soft, fibrous trunks of the date palm. When the poorer Babylonian built a little one-roomed house, it was entirely of unbaked bricks, or even unmoulded mud. He dug into the soil a few inches for the foundation, and then laid the walls to about ten feet in height. For the roof, he placed across the walls date-tree trunks split into halves; above them reed mats; on the mats a layer of reeds several inches in thickness, above the reeds other mats, and above all, a thick layer of mud. When the mud had been smoothed and dried, the roof was waterproof, yet during the heat of summer it cracked, and when the winter rains came, the water would trickle.

Excavations at Bismya, Showing the Different Strata of Long-Buried Cities

In time the house grew old, or the owner abandoned it. Soon the leaky roof caved in; the tops of the walls of mud bricks, now exposed to every rain, softened, and the mud ran down the sides. In a few years the walls entirely disappeared; there remained merely the foundations and a little heap of clay, which had once been moulded into bricks. This is the reason why in the Babylonian cities so few of the houses of the common people have ever been discovered.

The great temples and palaces differed somewhat in construction, because in them burned bricks, almost as imperishable as stone, were employed. A structure of solid burned brick masonry would continue to stand in spite of the weather. The great tower of Birs, near Babylon, which has been called the "Tower of Babel," still rises 153 feet above the plain. The lightning has hurled down fragments of its masonry, and split its summit in twain, yet it still stands. Birs and the temple tower at "Ur of the Chaldees" are the only two Babylonian structures whose masonry is still exposed to the air.

Temple and palace walls were faced with burned bricks, while the interior was of unbaked bricks of clay, yet the appearance was that of solid masonry. The city walls, too, were merely faced with burned bricks, while the interior was sun-dried clay, which softened whenever it came in contact with the rain.

Thus the walls of a Babylonian city, though but brick shells, were impregnable to the weapons of that age. Within the walls were rows of myriads of small flat-roofed, mud-brick houses, a single story high, separated from each other by narrow, winding streets. The modern Babylonian village is practically the same; then there were the palaces of kings and nobles, the walls of which were thicker and higher, but likewise of mud, though incased with burned bricks; and, finally, there was the temple with its mighty tower reaching far into the sky, with shrines for the statues of the gods, and

TEXT—JOHN 4: 10

"If thou knewest the gift of God," etc.

THIS incident suggests first of all the nearness of God's blessing, its unexpected nearness. The woman unconscious is the type of many a soul. "If thou knewest She did not know. Blessing, revelation, transformation at her side, in her reach, and she knew it not. Like a sailor dying of thirst out on the salt sea, with the fresh waters of the Amazon beneath him and about him.

When Jesus walked among men, touching them in their ordinary experiences, the blessings of God were breaking upon them and they knew it not. It was because of the familiarity of his presence, his mechanic's training, his likeness to them that men did not recognize God; they were offended with him. His claims seemed out of keeping with his condition. When he traveled with the two disciples on the Emmaus road they did not know him, though one would think their own heart experiences would have suggested him. And at last he was revealed in the breaking of the bread. In a common meal came their enlightenment, which is an illustration of the chosen methods of God. We have our sacred edifices and sacred days and sacred activities with which we associate God. But these are temporary accommodations to our weakness. In the perfected life above there is no church. "I saw no temple therein." And we may be sure there is no Sabbath, which does not mean that sacredness goes out of life, but that life is sacred in all its spaces and all its times. And the danger about our sacred bits of time and space is that we shall confine God to them and say that all the rest of the days and the rest of space are secular.

The Omnipresent God

When science says that God is not to be sought merely in the gaps of the natural processes, she is not necessarily irreverent. Science is bidding us learn the deeper lesson, and the deeper reverence that comes from it, that God is present in all the texture of nature and all her movements. The simple fundamental lesson of the incarnation is that God is with us, always available. His revelations are not distant, inaccessible, waiting to rush upon us unawares. Such sudden, unexpected revelations may come sometimes, because our chronic blindness shuts God up to the necessity of so declaring himself. But the revelations are awaiting the seeing soul all the time.

"If thou knewest." Many a revelation of God is unrecorded, unperceived, because there is no eye to see it. The scientific vision has been trained for generations, and the revelations of God in nature are not yet thoroughly known. His truth is inexhaustible, and every search may be joyously expectant. "More light is to break from his Word," which is as true to-day as when good John Robinson first said it. The light is only awaiting clear lenses in devout and studious souls. All about us blessings are waiting unclaimed. Every day has its quota. In Bunyan's allegory, the radiant angel is poised over the head of the man with the muck rake. God awaits our upward glance. The forces which can move and change us are within reach. They bored the Simplon Tunnel through the Alps, with the powers of the rivers on either side of the mountains. And the rivers have been flowing through the centuries.

The great forces we have at work for us, steam, dynamite, electricity, are the products of common materials. The greatest physical blessings are close at hand. The air we breathe, the light which showers its unhampered splendors upon us, these are not imprisoned, not mortgaged, and they are symbols of God. "He is closer to us than breathing, nearer than hands or feet." "If thou knewest." She did not know. Oh, the pity and the tragedy of ignorance of the presence divine.

Nature's Symbols of God

And the verse teaches us the importance of the trivial. A journey to a well-side. A daily task with no significance in it. Yet in that trivial duty a transformation came. How many instances of this there are in history? Galileo, observing the swinging bronze lamp still to be seen in the Cathedral of Pisa, and noting the regularity of its movement, found the principle of the pendulum, and was led into his astronomical work. When Napoleon at Waterloo, ordered a charge, he carefully scrutinized the ground and saw no wrinkle to break the flatness of the plain, but noticed a little chapel which seemed to indicate the intersection of roads. He asked a peasant if there was any road in the course of his charging squadrons, and the peasant answered No. So the cavalry swept on, and as they were close to the English, rushing on with a speed impossible to check, suddenly a hollow road twelve feet deep yawned before them. One third of the brigade was engulfed, the gully filled with writhing horses and men. It was the beginning of the loss of the battle, and it was caused by the shake of a peasant's head.

Importance of the Trivial

When F. D. Gamewell was at Dickinson College, he took the engineering course because of inherited tastes. He became a missionary, and when the Boxer rebellion broke out in China and the European missionary and diplomatic population of Pekin took refuge in the English Legation, it was Gamewell who conducted the engineering work which made the defense successful, work which called forth the admiration of military experts and won for its brave leader a medal from the British Government. It was that college course, bearing no apparent relation to the life work of him who took it, which prevented the slaughter of those gathered representatives of Europe and America by the infuriated Boxer fanatics. History is full of illustrations of this principle—the importance of the trivial.

And how true it is in nature. One of the most important books Darwin ever wrote, perhaps his best as a record of keen observation, is called "The Formation of Vegetable Mold," in which he shows how much we are indebted to the ministry of the earthworm. We have been shown by careful experiment that fungus growths, those forms of vegetable life which seem lowest in the scale, have vital relation to the soil and vegetable life in general. Disease is traced back to organisms which are visible only through a microscope. We have a thoroughly organized commercial recognition of this principle of the importance of the trivial. There isn't any waste now in manufacturing processes, at least waste is reduced to the minimum. The utilization of waste means often the margin of profit. The by-products of great manufacturing plants are often the most important financially.

Life's Sanctified Moments

The most recent literary critic who has made an estimate of Browning, calls attention to what he conceives to be the real significance of Browning's great masterpiece, "The Ring and the Book." Browning found on an old book-stall in Florence, a paltry police record of an obscure Italian crime of the seventeenth century, yellow with age, covered with dust, costing eighteen cents, and used its vulgar, revolting details to make his poem. And the usual criticism has been that the theme was too mean for the glorious monument reared to it. But the new critic Chesterton says that in the meanness of the theme is the significance of the poem. "It is an epic of the nineteenth century because it is an epic of the enormous importance of small things, it is the apotheosis of the little; characteristic of an age which fights not with dragons, but with microbes."

This is the truth which we need to apply to our religious experience. We are not to dream of crises, revolutions, spiritual marvels. Intercourse with God is not confined to dramatic, startling moments like those of Elijah at Horeb, or Paul near Damascus. Life itself is the significant thing, and any one of its moments may be big with importance. Religion is not a kind of moral reserve to be drawn on in case of emergency. It proves its value when it sanctifies the moments of life. Our habit and attitude in little experiences will determine our fate in the crises. Habit is the tendency created by repeated action. Be careful of little things. Revelation may leap upon the soul from some common duty, as with the woman at the well, as with the man in the parable who found unexpected treasure when he plowed his field.

And finally, the incident emphasizes to us the supreme gift of God. "If thou knewest the gift of God." There are many gifts of God. The water which the woma from the well which Jacob dug. God gave it. It dr from cloud reservoirs and washed the atmospher percolated the earth, and gathered itself in subterr streams, and bubbled graciously into the pit tha dug to receive it. But God gave it. The light fell upon ripening crops and threw beauty upo green fields, and offered visions to tired eyes—God it. The soil which is the physical basis of the l nations and men. The atmosphere which re wasted vigor, the food which builds body tissues. are God's gifts—all of them. Or, in higher re the beauty which lays its compelling touch upo stilled soul, the truth which means light, food, in tion for the mind, the freedom which gives free r thought—God's gifts all of them.

God's gifts are many—"Every good and perfec cometh from above"—He is the supreme giver. openeth his hand," not reluctantly, not occasion but jubilantly, perpetually, forever. Giving is habit, his passion, his business. When a spark disturb our cloud, it produces likeness in this partic we become givers, The Russian peasant describe The Outlook, who objected to the priest because he always praying to God "give," and who admired trusted a broad, helpful, kind man, whose useful life always saying, "take, take," was true in his insti That life is most divine which says with humili both God and man, "take my life."

The Supreme Gift

But the gift of God which Jesus knew and whic bestows is not material and not intellectual. "The of God." Something which by all pre-eminence dese that name. Jesus himself is that gift. Paul could no better summary of God's gift than Jesus, whon called the "unspeakable gift." In the chapters prece that from which the text is taken, Christ had refe to himself as God's uttermost gift: "God so loved world that he gave his only begotten son." But the Master speaks of the gift as distinct from him He is its agent, God-appointed, to bring the gift. like living water, and he longs to give it to this par soul at the well. He had asked the woman for dr but his real craving was for a chance to save her. salvation of souls was as a consuming thirst to Now this living water—which is no stagnant cistern, a spring bubbling with soft music and unfailing refr ment forever in the soul's depths—what is it? W but God's love? Love to save from sin even this si woman, worn, jaded, apathetic. Love to welcome soothe and reassure and forgive her. Love which me escape from her weariness, the death of her despair, end of the tyranny of her sin.

An Unfailing Spring

Oh, the deep satisfaction of the grace of God! Vic Hugo said, describing the last sad hours of Jean Valje "Every heart needs a bone to gnaw." Amiel, anot Frenchman, said: "The heart is an insatiable glutto Well, whether our hunger be of the despairing kind t asks for only a bone; or ravenous, grasping anyth with a promise of nourishment, the love of God can f it. His grace is our banquet. Grace is love, seek the level of need. It is constant and pervasive. came to this woman unsought. It showed her her s made her hungry for holiness, gave her a vision of dear Christ which never faded from her eyes, made an evangelist, brought salvation to her town.

The offer of this love is in Christ. This whole Bi is to help us know God's gift of life-giving love and Christ who carries it. The Book is not an arsenal texts, or a collection of doctrines, or a system of morali but a record of the redemption of love, with Jesus as t climax and purpose of the whole. And Jesus is not problem, a phenomenon, a teacher, a model; he is t giver of the love of God, flooding our hearts with through the Spirit. If we really know what the gift God is, and who it is that tells of it, we may indeed a him to solve our ethical problems and settle our soci disputes, and he will answer our prayers; but we w not fail to ask him for the living water. For this p eminently is his function to bring the water of life a its eternal satisfaction to thirsty souls.

veteran General Harney shed a military post at ierre, opposite the pres- y of Pierre, the capital th Dakota, 1855. That , as with his troops he ched this region, he met a party of Brules, a f the Dakotas, and killed eighty-six, wounded l captured seventy women and children, together ll their provisions and camp equipage. That his season and, with his own headquarters at ierre, he sent a part of his command, both cav- nd infantry, to build a winter cantonment on Bottom. Some years later, Harney selected this a place for the issue of supplies to the Indians, nstructed some cabins of evenly-hewed logs, and ingle roofs. Later he over these cabins to dians. One of these is still standing, and is t as I sit in a room of sion home and look out he fringe of trees that rder the Missouri. But y selected the spot be- there was plenty of nd water, and grass for and forage. Later, in fter the principal Da- ribes had made treaties ace with the United three bands remained ria Bottom, and some of iefs occupied the neat bins.

872, the writer of this letter first saw Peoria Bottom. Then on an inspecting tour for the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, he visited Fort Sully, fifteen miles above here, near which, but on the opposite side of the Missouri, Thomas Lawrence Riggs had established a mission for the Dakotas and made his home. This first missionary station in this part of Dakota was named "Hope Mission." The treaty of 1868-69, made by Generals Sherman, Harney and others with the leading Sioux chiefs, had officially gone into effect; but many of the Indians, whose relatives had been killed by the soldiers, were "sore-hearted." They were particularly opposed to having any white man settle on the west side of the Missouri.

The young missionary and his bride, who had joined him later at Hope Mission, were soon made to feel that there were some of the Dakotas who were cherishing a hostile spirit. A shot was fired at the mission cottage, went through the roof and lodged in the wall of the bedroom, just above the head-board of the bedstead. Prudence seemed plainly to require that Mr. Riggs change the location of the mission, especially when little Theodore came, and the responsibility of two precious lives, besides his own, rested upon his decision. But Mr. Riggs, born among the Dakotas and familiar from childhood with their temper and habits, and with their language, kept on at Hope Mission two years longer and established another station on the west side of the Missouri lower down. He had too much of the dauntless spirit of the frontier, not to say Christian courage, to leave any vantage ground on account of personal danger to himself. His influence with the Indians would be greatly impaired by such a course.

There were at this date upwards of 20,000 Dakotas not yet reached by missionary effort. Mr. Riggs felt that he was upon the threshold of a vast field, and he brought to the work not only an instinctive knowledge of the Indian character, but a large conception of the undertaking. His father, Dr. Stephen R. Riggs, had then been among the Dakota-speaking tribes of Minnesota thirty-six years, and with the aid of Dr. Thomas S. Williamson, had reduced the language to writing, translated into it the Bible, and made a dictionary which was published by the Smithsonian Institute, with funds appropriated by Congress. Dr. S. R. Riggs and wife had brought up their family not only in contact with the Indians, with a knowledge of their heathen customs, superstitions and degradation, but had imparted to sons and daughters something of their own unquenchable missionary zeal. It was after a full course at Beloit College, and also at Chicago Theological Seminary, that Rev. Thomas L. Riggs came up the river by boat to look over this out-of-the-way field among the Teton Sioux.

Early in July, 1872, Mr. Riggs, meeting the writer at Fort Sully, invited him to take a drive to Peoria Bottom. His purpose was to lay out a larger work, and he had already had in mind this locality, near to three bands of the Dakotas who had established their villages here. As we came over the hills from the north, this broad valley, bounded by the winding Missouri, distinctly outlined by the large cottonwood trees, and stretching some ten or twelve miles along the river, with the tepees and groups of Indians imparting life and color to the scene, made an impression that has remained vivid during all the years since.

Counselled by a Wise Pastor They Built Their Own "College" . . . The Value of Youthful Grit

IN the aristocratic little suburban town of Devon, near Philadelphia, a queer structure attracts the attention of visitors. A little frame house, two stories high, with a certain indescribable "home-made" look about it, stands in the grounds of one of the estates. Such a house in a setting that matched its own lack of quality, would not be out of place, but in comparison with the fine residences in its immediate vicinity, the little structure looks like a tin dish in a jeweler's window. Yet the wealthy residents are rather proud of their unpretentious neighbor, for the house is a monument to the remarkable results that can be attained by the efforts of a band of youngsters, directed in the right channel, and backed by unlimited juvenile enthusiasm and industry.

The house is the summer home of the boys of an institution known as "St. Martin's College," and the building was erected, every plank and stick of it, by the unaided efforts of the boys themselves. St. Martin's College is not one of the high-class scholastic institutions of the land. It was founded a short time ago by the Rev. C. W. Robinson, of the Church of the Evangelists, a little Episcopal establishment in the heart of the Italian quarter, Philadelphia. The "college" was intended for the education and maintenance of as many destitute boys as the funds gathered by the rector of the church could support. From a small beginning in one of the church rooms, the "college" has grown to good proportions, and a new building is now being constructed. Hundreds of boys are applying for admission, and as fast as means allow, they are added to the number in training.

Mr. Robinson called the place a "college," because he did not want any one to be able to reproach his boys later in life with having been brought up in a charitable home. The boys are housed, clothed, fed and taught useful trades. He wished to take his band of boys into the country last summer, and cast about for some way to provide for them. At first it was thought that tents in a suitable camp-ground would be the right thing; but this was dropped as expensive, and not particularly desirable. He soon found a wealthy philanthropist, who was willing to g the use of as much land as was n for the erection of a summer home the energetic pastor and his band ling boys the rest was comparative

He selected a spot on the gro Devon and set the boys to work to build their o mer home. They went at it with a vim, hau lumber, cut and hammered and planed from su bedtime, and speedily the house took shape. W roof had been finished and a little porch put on, t had a painting "bee," which was an unalloyed They almost quarreled in their eagerness to secu hold on to the brushes and paint-pots, and t walls of the house were soon made attractive.

Then they cheered themselves hoarse with de they looked at the trim little two-story structu their own hands had raised. But something was l They trooped off to the woods, selected a tall, s tree, chopped it down, dragged it to their hou planted it. HOW BABYLONIA WAS BURIED ✳ chambers for the priests at its base. The city stood by the canal which brought the water supply and irrigated the surrounding gardens; without the life-giving canal it could not have existed.

The Tigris and Euphrates rivers are exceedingly treacherous; they are ever changing their courses, breaking out into new channels, converting desert into marsh land, and leaving dry and barren the country they once watered. Imagine a city upon a canal which suddenly became dry, and which was thus left without means of obtaining water. The gardens and fields wither, and the thirsty people dig into the soil to find only the bitter water of the desert. Sending their flocks to other pastures, they patiently wait in vain for the return of the water. Then the inevitable happens: There is an exodus from the city. The peasant seeks new land to till, the merchant follows, and last of all the nobles, the priests, and finally the king abandons the deserted city to find new homes. Scores of deserted Arab villages which have met such a fate, now exist in Babylonia.

War in ancient times was accompanied by horrors unknown to modern warfare. The Assyrian king, Sennacherib, boasted that when he destroyed Babylon he scraped the foundations of the city into the river. It was a custom in those days to massacre the conquered people, or to sell them into slavery. Thus many a Babylonian city has been depopulated in a single day, and its homes and public buildings left to the ravages of time. The supporting roof poles rapidly decay and fall into the chambers beneath; the tops of the walls are exposed to the rains of winter; the burned bricks of the outer casing fall away one by one; the inner sun-dried bricks, softened by the rain, become mud and trickle down. Before many years pass the walls have disappeared; they have been converted into a thick mass of the hard clay of disintegrated bricks. Such is the history of every Babylonian city. Each mound is a tomb, protecting from the rain and even from the air, with its hard clay covering, all that remained in the city when it was deserted. The delicate clay tablets left in the rooms, the images of the household gods, and many things that was necessary to the life of the people has been carefully preserved by Providence.

Perhaps, after centuries, the water returned to the old canal, and again life in the long abandoned city was possible. The people slowly returning, could not repair the old houses; they had turned to mounds. For the sake of cooler air they preferred to build on high ground. House after house arose upon the summits of the mounds; the temple tower was encased with new bricks and made more lofty than ever, and a new city greater and more beautiful appeared upon the ruins of the old. But the fate of the former city in time came also to it, and in its turn it became a heap of clay. The same process, though upon a smaller scale, is still on in the villages of the modern Mesopotamian

Thus we may understand how the Hebrew p in a country already filled with the graves of dared to call to the great Babylon to come dow sit in the dust, and how he prophesied that should be like Sodom and Gomorrah—a desert s by the shepherd, and a lurking place for the wild

It is announced from Washington, that the American National Red Cross has ordered the purchase, through the Commissary-General of the army, of 1,300 tons of flour, which will be shipped on Jan. 15 to Shanghai, for the relief of the Chinese famine sufferers. This will be the first shipment of supplies from America. It is expected that plans will be made soon for regular shipment of supplies.

The American Consul General at Shanghai cables that the famine committee recommends flour and corn meal in fifty-pound sacks. Fifty thousand bushels of wheat for planting in the spring are earnestly desired.

Mrs. Anna Kristensen, a member of the Norwegian Lutheran Mission, at Kuin-cheo, Hankow, Central China, writes: "My husband and I are the only missionaries in this large heathen city. Our nearest missionary neighbors are fifty-six miles from here. Owing to the phenomenal downfall of rain this summer, the harvest is nearly all destroyed and a terrible famine is standing at our doors. All kinds of food is three times as dear as it was last year at this time, and the prices are getting higher every day.

"One poor woman who lost her husband last year, and who is left sick and penniless with five children, the eldest not twelve years of age, came to me yesterday and said she intended to cast her two youngest children in the river, while she, with the three eldest boys, would take opium and die." Mrs. Kristensen took hold of her hands and tried to comfort her with prospects of help and food.

This is an example of many cases to be found in the same district.

Rev. T. B. Grafton, Southern Presbyterian Mission, Hsuchoufu, Ku, writes:

Famine will be universal everywhere within reach of us. Counting all crops, it is estimated that there is only about twenty per cent. of a normal year's yield on hand. Out to the west and south I found hardly as much as a garden patch. Potatoes are only a few strings and roots. There will soon be practically nothing in the line of eatables left. There will be starvation for tens of thousands. Grain can be had in Shantung, and the officials have given permission for its shipment out. But the money to buy is lacking, as the price is so high.

Grateful India Missionaries

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—At this Christmas season I cannot refrain from sending you an expression of my heartfelt appreciation of the remarkable services your journal has rendered to India; to missionaries in this country; to a little army of famine children whom THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has not only saved, but educated and trained; to the cause of Christian Missions everywhere; to a new realization by many non-Christians, of what Christian love has enabled strangers in distant America to do for those in trouble on the other side of the globe; and also to promoting international good feeling between the United States and the British Empire.

I wish also to express my growing appreciation of the remarkable wisdom with which you have carried on this immense undertaking. It has been done with absolute promptness and fidelity, and without any trumpeting, and without dictating or lecturing to those whom you have honored by making them the almoners of the bounty of CHRISTIAN HERALD readers. I do not know of any undertaking more successful or praiseworthy.

We are all very grateful for the message which has come, that you are undertaking the support of 2,000 famine children for another year. That is just right. The oldest of our boys and girls are getting married, and able to support themselves. What is most needed is aid for the younger ones for a while longer. God bless you and the patrons of these children.

The New Idea in Missions

WE have received a number of letters from readers of this journal in relation to the proposed plan for the direct support of individual native missionary workers in the foreign field. This proposition appeals to a very large number of practical Christian people, who may never have an opportunity of going to the field in person, and who would feel it a privilege to be represented by trained substitutes at the front.

Individual support of a native evangelist, Bible-woman, teacher, preacher or Gospel worker would bring the principal into direct and sympathetic communication with his or her substitute at the front. It would keep alive the home interest in the warfare against heathenism as nothing else could. It would be an invaluable stimulus to the Gospel soldier on the "firing line," who will be inspired to greater zeal by the knowledge that kind, loving hearts in this far-off land, are watching him, and that earnest prayers are ascending in his behalf from those who are consecrating a portion of their substance to his support in the field.

Our plans are maturing rapidly, and we expect soon to be able to submit the scheme in detail to our readers, who will then have the opportunity of supporting native workers, men or women, of their own denomination and in fields of their own selection. Meanwhile, we shall be glad to hear from all who are interested, and who desire to unite in this unique movement for the extension of the Gospel in remote heathen lands.

The Hebrew Crusade

THOUGHTFUL people will view with regret the extraordinary crusade of a certain portion of the Hebrew population of New York, against the observance of Christmas in the public schools. That the opposition is formidable and determined may be gathered from the fact that some 25,000 Hebrew pupils absented themselves from these exercises in the lower East Side schools, being nearly one-third of the school population of that section. In a Williamsburg school, the Jewish pupils stayed away en masse, with the result that many may lose their chances of graduation.

It is the broad contention of the Jews who are making this singular fight, that the holding of Christmas exercises of any kind in the public schools is offensive sectarianism, and should be abolished permanently. They specifically object to all hymns and compositions in these exercises, which deal with the Christian religion, or tell of the birth of Jesus. They object to the use of Christmas trees, holly, mistletoe, and all forms of decorations, pictures of the "Virgin and Child" being specially distasteful. They would abolish Christmas altogether, as far as the public schools of America are concerned—efface it officially, as completely as the Assembly at Jaroslav blotted out the name of Jesus from the Mishnah and Gamarah, in the year 1631.

It is not surprising that there should have arisen among the Hebrews themselves a great diversity of opinion as to the wisdom of this unusual crusade. Among their own co-religionists, there are many men of influence who regard it as extremely unwise and ill-advised, although so distinguished an authority as Israel Zangwill has lately declared that the race thrives only under persecution, and that "social anti-Semitism is its only hope in America to prevent absorption." Yet in no other country in the world have the Jews been so cordially welcomed as here, and nowhere else have they found such religious and social tolerance. They are a comparatively small people—less than 2,000,000 among nearly 77,000,000. They have come to a land that is everywhere recognized as Christian. If the Jews in England, France, Germany, Italy or Austria were to make the same demand that is now made by their brethren here, would they expect to succeed? Would such a demand be seriously entertained in any civilized land on the globe?

These are some of the arguments which the more conservative Hebrews are now deliberating. But there is still another aspect of this strange crusade which they do not overlook. In many lands the Hebrews have been shamefully abused and persecuted. Here, anti-Semitism is—thank God!—unknown. Here, the Jew is the equal of all before the law, socially, in business and in freedom of worship. Nobody interferes with his holy days or his observances. Everywhere he sees the broadest toleration; it is a characteristic of our American life. It is not surprising, then, that some of the leaders of Jewish thought and influence should now be found asking whether the Jew in America should not be at least as tolerant as the American Gentile; whether this public school crusade, which has been spurred on by a few sensation-mongers and thoughtless leaders, may not have in it some of the qualities of a boomerang; whether it be not calculated to evoke that anti-Semitic spirit which till now has happily been unheard of here. For it must naturally occur to those critics in their own ranks, that if the conviction ever becomes rooted in American minds that the Jew is totally averse to having any relations, even in the remotest sense, with the despised Christmas and its belongings, then, with their accustomed respect for the opinions and preferences of others, the 75,000,000 of non-Jews might decide hereafter that they would not lacerate the feelings of the Jewish objectors by urging them to recognize Christmas in any way. Those thoughtful Jewish critics go even farther than this, and think it quite within the range of possibilities that the non-Jews might even decide that hereafter all the multitudinous paraphernalia and product of the joyous Christmas season—the gifts, keepsakes, decorations, trinkets, jewelry, dresses, books, plays, and all amusements—should be the product of Gentile manufacture and contrivance, and be handled by Gentiles exclusively. It was estimated that $20,000,000 were spent in Chicago during the Christmas season, and no doubt a much larger sum was disbursed in New York.

Perhaps the most sensible view of the whole matter is that the crusade is a tempest in a teapot, which must speedily exhaust itself. Our school boards will doubtless concede to our Hebrew population all the consideration to which they are justly entitled. Sectarian teaching is admittedly out of place in the public schools; but we hope the day may never come when the mention of the name of Jesus, and the reading of the Bible, will be prohibited, no matter who makes the demand—Jew, Gentile, or unbeliever.

Preaching by Wire to Wall Street

MANY Wall Street brokers must have been astonished at an innovation in business customs which occurred a few days ago. One of the dealers in bonds in the Mills Building opened the day's transactions with a religious service, conducted by telephone. A well-known clergyman in an uptown district called up the office, receivers were distributed among the clerks, and the service commenced. There was a scripture reading, a brief sermon, a responsive reading, and a prayer by the clergyman for those exposed to temptation in modern commercial life. The telephone company kept the connection and the clergyman's remarks were heard by all in the office. It is proposed to continue these wire-services, and possibly to extend them.

If all is true that is charged against the Wall Street speculators, or even if only a fraction is true, the need for divine service among them is urgent. In their intense passionate scramble for wealth, in which trickery and misrepresentation and lying are called into exercise, there is need that they hear the voice of Jesus bidding them set their affection on things above, and telling them that he is a loser who gains the whole world and loses his own soul. There are times when even they must feel that the mad race is exhausting, and that the goals they strive to reach are unsatisfying. In crises, personal or domestic, the ancient preacher's cry, "Vanity of vanities, all is vanity," must have found an echo in their hearts. If, at such times, there came to them a direction to true riches, that abide and that are gotten without self-reproach, their efforts might be turned to new objects. We should therefore rejoice, if in this or any other way, the eternal truths can reach the hearts of the brokers and speculators.

It would be unfortunate, however, if they should regard such a service as a kind of benediction on corrupt practices. There is no reason why their business should not be conducted honestly, but current report has it that their exchanges are little better than a den of thieves. The cleansing of such Augean stables is not to be accomplished by a few words over the wire, which might even come to be regarded as a gambler's charm, to bring luck in the speculations of the day. God is not mocked. He who approaches Him with any degree of acceptance must put away sin from his heart and life. It would be little short of blasphemy for a man to join in such a service, even over a telephone wire, and then turn to transactions involving schemes that rob the credulous public and devour widows' houses. We are shocked as we read of the Greek or Italian bandit who prays that God will send rich travelers over the lonely roa he lies in ambush. The Wall Street speculator vain invoke God's blessing on dishonest trans But if he will put away evil from his life and love and serve God, holding his approval bett great riches, then the prayer he joins in over will be a blessing to his soul.

"God Protect France"

IT is matter for regret that the French Gove should have decided to take the motto, "G tect France" from its coins, and to substitute th of the Red Republic, "Liberty, Equality, Frate The clerical enemies of the Republic will point decision, as a proof of the contention they ha tinually made during the long fight over the d lishment of the Church of Rome, that the Gove was hostile to all religion. It is very probab some of the French leaders have indeed identifie ion with the Church of Rome, owing to the fa Protestantism in France has but a small and in erable following. It is a sad fact that despite has been done by Dr. McAll, and by such men as Wagner and other devoted Protestant leade French public associates religion with the Church, and has but slight conception of religio from that. That fact is an inevitable conseque established religion and obtains to some degree land, and would obtain to a much greater degr were not for the ability and activity of ministers free churches.

It would be a most deplorable thing if the Frenc ernment in its desire to secularize itself attemp eliminate all thought of God from itself. Apart from all question of p salvation, godliness is beneficial to the state. A fearing population will be a loyal and law observi ulation, and the principles of religion will do m secure order and good behavior than all the la can be enacted. Men so astute as the leaders French nation must be aware of that fact, and we whether the change of the inscription on the co the meaning that the priests are trying to put u An attempt to make France a godless nation, wo a wicked thing, and would recoil on the heads statesmen who made it. Death of the Shah

ER a reign of little more than ten years, Muzaffer-d-din, Shah of Persia, has passed away, and his eldest son, Mohammed Ali Mirza, reigns in his stead. The late Shah had been a great sufferer. For nearly three years he made a stubborn fight against disease, and has been for two months on the verge of death. So hopeless was his malady and so severe his suffering, that the unusual course was taken of summoning his son to take charge of the government while his father was still alive. On his arrival, his father, relieved of responsibility, rallied and regained strength, but the gain was brief, and on January 9, he died. His life was a rare contrast of European

He lived there for thirty a until 1896, when the death of his father, at the n of an assassin, opened his way to the throne. Dur- hat long period of retirement he acquired a knowl- g of French, Kurdish, Turkish and Arabic, and had extensively the literature of ancient and modern Besides the studies of which a Mohammedan must be master, he had read Plato and Aristotle, had studied the modern philosophers, including itz and Kant.

s father had been something of a miser, so that when me to the throne he found himself the possessor of two hundred million dollars and jewels of inestima- alue. The throne, called the Peacock throne, stud- with gems, is said to be alone worth twenty millions, e had diamonds in profusion of extraordinary value. les these Muzaffer-ed-din possessed the famous ter- al globe which his father had con- ted of pure gold, with 51,000 pre- stones used to indicate the confor- ons of land and sea. He began his reign oluntarily abolishing the most ous of the taxes and instituting sive reforms. He was necessarily ed to intrust the execution of reforms to Grand Viziers, who not in sympathy with him and thwarted his designs. It is ieved, however, that Ali Mirza will be able to main- his position. The people will be less likely to rally he support of a rival if they retain the constitution, which will make the character of the Shah a matter of smaller concern than if he ruled arbitrarily. If he fulfils the ideal of the great lawgiver, his people are little likely to desire his deposition.

A Dog's 500 Mile Journey

A well authenticated story of a dog's sagacity and endurance comes from Des Moines, Ia. Some two months ago, a citizen of Valentine, Neb., staying at Des Moines, admired a Scotch collie dog that he saw there. As the owner was willing to sell him, a bargain was struck, and when the Valentine man went home, he took the collie with him. Soon after his arrival he missed the animal, and though he searched for him could not find him. Five weeks later, the dog's former owner heard a scratching at his door. Opening it, he saw a dog, thin and gaunt, and covered with mud, that he failed to recognize. The dog's glad bark and his evident delight, soon convinced him that he was the animal he had sold. How he had found his way over the five hundred miles of hill and prairie, swimming rivers and penetrating woods, will never be known; but the fact of his performing the journey cannot be doubted. The only trace of him that has been found was at Fremont, Neb., where some boys saw him stealing a meal from the back door of a house, and threw stones at him. It would seem as if he had levied upon the country through which he traveled, for his support on his journey. It must have been a precarious subsistence that would make him appreciate the supper that celebrated his home-coming. The owner was quite willing to refund the money he had received for the faithful creature, and vows that no price now would tempt him to part with the dog. Would that men who have been carried away by the adversary, sold under sin, were as anxious to return to God as this faithful animal was to return to his former owner. That they are not, justifies the prophet in his reproach:

The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master's crib; but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider (Isa. 1: 3).

A Bride's Buried Dowry

There was an interested company of friends in the orchard of an old farm a few miles from Frankfort, Ind., recently, who had come together to witness an excavation. Among them was a young man, the only son of the owner of the farm. With him was a blooming girl, who was evidently dear to the youth. Near relatives of both the young people were there, and all were cheerful and expectant. Two men were set to work with spades about the root of an old apple tree. They soon came upon the object of their search. It was a large jar, which seemed to be of considerable weight as they lifted it and passed it to the group on the bank. The farmer, directing them, they carried the trench a little farther, and another jar was lifted out. The digging was continued in other directions, and at points the farmer remembered, more jars were revealed, until finally all had been found. Several sacks were produced, and the jars were emptied into them. Their contents consisted of United States coins of various denominations. They had never been counted, but the sacks weighed seventy-five pounds. That was the provision the farmer had made for his son's marriage. He had begun it more than twenty years ago while his son was a mere infant, and had continued it during that period. All he could spare was poured into a jar in pennies, quarters and dollars, with an occasional gold piece, and each jar, as it was filled, was buried. "They are for the girl who marries my boy," he said, "and if I prosper, it will be a big pile." He has prospered, and the pile grew from year to year. The son's bride must be proud of the gift, representing so much self-denial and labor. It reminds us of the bounty with which the Church, the bride of Christ, is endowed.

I gave Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee: since thou wast precious in my sight and I have loved thee (Isa. 43:3).

To Prevent Suicide

A novel scheme to check the rapidly increasing tendency to suicide has been inaugurated in connection with the Salvation Army, by General Booth. He announces that from this time, two of his officers, of wide experience and proved discretion, will be set apart to give advice to persons contemplating suicide. They are pledged to absolute secrecy and will not inquire into the identity or antecedents of persons consulting them, but will listen sympathetically to the tale of woe and give counsel, but not financial help. General Booth says that he has noticed how frequently persons who are saved from suicide, after attempting it, express their gratitude to the rescuer, which shows that the act is generally the result of passion, or impulse, or despair. He believes that if they knew a stranger to whom they could unburden their minds, one who would pity and sympathize and give them sound and disinterested advice, numbers of them would abandon their purpose. The General is not sure that the plan will succeed, but he thinks it is worth trying. It is possible that if his officers cannot alleviate the trouble, they may be able to point the applicants to Christ, who has given a general invitation to the worried and the burdened.

Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest (Matt. 11: 28).

A Benefactor Assailed

A despatch from Meriden, Conn., describes a fierce attack by a blind deer on a veterinary surgeon. It appears that some hunters in the woods near East Hampton had seen the deer and followed it. After a long trail they had succeeded in getting near enough to the animal to shoot it. The shot had struck it full in the face, destroying its eyesight. It was still active, but in its darkness it was easily caught. Being a fine animal, it was considered that its life was worth preserving, and it was driven to a stable. There the veterinary surgeon saw it, and after examining its eyes declared that the sight of one of them might be restored by an operation. The buck's head was secured and the surgeon began his work. The animal was docile at first, but, as the operation proceeded, became violent, and by a sudden wrench burst its bonds. Instantly it turned on the man who had been treating it, threw him down and savagely kicked and trampled on him. Happily, assistance was at hand and the surgeon was rescued, but not until he was badly bruised. The poor animal could not know that it was in kindness that the surgeon was hurting it, and that it might recover sight through his efforts. There was no way of telling the deer of his good motive. There is not the same excuse for men who murmur when affliction falls upon them from the hand of God.

All chastening seemeth for the present to be not joyous, but grievous: Yet afterward it yieldeth peaceable fruit unto them that have been exercised thereby, even the fruit of righteousness (Heb. 12: 11).

A SOUL-SAVING CHURCH

Some of the Aggressive Up-to-date Methods Effectively Employed in a Great Metropolitan Parish

"I HAVE seen whole blocks in Japan filled with temples; but I had to come to Christian America to see a block filled with playhouses." So said a missionary from Sendai, Japan, not long since when speaking in the Central Baptist Church, Forty-second Street, west of Broadway, New York. The remark was excited by the character of the block in which the church stands. It probably has not its duplicate in the world. In it are seven theatres already, and another announced as coming. Several of them are open on Sunday evenings with the same bill as on week nights, and one of them has a regular Sunday matinee. Every evening of the week, and several afternoons, the block is thronged with pleasure-seekers from all parts of the city, and for that matter from all parts of the world. Within five minutes walk of the church are a score more theatres, and as many great hotels. One of these hotels on the same street with the church, and a stone's throw distant, is a resort of the gambling fraternity, and another, less than two hundred feet from the church, is a rendezvous of the "fast set" of both sexes, whose proprietress boasts of never being disturbed by the police. The dwellings in the neighborhood that once were the homes of the well-to-do, are now many of them boarding-houses, frequented for the most part by the players of the various theatres, and some of them are furnished room-houses, sheltering the unspeakable sins that are usually found in such a community. The tides of moneyed dissipation surge about this church incessantly, winter and summer, year in and year out. One of our leading religious papers recently said, "one could hardly find a more impossible location for gathering a religious congregation."

The work of Christ is made the more difficult, by the fact that the dissipation of this neighborhood is of the moneyed class. In the slum districts of the city are multitudes who are tasting the dregs of sin, and are ready to hear of salvation. The people who resort to this neighborhood are as yet in the heyday of sin, and feel no need of deliverance, and the difficulty is increased by the fact that the membership of the church is scattered far and wide. A colony of nearly forty live over in New Jersey; nearly as many more have their homes in Brooklyn; three hundred live above Ninetieth Street. Of the families of the church, hardly half a dozen live within a mile of the meeting-house. About $125 a week, or over $6,000 a year, are spent in car-fare by the people who attend the services of the Central Church. The congregation at the morning service is often half strangers, and in the evening fully two-thirds of those present are not members.

The pastor, Frank M. Goodchild, D. D., has been on this field nearly twelve years. At the time of his coming, the church was regarded by many as a forlorn hope. But he has welcomed about 600 members into the church's fellowship, and many times that number have confessed Christ. The pastor has frequent occasion to write to pastors in distant towns and villages, stating that some person from their community was in the Central Church on a certain evening, and professed conversion, and asking, that on his return, the convert be looked after. The church is unique in this, that for every person received into its fellowship by letter from country churches, five are dismissed to country or suburban churches. City churches are supposed to absorb the life of the country churches. This church constantly feeds the churches in smaller towns and villages.

The methods used to attract the congregations that assemble, are vigorous and striking. The keynote of the pastor's efforts is evangelism. He declares that at Forty-second Street and Broadway, a church must be evangelistic to live. The subjects for the Sunday evening services are such as will strike the passer-by. These subjects are announced on the church front in letters large enough to be seen across the street. People in the passing street cars turn and read the announcements. The car conductors and motormen have, some of them, said that they look ... larly to see what the subjects are. ... are practical, and are so stated as ... cite thought. Some of them have ... "Dare to do Right," "Has Every ... His Price?" "The Bondage of Habit," "The ... of Wickedness," "Repent or Perish," "Is it S... do Right?" "Have you a Conscience?" "A good ... in Trouble," "Slaves of Sin." Courses of sermons ... proved popular. One called "Forgotten Com... ments," included among its topics "Thou Shalt ... Anothe... the Beatitudes included such t... as "Happy, Though Poor," "Ha... Though Hungry," "Happy, Th... Abused."

THE GOSPEL AMONG COAL MINERS

"THERE is no greater need of Christian workers anywhere in civilized lands than in coal mining regions, especially where foreign miners are employed."

So declared a speaker at a recent conference of missionaries held in Chicago, who knew whereof he spoke.

The writer visited, a short time ago, a mining town in Illinois with an actual population of sixteen hundred and twelve persons, that has thirty-four saloons. Exactly one saloon for every forty-eight inhabitants. The saloon-keepers thrive, and grow rich, while their patrons are the poorest and most miserable of creatures. Upon the saloon bar they sacrifice home, wife, children, all to rum. Sad-faced, wretched women peered at the visitor through dirty, broken windows; ragged, hungry little children thronged the streets and alleys, and an air of hopelessness seemed to hang over the place.

THE "OLD PASTOR" PROBLEM

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

IE pastor, a man in the prime of his life, erect, stalwart, enthusiastic, announced his text. In accordance with an excellent custom, he paused after its first reading, and repeated it phasis. The congregation having settled down little confusion incidental to rearrangement singing of the second hymn, looked at one and then at the preacher, with an air of inter- expectation. This was the text: "Doth God ught for oxen?"

in the world would Dr. Blank make of that The people were not long in doubt. He made deal of it, for it was a masterly plea in behalf ss of the worthiest men in any community—the o devote their lives to the preaching of the No profession is pecuniarily so poorly paid as the ministry. The old pastor, y be with a wounded heart, the current of dissatisfaction ing around his home and min- yields to it and resigns, some- times alas not until a very strong hint has been given that his resignation will be accepted. He has never been able to save money, and in his old age there is nothing he can do but preach. "Doth God take thought for oxen?" Shall He not take thought for these, his servants, who have toiled in the field through the noon-tide heat, as oxen toil in the furrow? Surely God must put it into the hearts of his people to do something toward the fund that pathetically describes itself for the relief of aged and indigent pastors. When one finds these good men resident in homes supported by charity, or in institutions of any kind that are devoted to derelicts, one's heart aches. Never should things come to such a pass that one of God's ministers should have to spend his declining years in want and poverty, or should finally have to be buried in the grave of a pauper.

Singularly, there is often irritation when this cause is presented from the pulpit. The appeal is not popular, and does not fire the imagination. It has about it nothing romantic, poetic or picturesque. Nevertheless, Christian people cannot ignore the fact that no worthy minister, having spent years in the service of the Master, should be a mendicant in his declining years. What ever care is taken to distribute relief to ministers and minister's widows, should be delicate and thoughtful, and the administration should be in the hands of those who remember that these men represent Him who said: "The poor ye have always with you, but Me ye have not always."

"who had six children small"

The Troubled Mother

THERE was a woman in our town
Who had six children small;
She needs must plan from morn till night,
And ne'er could rest at all.

So when a pair of twins were sent,
The family to complete,
She thought, "they'll give a lot of work,
Although they are so sweet."

So more and more she planned and schemed,
And did the best she could
To keep the children all in health,
And teach them to be good.

The time went by, the mother's cares
Were lessened day by day,
Until at last she felt no more
Like fainting by the way.

"Kind people tell me that my toil
Will not have been in vain,
And e'en affirm that I to heaven
Shall easy access gain.

"But after all," I ask myself,
"What does the Bible say?
Will all my work and all my care
Wash e'en one sin away?

"No! No! God's Book tells me to trust
In Jesus crucified.
His work is perfect, mine is not;
I'll live, because He died."

Concerning Neglected Laws

We believe that there is existent in most States of this Union a law prohibiting the sale of liquors to children and young people under age. If this law is on the statute books it should be enforced, yet it is constantly violated with impunity. Children are sent to saloons with pitchers and cans, young boys saunter into these places and carry intoxicants home to their people, or themselves drink at the bar. Intemperance causes so much deadly evil and sorrow in this country at this time, that it behooves good citizens everywhere to be on the alert for its arrest.

Not long ago a saloon keeper in Brooklyn was arrested, charged with the sale of liquor on the Lord's Day, to a lad of fifteen who was the messenger of his family at home. Two members of the family it was alleged, owed their speedy deaths to the poison sent to them from this saloon. There was no reason why, had the police done their duty, it should have been open at all on Sunday. Certainly, there was no excuse for the sale of liquor to a boy on any day of the week. We wait until our attention is arrested by some dreadful tragedy before we take any steps toward the suppression of rampant evils. Poverty, theft, murder and misfortunes, and crimes of all sorts, stalk gruesomely in the wake of intemperance. Is there no way of mitigating its terrific evils?

A Golden Wedding

A unique invitation to a golden wedding came to this office lately. On the first page were engraved the names of Major and Mrs. Joseph Hardie of Los Angeles, Calif., who were married December 17, 1856. They received their friends at their home, December 17, 1906, and congratulations poured in on every side, a golden wedding being always the most dignified and unusual of occasions. Comparatively few husbands and wives are spared to live together fifty years. Each year full of mutual trust and increasing love.

A feature of novel interest in this invitation, was the reproduction on the second leaf of the invitation to the wedding in 1856. This read, Major and Mrs. Isbell request the pleasure of your presence at the marriage of their daughter, Margaret Discretion, to Mr. Joseph Hardie, on Thursday evening, December seventeenth, eighteen-hundred and fifty-six, at eight o'clock, Talladega, Ala.

The bride's name, Margaret Discretion, is singularly attractive, a very pearl of a name. It has a quaint and musical melody, and one is sure that throughout the swiftly rolling years, the matron has been distinguished for the rare and lovely quality conferred upon her name, when it was given her in infancy.

A SHIPWRECKED WORLD

International Sunday School Lesson for February 3

*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

ALL flesh had corrupted their way upon earth. This was a very wicked world then, and it is a wicked world to-day. There is little if any profit in the endless debate whether the world is better or worse than in some former time. It is more profitable to admit there is wickedness enough to-day within and around us, to call for our utmost efforts to remove it. It will be helpful to note that the causes of wickedness in the days of Noah, were much the same as to-day. The fall of one, as usual, led on to the fall of many others. Disobedience to God in any form leads others into sin, and these lead yet others, until one sinner multiplies to many. Disobedience in Eve and Adam was soon followed by Cain's envy and murder, and these sins spread until "the land was full of violence," just as it is to-day, when we have ten thousand murders a year in the United States, besides those of automobiles, and reckless trolleys, and unsanitary mills, and lynching mobs.

A Day of Unwise Unions

Unwise marriages seem to have played their part, as to-day, in the increasing wickedness (Gen. 6: 2). When it is said that "the sons of God" married "the daughters of men," it probably means that the religious descendants of Seth intermarried, to their own corruption, with the wicked descendants of Cain. At any rate, such marriages to-day lead not only to unhappiness, but also to sin. "How shall two walk together, except they be agreed?" Only one half as many children become Christians when a Christian wife has a prayerless husband than when both parents are professing Christians. And drink had its usual part in bringing men to sin and judgment (Matt. 24: 27,28). Let us uproot, so far as we may, all these roots of evil.

My spirit shall not strive with man forever (Gen. 6: 3). That verse gives us a glimpse of what Peter describes as "the long suffering of God in the days of Noah" (II. Peter 2: 5). Noah's preaching was not the only preaching the flood victims spurned. God's Spirit pleaded with men daily, as it does to-day, to turn from sin, and escape the judgment to which it leads. But God's justice is as real as his mercy. He had spoken his warning: "I will destroy," and men disregard such a warning at their peril. How faithfully Noah repeated this unpopular message all those years, in which he won no convert outside his own household. It is rarer than any courage of soldier or fireman, the courage that dares to stand alone for what one believes to be right when it will make him unpopular with those among whom he must live in familiar intercourse from day to day.

A Boy That Dared

In an English school, one set was leaving the Sixth Grade, and another set was coming in. The old "Sixths" had a final meeting in a room they called the "Sentry Box," over the "Quad Gate," with Eric Kinlock alone of the new "Sixths" invited. "It is my duty," said the eldest of the old Sixths to Eric, "before I leave this honorable establishment, to confer upon you the Ancient Order of Grand Master of the Sentry Box. It has been the custom in this college from time immemorial to conduct little meetings among the members of the Sixth Form." He then proceeded to describe a system of gambling.

To some people, such a simple form of gambling as that carried on in the Sentry Box would be merely a piece of fun. Nobody could possibly lose more than a few shillings. Somebody was bound to win a few pounds. But to this boy with a clear past it was no joke. A stain. A tampering with evil. A question of principle. Now, an opportunity for speaking out. "Do you promise to continue this Society in accordance with its ancient laws?" Dead silence. "I cannot." "You mean, you will not," pleasantly but firmly replied the other. "I mean," continued Eric, "it is an utter impossibility morally. You know," he went on, "I hate cant, but I am bound to say that, as a Christian, I dare not break rules—not so much of College as of Conscience." They pleaded, then threatened him, but he was firm, and the thing had to be postponed. Of course another boy was found only too willing to play the part, but right conquered. Eric's brave stand told for good. He was ostracised by a set. The boys of lower forms were naturally puzzled. He had always been so much liked. The masters determined to sift the business. To-day the Sentry Box is used for a prayer meeting.

That boy would have been a Noah or a Daniel if their opportunity had come to him, for he had successfully borne the supreme test of a boy's courage, daring to stand alone for a principle.

A Life Instead of a Fortune

Noah, at least, saved his own household. Let us do that, and let love for our own children prompt us to save other children of God. Far better than to save money is it to save a soul! I have heard that when a steamer was on fire on one of the American lakes, an emigrant was coming home with his hard-won gold. He fastened it to his waist and prepared to jump overboard to swim to shore, when a piteous little voice cried—"Please, sir, will you save me?" He looked for a moment at the tearful eyes. He must lose the gold, or he must leave the child; he could not save both. In a moment he loosened the belt, and let it drop; and then clasping the little one in his arms he sprang over, and bore her safely to the shore. Shall we not be as ready to save the souls of the children as their bodies? Do you not see that boy next door is sinking into sins that kill both soul and body? Will you save him?

Make thee an ark. Almost every year some new fact develops to prove the historicity of the story of the ark. The dimensions of the ark are almost the dimensions of our ocean steamers to-day. Naval Architect Vogt, of Denmark, made a model of the ark a few years since, just one-tenth its size, which, on being tested outside the harbor, developed remarkable sea-going qualities, drifting sideways with the tide. Professor Howard Osgood has shown (Sunday School Times, Feb. 6, 1892) that there was more than room enough in the ark for all the animals declared to have been saved, Professor G. Frederick Wright, of Oberlin College, has visited Mount Ararat and found nothing to discredit, and much to confirm the Bible story of a flood, extensive enough to have destroyed the race at some early time (Literary Digest, March 23, 1895).

Come thou and all thy house into the ark . . . and the Lord shut him in (7: 1-16). Wild winds and waves outside, but Noah's household, amid many faithless, were saved in th No wonder this beautiful scene has l to speak of Christ as "The Ark of Sa He is indeed a Refuge from the stor a Covert from the tempest. A Missionary Story Saved and safe. Let not the judgments of God the rejectors of God's warning prevent us from seei Noah's shut-in household a picture of salvation. A sionary writes: "For three years I was practi alone in Central Africa, at work with a tribe that never seen a missionary before, and whose langua was trying to learn, so that I could tell the Gospel to them. During all that I had been listening, liste praying to hear some which would express the ide Saviour, but I never hear and I was almost in despair. last Christmas Eve I was sit around a camp-fire in the h of Africa. I was thinkin home, of the old days, of blessed Christmas time. I loo upward to where the stars sh above us. I thought of the of Bethlehem. I seemed to the light that shone round a the shepherds, and the multit of the heavenly host that the Christmas song. Would light ever shine for these people? 'A Saviour, a Savio should I ever hear the word?

I leaped my feet and shouted for joy. would gladly go through all labors and privations again, could have the joy of ag bringing that word Saviour, flashing the Christmas story the darkness that envelops other tribe of Central Africa.'

Saved From Cannibals

Yet another missionary st will illustrate this great sal tion. A missionary in Afri heard that a cannibal tribe nearby had captured a m and that the whole tribe would meet on a near date kill and cook and eat him. He sent two native Chr tians with money to ransom the captive. But the ch refused this, knowing the whole tribe were eagerly e pecting the feast. Then these envoys asked that th might at least visit the unfortunate man. This was p mitted. They quickly tied their belts together, a fastened themselves and the prisoner in one "bundle life," saying: "If you kill him you must kill us also This the tribe dared not do, and after many threats th were allowed to take the captive away—saved by tho who had shared his sentence of death only to make h sharer of their life.

And all flesh died (7: 21). God keeps his promises judgment as well as mercy. In the rainbow God pr claimed he would no more use a flood for this-wor judgment on the whole race. There are judgments t day in this world for individuals, and especially for citi and nations. It was to a nation, now scattered amon all peoples, that the prophet cried: "Prepare to me thy God, O Israel!"

SECRETARY OF STATE, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Dear Sir:—With profound gratitude I recognize that the swift movement of events in connection with matters relating to conditions in the Congo State, to which I was permitted to call your attention, has made it altogether unnecessary for me to trouble you further. The responsibility that has rested upon the hearts and thoughts of those who have asked the government, if possible, to promote efforts looking to international action with a view to the disclosure of conditions in the Congo State and an adjudication of the issues involved, is now placed upon those whom the nation has entrusted with the present guidance of its affairs. The prayers of a great multitude will plead that for all upon whom this responsibility rests there may be granted the spirit of wisdom.

I am sure I voice a very widespread hope that certain incidents that have recently occurred, may call the attention of those who hold positions of authority that, in a country like ours, where religious freedom is so fully granted and where ecclesiastical affairs are so widely differentiated, the separation of Church and State should ever be carefully recognized by all who hold places of leadership and honor in State and ecclesiastical affairs. The churches and every other organization standing for high and holy ideals, has the right to appeal for the enforcement of justice and law, but when this appeal becomes in any sense personal or partisan, it will be condemned and rebuked in no uncertain way, not only by Protestant sentiment but the common sentiment of the country. Pardon these words, I know they are platitudes, but sometimes occasion makes platitudes take on new force.

Permit me, in my own behalf, and on behalf of the committee I represent, to express my thanks for the courtesies you have shown me and our high appreciation of the great services you have already rendered. Respectfully yours, E. B. SANFORD.

S. B. M., Oklahoma. "My brain had been affected and my friends found it necessary to place me in confinement. After my recovery, although kindly treated, it was misery to find myself in the companionship of those without the light of reason. I prayed earnestly and with all my heart and was released almost immediately. God is a tender, loving Father."

R. O. L., Maine. "I have long desired my name associated with those who can personally acknowledge the blessing of answered prayer. It is not in an isolated case, but many times, that He has verified his promises, sometimes when no earthly friend knew, nor could have brought about the gracious results of divine recognition. 'Therefore I will call upon Him as long as I live.'"

A. V. B., Pennsylvania. "I have long wanted to add my testimony to the 'Answered Prayer' column, but words so poorly express the height and depth, the length and breadth of God's love, and all that he can and will do for us if we will only trust and believe him. He has answered my prayers in such a way there could be no room for doubt. Oh, that all who read these lines might believe."

AMERICAN & IDEAL RADIATORS BOILERS

IDEAL Boilers and AMERICAN Radiators for Hot Water or Low Pressur Steam are the most convenient, cleanest and most economical heating outfits known in the world.

Many thousands of these outfits are annually put into OLD, as well as new cottages, houses, stores, schools, churches—ALL buildings—FARM or city. Easier to run than a parlor stove; and the fuel and other savings quickly pay for the outfit. Four months' Winter still ahead! Need not remove old-fashioned heating methods until ready to start fire in the new.

ADVANTAGE: The air burning feature of IDEAL Boilers is a scientific development. Too little air "smothers" a fire. Too much air "chills the flame. In proportion as the precise amount of air is supplied at right points, the greatest possible fuel economy is secured—just as in modern, improved oil and gas burners a correct air supply produces far greater lighting effect. The air burning feature of IDEAL Boilers greatly assists to bring about their sure, large economies in fuel consumption.

A broken view, showing the hollow castings filled with water, the large air-burning space, and the long fire travel absorbing the greatest possible percentage of heat from the fuel.

Machine-made garments do not have the distinctive elegance nor the wearing qualities of those knitted or crocheted by hand.

Every woman who knits or crochets feels great pride in her work—or she doesn't. This depends on the yarn she has used.

THE "FLEISHER" YARNS are the acknowledged standard of excellence, combining all the qualities required by the most exacting knitter or crocheter—evenness, loftiness, elasticity. They are dyed in a full line of colors, from the deep rich shades used for afghans, to the light delicate tints for infants' garments.

The superior qualities of THE "FLEISHER" YARNS have earned for them a national reputation. A garment made of them will stand the test of wear and wash.

The Stammer of the Prodigal

By OWEN KILDARE

FROM the moment that Andrew Sibley came down our way, it could be seen that he would never really become one of us, one of "the gang." He was not a bit better dressed than any of us; he was just as hard up; but—well, he always looked as if you could still see the place where his mother had patted his hair.

When a man is down on his luck, he must be prepared for the worst and the best, and be able to take either with cool philosophy. But Sibley could never get used to our free-and-easy ways. So, when a night came that he could not even raise the price of a bed, which was only a dime, and he had to fall into the ranks of the army of "has-beens," which travels up and down the highway of the foolish and wicked, while those who work sleep in their beds, he thought the end of the world had come.

He did a pile of thinking that night, during those long, dark hours, and sized up his case pretty correctly. There were no brothers and sisters; he was the only one, and it needed no one to tell him that father and mother still wanted him—and, perhaps, even still loved him. Yet he had been foolish and wicked. The fresh fellows in the village had laughed at him for being such a "mamma's baby," and he had set out to show them that he was as good a sport as any of them—and had wound up in a ten-cent lodging house on the Bowery.

He knew that they had looked for him high and low, and he also knew that a welcome was still awaiting him; but—he was ashamed. How to overcome this shame and what to do to get away from his present life kept him brooding all night; and not until the calls of the milkmen were ushering in the morning and the dreary army of the homeless were flocking to shelter, did he come to a resolution.

That night he crept into a mission, which he had passed several times and which, perhaps, had given direction to his thoughts. He found his way to the seats, which, by some unwritten law, seem to be reserved for those who come seeking. He felt self-conscious, but no one seemed to pay any attention to him, and the service proceeded in the regular way. The testimonies interested him, and he almost felt envious of every man who rose to bear witness.

Then came the invitation. Sibley had waited for it. He had come there for the purpose of accepting it, and was the first to come forward to the bench of the repentant. Kneeling, he stated his case to the leader and stated it without reserve. He was still on his knees, when the leader stepped quietly to his side.

"Brother, let us pray together."

Prayers, frenzied and beseeching, had risen from those benches, and the leader had heard a great variety of them; but this boy's supplication, as if uttered at his mother's knee, was its own password of sincerity.

To get Sibley's story was no difficult matter, and as the leader, who had listened to some terrible and heartrending confessions in his time, heard this tale of a boy's folly, he — well, he sat down and wrote a letter to a little village up the State that very night.

Sibley left the mission feeling that a crisis had arrived in his life. The power of Divine grace was at work in the lad's heart. All that night and the following day he planned for the evening. He had decided to stay in the city another day, to testify where he had been reclaimed, before taking the return route of the prodigal to his country-home. New-found friends had assured him that he would have no trouble in finding the moderate fare to the village, and he was quite satisfied to return. But he was determined to testify, and he spent many hours in rehearsing his speech for the evening. He would hold nothing back; he would tell them of all his foolishness and wickedness; how he had sinned, then suffered, then repented. He was not an orator, his phrases were simple and short, yet, to him, they were the story of his degradation and salvation. He repeated his plain statements many times that day, in order that no hitch would be possible that night when he intended to tell his brothers, saved and unsaved, how the Lord had opened the eyes of his understanding.

As soon as the doors of the mission opened, Andrew Sibley entered, and this time took a seat way up in front.

In due time the service began, and continued in the usual way. After the lesson had been followed by a hymn, the leader stepped to the edge of the platform and threw open the meeting for testimonies. Andrew Sibley cleared his throat—and let some one else give the first testimony. You see, it would not have been fair to the older converts were he to jump up immediately. For the same reason, he permitted two, three, four, yes, as many as a dozen to testify, before thinking his time had come. It seemed to him as if his testimony would sound much more convincing if given at the very last.

The leader's eye swept the audience, and at last sent the question to Sibley. To make doubly sure that no one would miss the chance, the leader asked:

"Is there anybody else who wants to say a word for the Master?"

In answer, Sibley rose to tell his story.

"I," he began bravely, then somehow lost his thread. "I - I - I - "

Every syllable had gone from him, and, to his everlasting shame, he stood there stammering.

"I - I - ," he made another start, but got no further.

Men, faces, everything before him merged into one big black mass, into which he stared forlornly. He felt himself sinking, drowning. A dizzy faintness stole over him. Yet his purpose was still uppermost in his mind, and, just as he felt all physical strength leaving him, he saw the misty haze before him brighten. At that instant, it almost seemed to him that he could trace a cross and thorn-crowned figure upon it.

Now he would speak. Alas, even yet he stammered, and all his lips would utter was: "Jesus, I love you—yes—Jesus, I am thine."

Crestfallen, he sank into his seat, and buried his head in his hands. Sitting thus, he did not see the little gray-haired lady, who had sat in a secluded corner of the platform throughout the meeting who now fairly flew down the aisle to him. She knelt beside him and drew him close to her breast.

"My Andy! My dear, dear son!"

The leader rose with uplifted hands. "Now let us pray, and thank God that the lost has been found."

Band of Real Heroes remarkable article, in the London Daily Mail, Mr. F. A. McKenzie gives a vivid picture of missionary life ina as it really is, and not as many of lverse critics of missions would make ear to be. Mr. McKenzie writes:

here are to-day over three thousand stant missionaries at work in China, all of them English or American. of these are young people, in the of life. They have knowingly d themselves in positions where any of national passion inevitably means death in cruel and horrible form. of their colleagues have been killed g the past six years, some of them under torments so heartless and pun- nts so degrading that we dare not of them. Every missionary in the or of China to-day, lives, knowingly, e edge of the crater of a rumbling no. We may, if we will, deny these nd women wisdom; at least we can- eny them courage.

ome time ago I hurried to a district e north, where an immediate uprising expected. A warship had been sent e coast to take the missionaries away, I reached the interior town where had come together to settle what would do. First a letter was read the American Minister, leaving the ion in the hands of the people on the but strongly urging that even if the remained the ladies should be sent to oast and to safety.

hen one little woman arose. 'If le comes,' she said, 'my women will great difficulties. I mean to stay by .' Then arose a second. 'I remain my husband,' she said, and she shot a , half laughter and half tears, at the opposite. One after another said the . As I listened to the serene and rful declarations, my heart went out em. They well knew what might be ore for them, for some of them had i for the tortured whites who escaped the Boxer uprising.

The most remarkable missionary move- t to-day is to the northeast of China, orthern Korea. There, communities eing turned almost wholesale to Chris- ity. Four or five young Americans ed at Sun-chon five years ago. To-day have in their district eighty churches twelve thousand adherents. Their converts build and pay for their own churches, and pay for their own ministers. Towns in the historic 'no man's land'—the bandit region between Korea and Manchuria—are being outwardly transformed, schools are arising, and the women are coming from subservience to a life of comradeship with their husbands. The men are learning courage and honesty.

"One of the most striking things in the missionary position now is the way in which the confidence of the officials has been won. In Liaoyang, after the great battle between the Russians and the Japanese, I found that the chief Chinese magistrate had handed over the work of relieving distress to the well-known missionary, Dr. Westwater. The magistrate gave the buildings and gave money, and the doctor did the work. 'Why do not you Chinese do this yourselves?' I asked. 'The magistrate knows that if he gave the money to his own assistants they would keep most of it themselves,' came the reply. 'He knows the doctor will spend it on the people.'

"For many years the missionaries did hard pioneer work with very little to show. Less than seventy years ago they had only six converts. To-day they have about a hundred and forty thousand communicants, which means about six hundred thousand adherents. But their work is not to be measured by their enrolled converts. They have been the pioneers battering down prejudices and misunderstandings. They have shown the people what the West is and what Western civilization means. They brought modern medical knowledge to China, and China is now adopting it; they brought Western learning; they started and pushed the campaign which is abolishing foot-binding, and they are responsible for the fight against opium. They have been not only the teachers of religion, but the advance agents of civilization."

Christian Endeavor's Message*

LIFE completely under the influence of Christ, is what Christian Endeavor should mean to its members. There is a tendency to make Christianity a matter of doctrine and theory. When the question is raised whether a man is a Christian, the answer comes in a statement of what he believes. Sometimes a man who is earnestly striving to live a Christian life, to do as Christ would have him do and to grow more and more like Christ in spirit and in conduct, is bluntly told that he is not a Christian, because he does not accept some doctrine that forms part of the creed. A harsh, bullying, intolerant Christian, of whom there are unhappily too many, examines him, and learning that he has doubts about certain doctrines which are labelled orthodox, sternly shuts the door in his face and bids him rank himself with unbelievers. That has been the common practice in former ages when the unbeliever was sent to the stake for his unbelief, and it still continues now that the inquisitor can do no more than excommunicate and deprive the unbeliever of his income if he be a preacher. What wonder then that the world has come to regard Christianity as a system of doctrine, and to pardon laxity in life if it is balanced by orthodoxy of belief.

Christian Endeavor is a protest against this aspect of religion, and in that attitude does its most useful service. It opens its doors to men of diverse creeds if they are only sincere and are living the Christ life. It sought to present a united front to the world, and it was not its fault that it failed. It proved for a time that there was essential union at the base of all Christian creeds, and even now, it has not narrowed its road. That was an important testimony to give to the world, and great is the responsibility of those who thwarted it. The one thing that the world and the church need to understand is that the spirit of Christ in a man constitutes him a Christian, and that nothing else does. He is our pattern and our model. It is not what we believe about him, but whether in our disposition, in our character, and in our lives we are under his guidance and influence that is the great concern. To this, of course, belief contributes. We could not be Christ's followers if we did not believe in him; but it is not the technicalities of dogma but the belief that is the channel of grace that is essential.

WHITE BREAD

Makes Trouble For People With Weak Intestinal Digestion.

A lady in a Wis. town employed a physician who instructed her not to eat white bread for two years. She tells the details of her sickness and she certainly was a sick woman.

"In the year 1887 I gave out from overwork, and until 1901 I remained an invalid, in bed a great part of the time. Had different doctors, but nothing seemed to help. I suffered from cerebro-spinal congestion, female trouble and serious stomach and bowel trouble. My husband called a new doctor, and after having gone without any food for ten days the doctor ordered Grape-Nuts for me. I could eat the new food from the very first mouthful. The doctor kept me on Grape-Nuts, and the only medicine was a little glycerine to heal the alimentary canal.

"When I was up again Doctor told me to eat Grape-Nuts twice a day and no white bread for two years. I got well in good time and have gained in strength so I can do my own work again.

"My brain has been helped so much, and I know that the Grape-Nuts food did this, too. I found I had been made ill because I was not fed right; that is, I did not properly digest white bread and some other food I tried to live on.

"I have never been without Grape-Nuts food since and eat it every day. You may publish this letter if you like so it will help someone else." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Get the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

The Wilderness Made to Blossom

north, is certainly beyond any dream that was then suggested to the inspector. One sees a spacious mission home of stone, a large two-story school building and dormitory, a chapel with belfry and bell, a windmill supplying water for family, school and live stock, a substantial barn and other outbuildings, indicating that agriculture and the care of cattle and horses, are among the object-lessons that go to make up the varied methods by which a Christian civilization is exemplified. We drove to Yellow Hawk's village and found the tall young chief standing by his log cabin. He was idle and listless in aspect—industry and education being the farthest from his thought. He had on blanket and leggings, and his face and the parting of his hair were painted yellow; otherwise his features and expression were of the better Indian type.

Five years later, in the autumn of 1877, I landed from a steamboat at Peoria Bottom together with Dr. Stephen R. Riggs, Dr. Alfred L. Riggs and a number of others, who had come to attend the "Annual Mission Meeting" of the Dakota Indian churches, held for the first time in this Teton country. Delegates had come overland from the Sisseton tribe, on the Minnesota border some 230 miles, and others had come up from the Flandreau settlements and from the Yankton and the Santee agencies 300 miles away.

It is not within the purpose of this sketch to describe this meeting, though it was in its encampment and Indian customs picturesque and interesting. One of the discussions, conducted wholly in the Dakota tongue, related to marriage, and was suggested by the fact that some of the candidates for church membership had more than one wife. Yellow Hawk had three wives, though Spotted Bear, another chief, had but one. It was decided, after sympathetically considering all the difficulties, that the candidate must be married in Christian fashion to one of the wives, and that he was to put away the others, but see to their support.

I again saw Yellow Hawk. Five years older, he had greatly changed in looks. He was now wearing citizen's clothes, could read, having learned with some seventeen others of the adult Indians in a night school, the first winter after the mission was established. He attended some of the meetings and was reading his Bible. He had a fairly good field of corn, and had begun to show a disposition to work.

Mr. Riggs had secured the survey of the bottom lands for the purpose of settling the Indians upon farms. In 1880, as soon as the survey was filed, Mr. Riggs went with two of the chiefs, Yellow Hawk and Spotted Bear, to the land office at Springfield, near Yankton, and assisted them in making homestead entries. The U. S. Register thought he had no right to accept the filing of an Indian, and so the party went to the U. S. Judge of the District, and the two Indians were regularly naturalized. This was a novel thing for one who was American-born and whose ancestors had all been natives of this country. Since then it has been decided officially to be unnecessary. Twenty-one other homestead entries were subsequently made by these Indians on Peoria Bottom.

In 1882 my duties as Indian Inspector brought me again to this vicinity, and I saw Yellow Hawk and Spotted Bear. They both had become members of the church which had been organized here in 1879. Two of Yellow Hawk's wives had died—one some years before—and he was formally married to the one remaining, at the time he united with the church. Any other candidates who had more than one wife followed the rule mentioned, and were married to the one who had been the first wife, and kindly cared for the other or others. As a matter of fact, it should be stated that there was not generally a plurality of wives among these Indians. The greater number had but one wife.

At the time of this visit, ten years after my first meeting Yellow Hawk, I heard him lead in prayer in the chapel, and also saw him in his field riding a mower which he had bought. He had also acquired some cattle.

My next opportunity for observing in this personal way the effect of missionary teaching, was in the winter of 1885, when Yellow Hawk accompanied Mr. Riggs in a tour through New England, visiting the churches and public meetings, and presenting the course of Indian Missions. Yellow Hawk made his own talk, and Mr. Riggs interpreted. Great was the contrast between the appearance of the blanket Indian I had seen leaning against his cabin in 1872, and Yellow Hawk, as he now stood on the platform, erect, manly, addressing cultured audiences, and telling what he and his people had been, and what the Gospel had done for him.

At the present writing, over twenty-one years later, Yellow Hawk and Spotted Bear each holds the position of pastor to a native church and missionary station, elected by the members. Among these Indians, pertaining to the Cheyenne River Agency, Dr. Thomas L. Riggs has now under his charge eight organized churches. His work has also been extended northward about 125 miles to Grand River, where Miss M.C. Collins, who was formerly with him here at Oahe, has been laboring efficiently for many years, and has now under her care five stations among the Indians of the Sitting Bull followers. On this same reservation (Standing Rock) further north, are also five stations under the care of Rev. G. W. Reed.

Some years ago Mr. Riggs began a similar Gospel work among the large tribes of the Rosebud Reservation, located 150 miles to the southwest. He now has the supervision of five stations there, and the responsibility of finding native helpers for them, Rev. J. F. Cross, formerly in charge, having been transferred to Alaska.

When Rev. Thomas L. Riggs began in 1871, he was commissioned (as was his father before him) by the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions. Afterwards this Indian work was transferred to the care of the American Missionary Association. Two years ago the Association, owing to the increased call for enlargement in other fields, withdrew its support from the Oahe school. One year the school was suspended. But the teaching in the school seemed to Dr. and Mrs. Riggs so essential that they determined to carry it on without the aid of the Association. Mrs. Louisa Irvine Riggs, the faithful helpmeet for twenty-two years, is now on a tour in the East to raise the necessary funds.

The Northwestern, and the Milwaukee and St. Paul railroads are being rapidly extended across this very country to the Black Hills. They now find peaceable and industrious Indians, where a military escort was formerly needed for engineering parties. But much more significant is the sense of security of the farmer and the ranchman, and the peaceful conditions that have brought in the business, the industries, and the home-life of thriving villages and cities.

No adequate recognition or definite estimate can be made of the moral and spiritual results of such a lifework as that of Dr. and Mrs. Riggs. They are happy in the sense of duty done, and in the affection of these children of nature, who find in them their model of Christian living.

We Shall Know Each Other There

HEN the evening shadows gather,
And the long day's work is done,
n we reach that unknown country,
t beyond the setting sun:
r all the weary waiting,
their peaceful rest to share, nore need of anguished parting—
e shall know each other there.

rished forms who walked beside us own the long eventful years, we watched them as they vanished, rough a mist of falling tears;
ng voices hushed in silence,
ming with the angel band, ng their triumphant anthems,

some day if we may enter rough the pearly portals wide, y will be the first to meet us, er on the other side:
within our Father's mansion,
d in robes all white and fair, nting sweet a joyous welcome,
e shall know each other there.

the way they've walked beside us, er near, although unseen, den from our blinded vision the veil that fell between;
the while familiar voices hispered words of hope and cheer, life's battle raged so fiercely,
at our ears were dull to hear.

h, then, each rebellious murmur,
r we too are going home;
ng to find our household treasures, hen these tired feet cease to roam:
the resurrection morning,
ree from pain and free from care,
h our tear-dimmed eyes made perfect,
e shall know each other there.

A New Peace Society

ON Sunday, January 6, a new Peace Society began its active work among the churches of Greater New York. The organization is called The Peace Society of the City of New York. Its president is Mr. Andrew Carnegie.

Among its vice-presidents are Dr. Lyman Abbott, Hon. H. O. Strauss, Dr. H. M. McCracken, Messrs. R. C. Ogden, G. H. Putnam, and W. J. Schieffelin. Many other prominent men are identified with this movement. The plan is to conduct a campaign of education, and to form public sentiment in favor of universal peace and arbitration. The strongest speakers and writers will be engaged in this work.

Among the Workers

—Rev. P. Schramm, of the Moravian Mission at Sharon, Nicaragua, writes of a terrific hurricane which visited that place, causing great destruction to property. A number of natives took shelter in the mission house during the storm.

—Miss Suban E. Haswell, missionary at Moulmein, Burma, writes, that for several months the missionary workers there have been compelled, through lack of funds and provisions, to live very sparingly. She was compelled to scatter her native poor and most of the children, months ago, being unable to feed them.

—The first experiment in Bible teaching by the late D. L. Moody, was when he took twenty-five young people into his own home and gave them instruction in the Scriptures. By a singular coincidence, it is just twenty-five years ago since that first class was formed. To-day the Moody schools at Northfield, Mass., the outgrowth of that crude experiment, are the largest and most successful of their kind in the world.

—A Remarkable Series of Union Evangelistic Gospel Meetings is now in progress in Troy, N. Y. The churches co-operating are the First M. E., Grace M. E., Ninth Presbyterian, State Street M. E., First Baptist, Woodside Presbyterian, South Baptist and Second Baptist. The meetings are under the direction of Rev. James B. Ely, evangelist, assisted by evangelists George G. Maby, W. E. Biederwolf, Geo. Gable, Bradford Williams and Thos. Needham. Music is a prominent feature of the meetings, the musical soloists being Miss Grace Hildebrand, the "Gospel Nightingale," Miss Isabel Ten Eyck, and Messrs. Homer Rodeheaver and Albert McCrae.

—Dr. Wilfred Grenfell, of the Labrador Mission, writes us: "Many thanks for $50 from the readers of The Christian Herald. Our mission steamer, the Strathcona, has gone into winter quarters, and as we struck very heavy winds in an uncharted reef in the gulf, we are expecting to have to go to some expense, especially now that she has got to have repairs done to her boilers for the first time. In the heavy gale of wind in September, we saw six schooners go down, so you may be quite sure we feel the importance of going to some expense to avoid the danger of a similar experience next year, and I propose to devote the $50 towards refitting her. As she brings the only message of love to many of the scattered people of the coast (notwithstanding the good work done at the hospitals), we always consider the mission ship as the main feature of our work."

Called Higher

Josiah Neely entered into life everlasting on November 28, 1906, from his home in Philadelphia, Pa., after faithfully following his Lord and Master for seventy years.

Mrs. A. M. Hemphill passed away at her home, at West Bridgewater, Pa., June 18th, 1906, in her 80th year. She was for many years a shut-in, and denied church privileges, but her Christian character won her many friends, and made her a comfort to all about her.

Mrs. S. R. Johnston passed away at the home of her daughter, Mrs. Alexander Parker, in Salisbury, N. C., on May 13, 1906. Mrs. Johnston was a devoted Christian, and her children, in their sorrow, feel themselves drawn closer to God because she is in his presence. For many years she has belonged to The Christian Herald family, and its weekly arrival in her home was like that of a dear friend.

Mrs. Elizabeth Thomas passed away at her home, at Johnsville, Ky., on the 15th of December, in her 87th year. Her Christian life lives after her, in the influence which she diffused in her association with her large family of children, and an affectionate circle of friends. The Christian Herald was a great inspiration to her in her declining years, keeping her in touch with the theme she loved so well.

Mrs. Mary Rush Frey died at her home in Montavilla, Oregon, in December, 1906, aged 97 years. She was a Baptist, having been a charter member of the first Baptist Church organized west of the Alleghany Mountains. She was a woman of strong purpose and unflagging industry, and her home was the centre of ever-widening Christian thought. At the time of her death, Mrs. Frey had four children, 23 grandchildren, 36 great-grandchildren, and 19 great great-grandchildren.

LIBERAL OFFER TO THE CLERGY

In order to introduce the greatest temperance beverage to temperance people, the AMERICAN FRUIT PRODUCT COMPANY has decided on a very liberal plan and will send to every regularly ordained minister of the Gospel who is now pastor of a congregation, a bottle of DUFFY'S 1842 APPLE JUICE which is the pure juice of the apple.

It is non-alcoholic, sterilized and effervescent, and free from all preservatives.

It is a food and tonic for the entire family, and if used regularly no medicine will be required, as it drives the uric acid and impurities out of the blood, and keeps the system in a healthy condition.

Simply write to the AMERICAN FRUIT PRODUCT COMPANY, WHITE STREET ROCHESTER, N. Y., state name of church you are pastor of, and a full size bottle of DUFFY'S APPLE JUICE will be sent you free, express prepaid.

We do this knowing that every minister of the Gospel is anxious to find a pure, wholesome, non intoxicant, non-alcoholic beverage which he can safely recommend to the members of his congregation.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

Southerners in the Literary World*

MANY unprejudiced and conscientious students of American letters are ignorant of that body of literature—much of it worthy of permanency—which has arisen in the South. A study of the various literary movements and their results, show that the writings of this section are not merely disconnected efforts of isolated thinkers, but are the logical and continuous productions of a people who differ materially in views and sentiments from their neighbors of the North, and whose literature has been the result of an attitude differing exceedingly from that of other divisions of the Union.

Mr. Holliday has given himself without stint to the congenial task of the pioneer, and his hope of arousing a more zealous spirit of research into the literary resources of the South, is quite warranted by the volume under discussion. His is no superficial outline of recent contributions to Southern literature, but an exhaustive treatise upon its origin, the conditions under which it was fostered and the combination of circumstances which shaped the currents of thought of the various writers, both living and dead, whom he depicts with graphic pen.

Thomas Jefferson, "the Sage of Monticello," belongs to the old Southland; so do Edgar Allen Poe and Sidney Lanier, while the new South, rising Phœnix-like from the ashes which gave it birth, may well be proud of such names as those of Thomas Nelson Page, James Lane Allen, and Francis Hopkinson Smith: the last named of whom, however diversified the field of his literary labors may be, never writes with such true and tender touch as when portraying the scenes of his native South.

In lighter vein, but widely beloved, is the work of Mrs. Terhune, or Marion Harland, as she is known to her many American readers. Virginia claims her as her birth-child, and another generation yet must pass before we forget the thrills which accompanied the reading of St. Elmo, by Augusta Evans Wilson, a Georgian by birth and a life-long resident of Alabama. These are but a few links in the long chain of essentially Southern writers, and the volume which includes them all is a chronicle of distinctive literary fame.

*A History of Southern Literature, by Carl Holliday, M.A. Pp. 406. Price $2.50. The Neale Publishing Company, New York.

A Sentiment in Verse for Every Day in the Year constitutes the "Ethical Year Book No. II," and is brought out by Walter L. Sheldon, lecturer of the Ethical Society, of St. Louis. The compiler turns the pages of his own inner life in giving this collection of thirty years to the public, and it is replete with lofty and elevating verse. Pp. 116. S. Burns Weston, 1115 Locust St., Philadelphia, Pa., publisher.

The scene of The Amulet is laid in the Tennessee mountains, which seem to be the literary property of Charles Egbert Craddock. Most of Miss Murfree's stories show us the mountaineer as he is to-day, but this latest production from her pen, though still portraying the mountains, is a story of a century and a half ago. In a stockade fort in the wilderness, a little band of English soldiers resist the attacks of the Cherokee Indians, while "the winged god," Cupid, transfixes with his arrows the hearts of the officers, in behalf of their colonel's fair daughter. Pp. 356. Price $1.50. The Macmillan Co., New York and London.

First Year English for High Schools, by Emogene Sanford Simons, A. B., is a clearly organized plan of work in English. Pp. 207. Price 60 cents. A very cleverly prepared First Book in English for Foreigners, is that of Isabel R. Wallachs. It gives a practical working vocabulary of the simpler English words and idioms required for colloquial use, and should prove most helpful in teaching the crowded foreign classes in the evening schools of Greater New York and elsewhere. Pp. 152. Price 42 cents. Both published by Silver, Burdett & Co., New York, Boston and Chicago.

The ever popular Eclectic Readings, issued by the American Book Company, have added the following to their list of recently published volumes: The Golden Fleece, by James Baldwin, which covers a number of fine old Greek stories reduced to youthful comprehension. Pp. 286. Price 50 cents. Little Stories of France, by Maude Barrows Dutton, who pleasantly introduces Napoleon, Charlemagne and other French leaders to the children. Pp. 176. Price 40 cents. Histoire de La Mere Michel, by Emile de la Bedolliere, which is a pretty story written around a well-known song of French children, and is so simple as to form excellent practice for the aspiring student of French. All illustrated.

The Boy's Life of Abraham Lincoln, by Helen Nicolay. This is one of the best biographies of Lincoln, of its size, that has been published. Although written in a style suited to young readers, its accuracy and the amount of information given concerning Lincoln and his associates during the most trying period of American history, make it a book worthy the perusal of the mature reader. The writer is the daughter of John G. Nicolay, one of President Lincoln's secretaries, and who, with the late Secretary Hay, wrote the standard life of Lincoln. It is copiously illustrated with photographs and drawings from the pencil of Jay Hambridge. Cloth; pp. 307. Price $1.50. The Century Co., Publishers, New York.

Brier-Patch Philosophy, by "Peter Rabbit," as interpreted by Mr. William J. Long, is dedicated to "those who have found their own world to be something of a brier-patch," and is not an animal story or a book for children. It treats with cheery optimism the problems of life from an impersonal standpoint, and its finest lesson is that which advocates the theory—and practice as well—of being in harmony with the brier-patch as it is, rather than being perpetually fretted because we cannot understand why it should not be otherwise. "Peter Rabbit's" elucidation of the unknown ways are an admirable antidote for Schopenhauer's poison, and prescribes the rule of "smiling in the brier-patch," when tears are the only possible alternative. The volume is in unusually attractive form, with marginal illustrations. Pp. 296. Price $1.50. Ginn & Co., Boston and New York.

An evening spent with The Story Book Girls, by Christina Gowans Whyte, leaves one on thoroughly friendly terms with the entire Leighton family. To be admitted to their visiting list is to have a thoroughly good time, and not only girls, but mothers of girls, may enjoy meeting them, even if only on paper. Pp. 339. Price, $1.50. Will Payne has produced in When Love Speaks, a book which is all that even his admirers can expect from him. It is a vigorous novel of the America of to-day. It deals with the questions of civic virtue and corruption, but the author's main purpose is to tell a story, and both plot and action sustain the reader's interest to the end. Pp. 370. Price $1.50. The Macmillan Company, New York and London.

Musical Notes

The following are the questions and answers in the latest Review Lesson issued to the Sight-Singing Classes. As they are of general interest to all music-lovers, we give them below:

1. What is a bar? An upright line drawn across the staff to divide the music into equal parts. 2. What is a measure? The space between two bars. 3. What does the upper figure in a time signature tell you? It tells the number of beats in a measure. 4. what does the lower figure tell? The kind of a note to a beat. 5. Which note do you accent in a two-part measure? The note on the first beat. 6. What does the time signature ¾ indicate? Three beats to the measure; quarter note to each beat. 7. What is a four-part measure? One which has two strong and two weak beats. 8. What other measure contains two strong beats? A six-part measure. 9. Where is the time signature placed? At the commencement of a piece. 10. Where is the key-signature placed? Next to the clef on every line. 11. How does a dot affect a note? It increases its value one-half. 12. What is the value of a dotted half-note? It equals one-half and one-quarter?

A DOCTOR'S SLEEP

Found He Had to Leave Off Coffee

Many persons do not realize that a bad stomach will cause insomnia.

Coffee drinking, being such an ancient and respectable form of stimulation, few realize that the drug—caffeine—contained in coffee and tea, is one of the principle causes of dyspepsia and nervous troubles.

Without their usual portion of coffee or tea, the caffeine topers are nervous, irritable, and fretful. That's the way with a whiskey drinker. He has got to have his dram "to settle his nerves"—habit.

To leave off coffee is an easy matter if you want to try it, because Postum—well boiled according to directions—gives a gentle but natural support to the nerves and does not contain any drug—nothing but food.

Physicians know this to be true, as one from Ga. writes:

"I have relieved myself of a long-standing case of Nervous Dyspepsia by leaving off coffee and using Postum Food Coffee," says the doctor.

"I also enjoy refreshing sleep, to which I've been an utter stranger for 20 years.

"In treating dyspepsia in its various types, I find little trouble when I can induce patients to quit coffee and adopt Postum." The Dr. is right and "there's a reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Early Degeneracy

By Mrs. M. Baxter

) never abandoned his purpose in the creation of man. Adam and ad failed him, Abel's life had been ort, Cain had become hardened and obate; but even in the seed of Seth, as born in Adam's likeness, and not l's, our heavenly Father had a peoa remnant according to the election ice" (Rom. 11: 5). There was an , who "walked with God" (Gen. 5:) whom God could, even in those times, confide his first communication regarding the future coming of our Lord (Jude 14, 15); a man who, by faith, was "translated that he should not see death, and was not found, because God had translated him; for before his translation he had this testimony, that he pleased God" (Heb. 11: 5).

This was a foretaste of the accomplishment of God's purpose, to defeat the work of Satan in the Fall. Enoch bore witness to God, and God bore witness to him, as a living man, keeping step with God, continually pleasing him in a life of faith. He so fully responded to his God as to justify him in making him an exception to all the race of men who had preceded him, by taking him away without dying to be with him. When the light of Enoch's life shone no more on earth, God raised up another witness, Noah, who, like Enoch, "walked with God" (Gen. 6: 9) in a current exactly contrary to the spirit of the age in which he lived. It was an age of materialism; "Let us eat and drink, for to-morrow we die" (I. Cor. 15: 3) was the order of Noah's day; these earthly things, "eating and drinking, marrying and giving in marriage" (Matt. 24: 38) absorbed men; they lived for nothing else; self-will reigned supreme; they ignored all accountability to God, and "took them wives of all which they chose" (Gen. 6: 2). Self-pleasing opens the door of our being for the entrance of the enemy and his evil spirits, who are the fallen sons of God.

Things got to such a pass that God repented that he had made man; for instead of becoming united to him in whose image he was created, he became united in a horrible way with fallen spirits. And God determined to destroy man from the face of the earth.

God had his witnesses, but men in Noah's time shut their eyes to the light as men do now, and God was reduced to the necessity of bringing matters to a crisis. It was an awful moment for that generation when it was determined in the counsels of the Most High: "My Spirit shall not always strive with man, for that he also is flesh, yet his days shall be a hundred and twenty years" (Gen. 6: 3). Up to that time, God's spirit had striven; Enoch and Noah were the fruit of his striving; now God would be no longer mocked; man would not have God, and God would cease to force himself upon man. Yet, God was in no hurry to destroy; and one hundred and twenty years he waited, in the awful dignity of his patient love, while the only man in that generation who understood him, gave time and strength to the preparation of the ark; a solid indisputable witness to the faith of Noah, in his constant declaration that God's judgments were coming upon the earth.

It was only to a man whose real acquaintance with God was such that he could have the courage to hold on his separate walk with God; willing to be misunderstood, despised, scorned—that God could confide his purpose or make known his covenant.

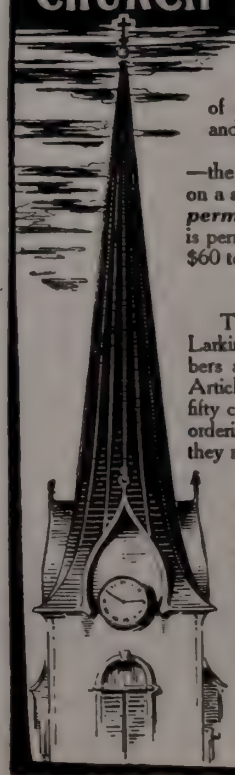
THIS CHURCH RAISED $1000.00



Without Extra Expense to Anyone.

The members and friends co-operated to purchase their home needs of us—the manufacturers—thus saving to the church the middlemen's profits and expenses.

The Larkin Church-Aid Plan can be used to raise a large sum quickly —the Christian Union Church of San Lorenzo, Cal., recently made $1,000 profit on a single order of Larkin Products. The plan can also be established as a permanent source of income—a pastor writes "Your Church-Aid Plan is permanently established and giving splendid results. We are already making $60 to $80 a month."

ONE-HALF TO THE CHURCH

To an interested Church Society (or individual) we will sell $20.00 worth of Larkin Products for $10.00. Of every dollar paid to the committee by the members and friends of the church for Larkin Laundry and Toilet Soaps, Toilet Articles, Coffee, Teas, Spices, Extracts, and more than a hundred home needs, fifty cents—one-half—goes to the committee for the church treasury. Those ordering through the committee pay no more for these pure Products than they now pay the retailer.

No expenses, no donations or contributions to be solicited. The plan is simple, practical, efficient, co-operative. Our special literature, etc., readily secures orders. Send coupon for complete information and application-blank No. 104

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but as evidence of genuineness and good faith. Where an answer by mail is desired, ten cents in postage stamps must be forwarded by the writers, with full address.

Henry S., Roca, Neb. A friend of mine made the remark, that the Bible teaches that it is wrong for a person to become jealous. I can find no reference, but would like to know. Can you give them? Is it wrong and improper for a young lady to scuffle with each and every young man of the neighborhood?

The spirit of sinful jealousy is rebuked in several passages in the Bible. (See Numbers ch. 5; also Prov. 6:34; Song of Sol. 8:6, etc). It is certainly wrong for one to encourage jealously, which is generally so blinded by passion and prejudice that it sees evil in things which, in themselves, may be wholly innocent. As to your other question, we would reply that no lady would seek to engage in a "scuffle." You probably mean "wrangle" and dispute.

J. W. F., Connersville, Ind. In the Bible Dictionary it speaks of a false Christ called Coziba. Who was he, and where did he flourish?

The name is probably derived from the Hebrew word kozbi, meaning false, and might, therefore, be applied to any one of the many spiritual impostors who have appeared from time to time. It was more specifically applied to Simeon, the first of the "false Christs," who, in the time of Hadrian, in the first half of the second century, proclaimed himself the Messiah, and assumed the name of Barcocheba, "son of the star," which was changed by his opponents into Bar-Cozeba, "son of a lie." He chose a forerunner, raised an army, was anointed king, coined money with his own name inscribed, and proclaimed himself Messiah and prince of the Jewish nation. He was killed in the siege of Bither or Bittir, by the Roman troops. This impostor was the means of sacrificing half a million Jewish lives.

S. E. D., Wellsville, N. Y. What do the "mountains of Bether" mean in Solomon's Song 2: 17?

"Bether" is an ancient poetic form of the mountainous district of Bithron in Gad, east of the Jordan, not far from Bethabara, where John baptized. It is now known by the modern name of "Bittir."

Zela C., Grand Rapids, Mich. Why was Great Britain so named?

The word "Britain" is supposed to be derived from the Phœnician word baratanic (country of tin), which was applied to the islands long before the Christian era. When the countries were under separate rule, England was Britannia prima; Wales, Britannia secunda, and Scotland, "North Britain." Under one sway, they were for the first time called "Great Britain."

Inquirer, N. Y. What is the condition of the South as to Prohibition?

Alabama, under local option, both as to the saloon and dispensary, has a majority of counties wholly dry, and a majority of the precincts and towns in the wet counties are also dry. Arkansas, 52 counties dry, and large areas of the 23 remaining counties are dry, fully four-fifths of her territory being now under prohibition. Florida, 27 counties dry. Georgia, 27 counties in which license can be granted, and under a three-mile law, most of her 27 wet counties are also dry. Kentucky, 69 dry, and 35 other counties mostly dry. Louisiana, seven-eighths of her territory is under prohibition. Mississippi has 66 counties dry. Missouri, 37 counties dry. North Carolina prohibits the sale except in incorporated towns, and many towns have voted dry. South Carolina runs her own saloons under the dispensary law. Tennessee now has only 8 towns in the State wherein liquor sales can be licensed. Texas has over half her counties wholly dry and half the remaining partially so. Virginia has banished the barroom entirely from 70 counties. West Virginia has banished it entirely from 30 counties and many towns. Oklahoma is under a constitutional prohibition covering more than half her entire territory for the first twenty-one years.

W. H. H., Atlanta, Kans. 1. What was the sin of Adam and Eve in Eden? Was it eating literal fruit? 2. Are we the children of the devil? 3. What did our Lord mean (John 8: 44), by saying to the Jews that they were of their father the devil?

1. The sin was disobedience of God's command. Genesis tells us it was eating of a tree they were forbidden to touch. We do not know anything about it except what you have in that book. Is it important? The sin was disobedience, and that is sufficient. 2. No, we are children of men, and through Christ may become children of God (see John 1: 12). 3. They were doing the works of the devil, deriving their spirit from him, and thus were the devil's spiritual children, as every man is who deliberately chooses to do the devil's work.

Mrs. O. D. C., Lowell, Mass. Why did they not act on Mr. Burrows' movement to adopt the resolution declaring that Reed Smoot is not entitled to his seat in the United States Senate?

The matter can be called up at any time, and probably will be up again during the present session.

M. G. M., Maxton, S. C. What is the eternal building to which Paul refers (II. Cor. 5: 1)?

The spiritual body which he mentions again (1. Cor. 15: 38–44). He looks upon his natural body as a tent-body, temporary and decaying, as you will see in the next verse. He hoped that when Christ came again it would be changed for a spiritual body, but if he died before his coming, there was a body prepared for him in heaven, not like this body proceeding from his parents, but a building of God not made with hands.

C. M. S., Edinburg, N. Y. On October 17, Prof. Lewis Swift replied to W. D. H., Ohio, saying that the nearest star was 24,000,000,000,000 miles away, etc., that it would take fifty-five years to send a telegram there. Would Prof. Swift kindly explain how it could take that amount of time to telegraph that distance?

The velocity of light is pretty accurately known, amounting to 186,317 miles a second, equal to seven-and-a-half times around the earth in the incredibly short space of one second, or four years to reach us from Alpha Centauri, the nearest star, and thousands of years from the faintest stars depicted in the photographic plate, with an exposure of twenty hours. The velocity of electricity on wires depends on the conductivity of the wire and force of the battery. Silver is the best conductor, then copper. Iron is not as good, but is used because of its strength and cheapness. I assumed that its velocity on an iron wire would reach one-half around the earth in one second, or fifteen times slower than light, and therefore would take a telegram fifteen times longer to go to the nearest star than for light to come from there, or fifteen times four years, equal to sixty years. It will therefore take one hour and fifty minutes to send a telegram to the sun, and but twenty seconds to the moon, and one-half a second to Japan.

Marathon, N. Y. LEWIS SWIFT.

Constant Reader, Brazil, Ind. What are the salaries of clergymen and Bishops in the Church of England? Have the Bishops the right to sit in Parliament?

The salaries of the clergy vary in different districts, and they have no connection with the extent of the parishes. There are instances in which a clergyman receives $5,000 a year as vicar of a parish persons, while his neighbor, who is v a parish of 30,000 population, re only $1,000. In the former case, pious layman one, two or three cen ago left a farm or a few houses, th of which was to be given to the clerg for the time being as an income. T sult is that some parishes are well en and some poorly endowed. The in of the Bishops also vary. The Bish Bristol receives $15,000; the Bish London $50,000. Twenty-four Bisho two Archbishops have seats in the Ho Lords.

J. V. H., Grand Haven, Mich. Do the n Turks descend from Arab tribes, or som people of the Orient?

The national Turkish traditions, served by Persian historians, point t region watered by the river Seleng Mongolia) and its affluents, as the tive seat of the Turkish people. pretty certain that Turks and Mo were originally different stems of a people. The evidence for this rests o indubitable affinity of the Mongolia Turkish languages, and the similari the ethnological characters of the races.

C. C. C., Pine Bluff, Ark. Do you know how heathen were converted through the mi ary societies last year, and how much was spent by the missionary societies? how many missionaries are employed?

The total number of missionaries ployed belonging to America and Eu was 12,789. The number of heathen made profession of faith last year 133,069, making a total of living con of 1,349,908. The total income of societies which was spent in sending missionaries, in cost of buildings, prin and other expenses, was $18,605,746.

UP AND DOWN IN THE PHILIPPINES

Unrivalled Natural Beauties Described—The Joys of Gospel Work Among the Native Children

DST all the work and travel incident to missionary life in the Philippines, we rest some, or think we do. p the beautiful Pagsanhan River, is more than 300 feet wide, and is just lined and overhung with cocoanut trees and bamboo—the "Royal Gorge Philippines" is entered. The river narrows to 100 feet and often less. Several are encountered in the three or four miles of the gorge. The walls, rocky and ndicular on both sides for 500 feet, are covered with tropical foliage, and here here are little waterfalls, tumbling down two, three and four hundred feet. argest, and only one which continues the whole year, is known as the "Bridal Falls." Up another part of Pagsanhan River is the beautiful "Botokan Falls," tumbles straight down 300 feet into another most beautiful gorge. How true ur Father distributed the beauties of nature and gave to each nation a share! ently we invited the thirty children of our Pagsanhan Primary Sunday School for a twenty minute ride on ospel launch, the Mabuting ("Good News"). Each was asked to invite a young , thinking the outing might nterest them in the Sunday ol; and thus we sailed one day afternoon up beautiful nhan River with sixty chiland ten grown people, and could have carried more. y all the little girls came d in holiday attire. The dresses were nearly all er Hubbard; some belted blue or pink satin ribbon , others hanging loose. With panish flutter of their gayed fans, we made a fine spec-

e boys were all dressed as are in America in summer- with blouse suits or coats shirts with collars. Recently ttended a Sunday morning service in a distant town, and on the front seat sat y of six, clothed, as Dr. Brown would say, "In the atmosphere." The text of vangelist was: "Be Clothed with Humility," and the little boy got the idea was seen to go out of the meeting. In about ten minutes he came back ed with a shirt, and took his place on the front seat listening attentively to the of the sermon. One reason why these children love to come to Sunday School e singing of the Gospel hymns; the giving of little bright lesson picture cards clean picture papers, which they appreciate and read over again, for the boys and girls are learning rapidly to speak and read English. We can just use great quantities of lesson picture cards for we have 100,000 children to work among. Any kind of lesson papers for the little ones, and all kinds of Sunday School papers are helpful to the boys and girls and young people here. Can you not send your second-hand ones?

Recently we went down the river in the launch two miles to the town of Lumbang, and met 150 children, who eagerly gathered around the little baby organ, and sang and listened for an hour to the Gospel stories. Several mothers came, and pulled their children out and whipped them, because they came to the Protestant meeting. This has happened several times during the past year, and yet they come, and at the close of the meeting say, "You must come again, we want picture paper."

In one city where Protestant work is starting, a man gave a corner lot 30 x 30 feet, Plenty of heavy squared timbers from an old fallen-down building were lying about on adjacent premises, together with a large quantity of tiles for roofing. These were offered for a chapel, if men could be found to do the work. Sixteen miles away, at Pagsanhan and Santa Cruz, twenty members of our church, mostly carpenters, were found, who were willing to give two days free.

The Launch "Mabuting Balita" (Good News), with an Outing Party on Pagsanhan River

With these our launch, Mabuting Balita, sailed one morning last October, at 5 o'clock, carrying 600 pounds of lime for roofing, three barrels of pure spring water (the capacity of the tanks), a bag of rice and other food, three women to do the cooking, carpenters' tools and plenty of rope and tackle—a load of three tons—and landed across the lake at the place of chapel building, sixteen miles distant, in one hour and fifty minutes. In two days the heavy work of building the chapel was finished, and a meeting held, attended by 700 people.

Next morning early, our band of willing workers returned home, landing at seven A. M., after an absence of fifty hours. The total cost of transportation was less than one dollar, American money! Recently, on a trip with Rev. J. L. McLaughlin, of the American Bible Society, during six days we traveled more than seventy miles with the boat, and with stereopticon and moving pictures on the "Life of Christ," preached the Gospel to 12,000 people—2,000 each night in six different cities. Many Bibles were sold, and everywhere we were urged to remain. We wish we could tell those who are helping to send Sunday School papers to the 2,000 students receiving them, just how much these papers are read and appreciated.

FOOLISH QUESTIONS

TEXT:—Titus 3:9: "But avoid foolish questions"

HAVE you a fathom line? Then drop it into the seas. Have you a telescope? Then cleanse its lens and focus it upon the stars. Have you a crowbar? Then with it pry open the hermetically sealed doors of the geological libraries and finger the leaves of rock, and read the geneological histories of the species. Have you a microscope? Then with the bacteriologists roam through the corridors of the infinitesimal and find an aquarium in a drop of water and exquisite beauty in the end of a fly's wing. God would not have placed the wonders of the heavens above us and the wonders of the deep beneath us and the wonders of the land about us, if he had not meant us to explore them and to try to make the works of his fingers part of our lives.

The Inquisitive Mind

You never yet met an intelligent man or woman who was not continually asking questions and striving to understand the unknown. The indisposition to investigate and the unwillingness to attempt the solution of the problems of life about us, are always the signs of an intellectual weakling. In the spiritual life, as well as in the political and the mechanical and the philosophical world, the one word which should be most often spoken by the human lips is "why?" We should be continually asking, "Why this?" and, "Why that?" and, "Why the other thing?" The human mind and soul cannot mark time. The mind must either broaden out or shrivel up. The interrogation point is a golden key with which we should try to unlock the manifold mysteries of the universe.

But there is an intelligent way of pushing that word, "why" and a very foolish way. There is a way of asking "why," which proves to the world that you are sincerely desirous to obtain knowledge. Then there is a way of asking "why" which proves to the world that you do not wish to learn, but are moved by curiosity only or by a desire to unsettle fundamental questions. There never was a foreigner who came to America who asked more questions than Li Hung Chang. But the questions which he asked were generally frivolous, and to our ideas, impertinent. He would ask aged maiden ladies why they never married and how old they were. He would ask people why they wore false teeth. He would ask this question and that, and the other question, until he made every one around him uncomfortable. Thus some people push that word "why" in a most ridiculous way. By the Socratic method, they try to argue God and Christ and the Bible out of the minds and hearts of their friends. With the interrogation point, they would advertise to the world their transcendental reasoning powers, when they are only advertising their transcendental curiosity.

The Spirit not the Letter

Paul, in his Epistle to young Titus, advises him to beware of such frivolous curiosity. When he tells him to avoid foolish questions, he is not circumscribing the intellect of this young man by telling him not to think and not to investigate. He is laying down the broad principle which you and I would do well to heed, when he said, "Avoid foolish questions and genealogies and contentions and strivings about the law, for they are unprofitable and vain." In other words, avoid those foolish questions and contentions which have nothing to do with pressing home the great purposes of the Gospel. Live only for those divine truths and self-evident facts which will draw us nearer and nearer to the Cross of Jesus Christ. The poet expressed my interpretation of Paul's meaning, when he wrote:

Some read the blessed Book they don't know why,
It somehow happens in their way to lie:
Whilst others read it with uncommon care,
But all to find some contradictions there.
Some read to bring themselves into repute,
By showing others how they can dispute.
Whilst others read because their neighbors do,
To see how long 'twill take to read it through.
Some read to prove a pre-adopted creed,
Thus understand but little what they read,
And every passage of the Book they bend,
To make it suit that all-important end:
Some people read, as I have often thought,
To teach the Book instead of being taught.

Paul is saying, "Titus, my son, study the spirit of the Scripture instead of the letter of the law." We should not be among those Bible students who are spiritually nearsighted, and hold their eyes so close to the sacred pages that they can only see a sentence or a word at a time, and they do not realize that some of the passages of Scripture had special and exclusive reference to the times in which they were written, and to the geographical conditions of the writers. That would be a very inadequate description of the beauties of Shadyside, which was limited to an architect's specification of the details of the home of the father of American letters. It might be absolutely correct, and its measurements unimpeachable; but we should miss the spirit and the tender associations of the place, that would make us feel that we saw it as Irving saw it. And yet some men seem to school themselves against studying the spirit of the Bible. They read merely the letter of the Book. By reading the letter only, they lose the true purposes for which the Bible was given as a guide to us through this world to the other.

Galileo's Recantation

This fact was conspicuously illustrated in the persecution of the physicist and astronomer, Galileo. You are familiar with the story of his life. He was not the first inventor of the telescope, but he was, without doubt, the first intelligent user of it. He focused his eye upon the heavens and began to follow the movements of the heavenly bodies. He went on in his investigations, until at last he found out that the earth moved around the sun. "Absurd, absurd," cried the Church of Rome. "The earth does not move about the sun. The sun moves around the earth. Does not the Bible tell us that Joshua halted the sun above Gibeon, and the moon in the valley of Ajalon? Away with the heretic! Away, away!" Then the so-called literalist priests placed the heavy hand of the law upon Galileo, and would have tortured him to death had he not signed this humiliating recantation: "With a sincere heart and unfeigned faith I abjure, curse and detest the said errors and heresies (viz: that the earth moves, etc.) I swear that I will never in the future say, or assert anything verbally, or in writing, which may give rise to a similar suspicion against me. I, Galileo, have abjured as above with my own hand."

The Purpose of the Bible

Now was there ever such unmitigated nonsense as that act of the Church? It was the setting up of a claim that a book written to teach morality and religion, should be an authority on science also. It was as if one should insist on taking an incidental reference of a physician on a question of music, as an authority superior to the dictum of a musician. The Bible writers, intent on teaching men how to live in this world so as to be happy in the next, learned in the things of God, but unlearned in the crude science of their times, accepted the ideas current at the period, and passed on to their appointed topic. But Galileo was declared a heretic on such testimony, and saved his life only by recantation. Let us be careful, lest we demand of the Bible more than it was ever intended to teach.

The same bigoted stupidity of the mediæval church we can find in the church of the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries. The scientists went on in their investigations, and they proved that this old planet was not created five or six thousand years ago. It has been developing during thousands upon thousands and hundreds of thousands of years. The Bible, by the way, does not fix a date for the Creation. It merely says: "In the beginning." (The dates on the margin are those of Archbishop Ussher, who lived in the sixteenth century A.D.). The geologists went on in their investigations, and found eras and epochs and ages, perhaps a million years apart. Not only did science prove the immense age of the earth, but that the development was a slow process of ages. They brought these facts to the Church, and said: "Come and see and study." The Church threw up its hands in horror. "What will become of our Bibles if you prove those statements true?" they exclaimed. "Does not the Bible declare that God made the earth and the heavens in six days? No more and no less." "But," said the scientific theologians, "perhaps the 'day' of God's creation meant an era—not a day of twenty-four hours." "Absurd!" cried the Church. "Absurd! A day means a day of twenty-four hours, and nothing else." So the Church fought the investigations of science. They fought them on and fought them on. The theologians s the church members: "If you believe this heres are not a Christian." The result was the Churc tinued to read the first chapter of Genesis as liter tory, until it made itself absolutely ridiculous. overlooked the essential fact that the "day" o creation is not a day of twenty-four hours. "On is with the Lord as a thousand years and a tho years as one day" (II. Peter 3: 8).

Unsolvable Mysteries

Now there is the same disposition to-day as there in the mediæval church, and in the church of the teenth century. Some church members to-day are ing to stir up internal strife by reading the letter o Bible instead of the spirit of the Bible. They trying to take certain Bible passages and twist out of all semblance of their true meaning. The this with the assumed air of great spiritual erud and Gospel sanctity. When they quote these pass they look at us in a very condescending way, as as to say: "Have you not forgotten such and su passage? Do you not wish you knew as much a the Bible as I do?"

We should read the spirit of the Bible. More that, we should never try to solve the unsolvable teries of God and his work, which can never be so this side of the grave. Now, it is a wise man wi willing to recognize the fact that there are certain itations to his mental and spiritual faculties. It wise man who is willing to confess that there are tain things he does not know, and never will be abl know, this side of heaven. When you and I com that glorious condition of mind and soul, we shall our minds and hearts to the enjoyment of the Gospe

We come to our pastors and friends, and ask just same kind of foolish questions that the disciples as Christ of old. We come to Christ, for instance, ask, "Jesus, here is a man who has been married or three times on earth. When he gets to heaven that man going to be a Mormon and have two or th wives?"' You know this is the question which Sadducees propounded to Jesus himself. Or we be to try to solve the resurrection of the physical bo Or we go into a long and elaborate study of wh Christ spent his time between the crucifixion and resurrection. Or we try to solve

The Mystery of the Trinity

And instead of quietly going ahead, in a brave, h ble, Christian way, doing the work which God gives to do, and accepting the atonement of the Cross, fritter away our Gospel peace and usefulness by ask impossible questions and in trying to solve impossi mysteries. Now, my friend, why cannot you follow advice of Paul? Why do you not concentrate all y faith on Jesus Christ? Why not accept him at word, and go forth and work in God's vineyard?

But if the great mysteries of the Bible should separate us from the love of God, why should the gr divine mysteries keep one Christian church from wo ing in Gospel fellowship with other Christian church Because one Christian church puts special emphasis up one of God's attributes in its creed or practice, is th any reason why other Christian churches, which l stress on another of God's attributes, should not affilia with that body of Christians, or co-operate with i Because one Gospel church loves to sing the old psalm and another loves to use a liturgy, and another chur loves to put emphasis upon immersion, and anoth church makes the sermon the chief part of its service, it any reason why all these Christian churches shou not be united in working for the same Master, and f salvation by the same Divine blood?

When you look over the ecclesiastical history of t world, you will notice one striking fact: The church apt to degenerate when it becomes prosperous. Aft the crucifixion came the dark days of persecution. Th fires of persecution only purified it. The Christia church began to grow. Its foundations became stronge As the early church grew, it was not only able to resi and drive back its persecutors, but it became stronge and stronger, until at last it was able to lay claim upo the temporal as well as the spiritual life of the nations

Miss Burd and Some of Her Boys

A Young Student of Darwin

"BAD BOYS MADE OVER"

Miss Burd's Novel Experiment With So-called Incorrigibles, and How It Succeeded

HE proverbial "old woman who lived in a shoe" and was so greatly worried about her children, ought to have nd out her leather habitation, and gone it her big family to live on a farm. The ool of the old nursery rhyme is, that boys must be ro ht up in proper environment if they are to turn ut seful men, and capable, honest citizens. A gradual w ening to the fact that the boy who goes wrong is no sinned against than sinning, is seen in the reluc- an of wise magistrates to-day to send boys brought ef e them for wrong-doing, to the questionable com- an of the reformatory inmate. But where then shall ve end such boys, or what can we do with them? One es rceful woman (she deserves to be called one in a ho and), answers cheerfully and confidently, "Send he to me."

his woman is Miss Burd, who has mapped out a life- ro as the rescuer of the waifs and strays of the boy ro d. Miss Burd has prevailed upon one of the large an owners near Doylestown, Pa., to give her the na agement of a large farm. Here she has established f m school, where boys brought to court for minor ff ces may be sent and educated, and taught that he is a place in the better world of achievement for he vayward youngster of the slums.

Incorrigible!" said Miss Burd, when discussing her ro ; "there is no such word, or there ought not to be. ve ruled it out of my dictionary. The boys who o e here, are, for the most part, brought straight from o t. They are, in reality, sentenced to live on this an . If they are dissatisfied and run away, they are a ht and brought back. But ask any of them if h are dissatisfied."

o one could be found in the little school who seemed o ave the remotest desire to return to the city home, ri the single exception of one Hebrew boy, who has be called "Shoestrings," by the bright little fellows ne r Miss Burd's care.

lenty of good, wholesome food is provided for the o ; milk in abundance, and all the fruit they care o ick and eat. They are up with the sun in the n ning, and they do all the work of a good-sized farm. Wh the quickness of city boys, these "incorrigibles" learn to milk, hoe, weed, attend to the needs of the live stock, and do the chores of the farm almost as soon as they are put to work. For the heavier work, such as harvesting, plowing, and reaping, men from neighboring farms are brought to the school farm; but the boys lend a hand, and but for the lack of an adult's strength, they do as well as a hired man, making up in numbers and in enthusiasm what they lack in physical ability.

The Old-fashioned Home

It is astonishing how easily the boys seem to cast behind them the evil influence of unholy associations, as soon as they find themselves in a really wholesome atmosphere. The language of the little fellows is never disrespectful or blasphemous. The charm of the new life is a constant source of delight. There is a keen competition to secure the most honorable employment. One boy has come to regard the cows as his especial charge. Another has taken a queer fancy to wood-chopping. To another the horses appeal, and no other boy must come near his precious charges. Miss Burd, with a wise insight into boy nature, and with a diplomatic regard for each one's preferences, gives to the boys such work as they fancy, and so the little family lives in contentment, and the work goes smoothly on day by day.

So wisely has Miss Burd made use of the little colony of waifs entrusted to her care that the farm, handed over to her as an experiment by a good-hearted individual, is actually paying a fair profit on the boys' work. Besides providing all the food required for their keep by their own efforts, the boys manage, under Miss Burd's guidance, to raise sufficient produce to drive a brisk trade with the neighboring townfolk, and so the farm is actually becoming self-supporting. Farmers living nearby are applying to Miss Burd for assistance, and are offering good homes to the rescued waifs, in return for their services. Not many of the boys are permitted to avail themselves of these offers, for Miss Burd counts it as of great importance to train the minds of the boys. For this purpose she has regular school sessions daily, and the attentive little scholars that gather at these classes are a pattern and a model for boys anywhere.

One little fellow at this farm is a diligent student of Darwin. Miss Burd tells how this boy, upon hearing of the death of the judge before whom he was brought several times in the unhappy old days of city life, came to Miss Burd and propounded to her this strange question: "Miss Burd, now he's dead, who is going to be my judge?" Darwin apparently hadn't opened his eyes to the fact that the farm school meant to him evolution from the life of the slums.

Environment or heredity, which has the most influence on a boy's life? It is a favorite yet an unsettled question. A study of the boys at the Doylestown farm school, would tend to show that environment has a great deal more to do with the shaping of a boy's life for good or evil than the character of his grandparents.

he Roman Catholic Church financially prospered, it spiritually prosper? Nay. The Vatican became sspool of sin. The Bible was a closed book. The ture Chamber was the Holy of Holies. Flagrant was everywhere in the church. Then came the ne mission of a new church.

he Reformation came to its birth. Martin Luther the fight in Germany, John Knox in Scotland, and n Wycliffe in England. The grasp of the Pope was ken off, but soon in the English church came laxity indifference. Another Reformation was needed, and n Wesley and George Whitefield began to preach, Methodism and Congregationalism began their hty work. Still later, William Booth has stirred stagnant waters with his Salvation Army. So, as need has arisen, God has unfailingly raised up men lo his work.

Wherever the churches, growing in numbers and in ncial strength and power have drifted from God and ned their Master's temples into places of merchan- e; wherever their preachers have become unlike the nble Nazarene; then there has come a spiritual rebirth and a new church. And to this new church, this humble church, has fallen the task of spiritually leavening the old churches of the world. And, my friends, if you do not believe that what I say is true, I would like you to answer me one question: If Jesus Christ were to come upon earth to-day, where do you believe the lowly Nazarene would prefer to preach? In the gorgeous Vatican of a Pope, with his spotless robes? In the chancel of a great cathedral, and be paid the $75,000 a year as its archbishop? Or, in some fashionable Protestant church, whose wealthy members sometimes sit stolidly indifferent to the great sufferings of mankind? Or, do you believe Jesus would feel most at home as a street preacher, working with the humblest workers in the slums? There can be but one answer.

Thus I have tried to show you that you have only one spiritual duty in life. We can all be one in unity for the Cross. I remember many years ago, when in our seminary we were discussing the sacraments, I said to our professor: "Doctor, you say that we must use wine and bread at the Lord's Supper. Supposing I were on an Arctic expedition? Supposing we were caught amid the icebergs, and, in all probability, were about to die? Supposing I wanted to have the communion of the Lord's Supper with the men of the ship, and supposing the only food we had left was some hard-tack and some soup. Could I use the soup for the wine and the hard-tack for the bread?" The professor looked at me a moment in surprise. Then he said: "Under such a condition the soup would be as acceptable to God as the wine, and the hard-tack as the bread. It is not the wine and the bread that we lift to the lips which makes us consecrated to the Saviour, but the spirit of the yielding of our own hearts to his will."

The old professor was right. It is not by ecclesiastical formulas that you and I are going to come to the Cross, but only by consecrating our lives to Christ's will. Friends, you may have been quibbling in the past. You may have been switching yourself off from the main spiritual issue. Pledge yourselves to him. Having given yourselves to him and his cause, join with brethren of any name in work for him, and following the Apostle's advice, preach Christ crucified and avoid "foolish questions."

AMONG RICH AND POOR IN PERSIA

By a "Christian Herald" Special Correspondent

I HAVE been wishing to write to you for a long time, but as my practice increases the number of my patients become like a growing family, and I find little time for other duties. Since I wrote to you last a great many changes have taken place in this country, about which you have probably been reading in your daily papers.

We ourselves do not know just how much progress is going to be made, or how far forward we are going, but we are sure of one great and wonderful, and a most unexpected change that has taken place, which is that the most conservative party—the priests and sayids (descendants of Mohammed) have actually fomented and led a revolution. We do not know just how long this change will last. Formerly all the blame for not progressing and adopting European civilization was thrown upon the priests and sayids—it was right to a certain extent.

Another social change which has taken place of late, is the favor and friendly attitude of the Mohammedans toward the Christians. The enmity, the inborn and undying bitterness of centuries, against each other, was swallowed up in the common suffering of humanity. Once more Moslem forgot his prejudices and feelings against the infidel and the unbeliever. God's ways are wonderfully wise and different from ours. It would have taken centuries to forget the bloody sea which separates these two religious bodies —Christians and Mohammedans.

The latter change has been very sudden and very recent, I hope its roots will be deep and strong. The Christians feel so secure and at ease. Note, just a few days ago the Moslems everywhere were talking of massacreing the Christians, and were saying, "Let us wipe off the Christians; they have killed our brothers in Russia. Why does not our sharyat (law) make lawful to us their wives, daughters, possessions, and everything that belongs to them?" In Tabriz during all this change "not a nose bled," as the Persians say. How long this quietude is going to last we do not know. People do look so happy, and hopeful of still better days, looking forward to the new Parliament, although one person in a hundred thousand does not usually understand what a parliament or a constitution means. The latter is called mashoota in the Arabic.

We are again in the month of fast, and against all the natural laws, day has been turned into night. It is also, a month of feasting and entertaining of the most extravagant order, especially among the rich classes. During the month, seldom a family sits at their meals without guests. Everybody, rich or poor, tries to provide the best food that they can afford.

You will see the poor work the whole day in order to earn a few shahs to buy a pound of sugar, or meat, tea, butter, or some rice. During the long summer days a hungry man digs thorns, and if too poor to own a donkey, he straps the load upon his own back and walks six or seven miles or more to bazaar, and sells it for one or two kirans (nine cents equal one kiran). It will take him the rest of the day to come back to his home with the coveted food for the night. The well-to-do, many days before the fast begins, prepare many kinds of sweets and cakes, most of them quite palatable; some of them are made just for the sake of appearance.

Last night a lady friend of high rank, with eight other ladies (Moslems), had invited us to Oraj Achmagh (opening of fast) at 5 P.M. This is their breakfast, and of course they were very hungry and thirsty, as they had not drank nor eaten anything since 4 A.M. this morning. A supra (tablecloth) two yards long, and one and a-half yards wide, was spread in the centre of the room right upon the floor. The samovar (the Russian teapot) was steaming on one side of the room; a maid sitting near it was pouring tea in small glasses. Another maid was taking it to the guests, putting it in front of them, who were waiting to hear the sound of cannon to announce the time of eating. After sipping our tea, we all got up and arranged ourselves around the supra, according to the rank of the guests. As I had no rank I sat by the hostess.

The oblong, pliable, and soft pieces of bread were folded lengthwise, and arranged in a row around the supra on the outer part of it, and the central portion was filled with different varieties of food.

Persian Ladies Making Calls on a Fast Day

We all sat on the floor real Persian style, bending forwards double, and putting the left arm and hand upon the knees, and only eating with the right hand, filling it with rice and pressing it with the thumb to make it stick together, so that in carrying it to the mouth it would not spill. Before eating they all said, Bismillah (in the name of God), then began to eat.

During the meals, no conversation is generally carried on; it is considered disrespectful to the bread, which is venerated almost as supernatural. No Moslem would put his feet upon a piece of bread, and if seen in the mud in the streets or anywhere else out of place, people stop and pick up and eat it, or put it in a place where birds or beasts would eat it.

It is customary during meals, to make little morsels of food and bread, and pass them to each other as a sign of friendship and good feeling. Of course I was offered, a few times, a morsel of bread stuffed w chicken; of course prepared with their fingers. Ou respect I had to accept it and eat it, but could not g back, because I was a Christian.

This evening, as it was the month of fast, a wom priest was brought. She began in a mournful tone wail and to lament the martyrs' black fate and suf ings under their enemies, Omar and his companions. sobbed and cried, slapping her face, and most of ladies and the maids did the same. I noticed a few the younger ones were laughing under their ha kerchiefs, which is considered very impious. At int vals, they were drinking tea, and were freely smoki

Their very ignorant zeal and earnestness made very sad, and filled me with compassion, and I think dropped a tear or two against my wish. Then one the ladies said to me, "Are not these stories hea rending narratives—are you crying for our martyrs a for their sufferings?" "No," I said, "I am filled w sadness for you ladies in particular. In my heart was pleading with my God to open yo hearts and eyes to seek the truth and fi it in the Lord Jesus Christ, the Savio of the world and the hope of the nations Then the conversation became gener and the priestess said, "We, Mohamm dans, believe in Hassati Isa (Jesus Roh-Allah (soul or spirit of God), we not believe that he ever died upon t cross, but he was miraculously taken heaven, and some one else put on t cross and died as his substitute." "No. I said, "we learn from the Bible that H that is Christ himself, was nailed upo the cross, suffered and died like oth people, only suffered more, because he w guiltless."

Mohammedan women hold prayer mee ings during summer as well as winte Sometimes they gather in mosques, b most of the time the well-to-do women i vite the women of their neighborhood come to their houses, where a woma priest is called, when she repeats the stor of the martyrs, and all together sob, cry and slap their faces. Crying is considere most meretorious. Many a time I hav asked my patients not to cry. They say "Oh, it makes our eyes feel bette and brighter when we cry for the martyrs."

Fasting for the rich is a pleasure, and a change whic they need and crave for. There are so few, and s much excitement during it. But for the poor, especiall during the long summer days, when they will have t work for from ten to forty shahs a day (one shah i equal to half-a-cent). I have seen them groaning fron thirst, and expecting for their supper a piece of brea full of sand, and a few blades of green vegetables, or piece of onion, and plenty of God's delicious water, an when they drink with relish they look up to heaven an say: shokoalsin adiyan Allah billa naamata (thanks b to thy name, God, for such a blessing). During the fas all the mosques are open all night, and people flock t them to hear what the molla has to say.

Let us pray for the Lord of the vineyard to send forth fearless and brave workers, who will proclaim the good tidings of salvation in spite of thick darkness and cruel superstition.

KINGSTON WRECKED BY EARTHQUAKE

OVER A THOUSAND DEAD, THOUSANDS INJURED, AND TEN THOUSAND HOMELESS — THE RUINS SWEPT BY FIRE — AN APPALLING CALAMITY

At half-past three o'clock on Monday afternoon, January 14, a terrific shock of earthquake was felt over a large section of the island of Jamaica, W. I. It was especially severe in the city of Kingston, and in the neighborhood of Holland Bay and Bull Bay, and wrought havoc along a large section of the Jamaican coast. At this season of the year, the beautiful West Indian island is usually crowded with tourists, and the hotels at Kingston and all of the nearby resorts had the full quota of visitors—a happy, gay, thoughtless population, devoting the days to recreation and pleasure and untroubled by care. With the first tremor of the earth came terror and panic. There was an indescribable, sickening sensation of the earth swaying and grinding; then came the crash of falling buildings, cries of pain, and scenes of general confusion. The entire business section of Kingston seemed to oscillate and crumble into ruin in a few moments. Hotels, warehouses and shipping offices, banks, public buildings, schools, churches and the principal theatre, were all involved in the general disaster.

Clouds of dust arose from the ruins of masonry and woodwork, and a few minutes later, flames burst forth in many different quarters. To add to the general terror and helplessness, it was discovered that the water mains had been broken by the earthquake shock, and there was nothing with which to fight the conflagration. The Myrtle Bank Hotel, the largest of its kind in the city, was practically destroyed; the British military hospital was a blazing pile of wreckage; the Constant Springs Hotel was destroyed; the Colonial Bank was burned down; and many of the wharves were included in the general destruction.

For nearly twenty-four hours, all cable communication with Jamaica was interrupted by the breaking of the land lines, and it was not until Tuesday, January 15, that the first news of the calamity reached other lands. The loss of life, through fire and falling buildings, is estimated at between 1,000 and 1,500, and the number of injured runs up into the thousands. There is a great army of homeless and destitute, who will have to be cared for during the next few months. Supplies and tents are urgently needed. Besides the very large number of dwellings wrecked in the city proper, hundreds of others within a radius of 30 miles were demolished by the convulsion, which seems to have been of the nature of a gigantic rock-slide. The geological formation of the soil in and around Kingston is marked by great fissures (known as "faults" to the geologists), and the shock displaced the upper layers of these rocks, with the disastrous effect already stated.

Among the missing who are supposed to have perished are Sir James Fergusson, Chairman of the Port Royal Steam Packet Company; J. W. Middleton Bradley, Bertie Varley, Charles Sherlock and brother, Captain Constantine, of the Royal Mail Steamship Line; Captain Young, Commander of the steamship Arno, of the same line, Captain Lamont, J. R. Mudon, J. W. Middleton, J. A. Payne, E. Morris, Dr. Gibbs, Dr. Manier, four children of the Livingston family, Miss Locket, Miss A. H. Nathan, Major Hardiman, Lieutenant Louder, Miss Sullivan, Lieutenant Dalrymple-Hay, Capt. Motley, Lieutenant Dixon, Quartermaster Price and Mrs. Price, Mr. Brannel, Dr. Robertson and wife, and G. McN. Livingston, Senior Treasury Clerk. There is also a considerable list of missing, which includes two brothers De Cordova, leading provision merchants, and a relative of Charles Sherlock, who was killed. It will be impossible, owing to the condition of the ruins, to give any accurate list of dead or injured for some time to come, as the digging will occupy many days.

A correspondent of the London Evening Standard cabled from Holland Bay, thirty miles from Kingston, as follows: "There were three shocks in succession within three minutes, their direction being from east to west. The first shock was the most severe, and did the greatest damage. The whole city seemed to shrivel up. Buildings crashed together and fell into a crushed mass, like egg shells. The business streets in the lower parts of the city were well filled at the time with tourists, who were shopping in the curio depots, in Harbor and King Streets, or preparing to start on excursions into the country.

"Many of these were caught by the falling brickwork and buried in the debris. Immediately after the crash, fires broke out in three separate spots where the wharves and warehouses were situated. The fire brigade station in Sutton Street had been wrecked and the fire apparatus destroyed. This made resistance to the fire impossible, and it continued unchecked until Tuesday morning. By that time the whole business quarter of the city had been wiped out of existence, an area of about one square mile, extending from the Parade and Harbor Street, and including King, Harbor, Tower, Orange and West Streets.

"Many of the big public buildings were wrecked, but the Treasury building in Harbor Street was intact. The post-office and court-house, which were combined in one large structure, and the Headquarters House, containing the government offices, the Colonial Bank and the Nova Scotia Bank, were all destroyed. Government House was badly destroyed. The churches disappeared, including the parish church, the Roman Catholic Cathedral (recently built), the Scotch Kirk, the Wesleyan and Baptist chapels, and the theatre.

"The ships in the harbor, including the Premier, Arno and Porkington, were transformed into hospitals. The deck of the Porkington resembled a shambles, and her cabins were full of dying and dead.

"One unofficial estimate places the loss at $25,000,000. A large number of fissures in the earth appeared. The rails of the electric tramway tracks are twisted, and the water pipes damaged, and there are no lights at night time, owing to the damage to the electric and gas plants.

"One of the strangest freaks of the earthquake was played with the statue of Queen Victoria, in the centre of the town. The shock turned the statue completely around, but otherwise it is intact."

Shortly before the earthquake, a great windstorm swept the city, and darkness fell suddenly, alarming the native population. These preliminary warnings created a feeling of impending disaster, and put everyone on the alert, which was fortunate, as it undoubtedly was the means of saving many lives. All were ready to rush to refuge at the first tremor.

There were many remarkable escapes. Sir Alfred Jones, Chairman of the Chamber of Commerce had come with a party of British business men to attend a conference of cotton spinners and planters, had a startling experience. With a group of the English visitors, he was standing on the hotel pier tossing pennies into the water for negro divers to recover, and he was about to return to the hotel when the tremor occurred. So violent was the oscillation that the party with difficulty kept their feet. As they were escaping from the pier, which was sinking, they beheld the hotel crumbling under the shock. After a scramble, they managed to reach a place of safety.

At the Constant Spring Hotel, five miles from Kingston, the guests were at dinner when the shock came. They felt the building swaying, but coolly kept their seats and continued their meal. When informed that the structure had been seriously damaged and the

Classes in the Church

ONE of the most significant illustrations of the vagaries of church life, in New York, has recently come to light. A pastor, who was moved to go outside his own congregation and work among the poor people of the neighborhood, succeeded in interesting a poor hard-working woman of perfectly clean life in the things of Christ. He urged her to attend his church, as she had never been in the habit of going to church on Sunday. Finally, as she gave evidence of conversion he proposed her name for membership. Some months passed, and as she did not appear at the Communion table the pastor asked his officers how it was. He was told that no card of membership had been sent to her. As a matter of fact, he went on to explain, that class of persons was not a desirable addition to the church. The present members belonged to the higher classes and did not wish to associate with the lower classes. "But this particular woman is a woman of good character," said the pastor. "Yes, but she works for a living, and so belongs to the lower class," said the officer.

This is not a new development in the church. James describes in his epistle a similar characteristic in his day (James 2: 1-4), and closes his account with the solemn warning: "If ye have respect to persons, ye commit sin." We can imagine how Jesus himself must regard such conduct. He worked for his living, and certainly did not belong to the upper classes. If any class is more entitled than another to claim brotherhood with him, it is the poor, for he had not where to lay his head. It was his glory that under his dispensation, "To the poor the Gospel is preached." Of what use is it to preach the Gospel to the poor, if, when they have accepted it, they are excluded from the society of people whom they are entitled to regard as their brethren in Christ? True, missions are provided for such people, but can we blame them if they shrink from bearing the stigma thus placed upon them? The people who thus exclude the poor from their society are false to the Gospel of Christ, and will surely incur his condemnation.

Perhaps this incident may give us a clue to the problem with which the churches are so much exercised, "Why do not men come to church?" If the churches themselves are reluctant to welcome the poor and wish to restrict their society to the well-to-do, they necessarily curtail their sources of supply. If a man must not only give evidence of conversion, but evidence of substantial wealth, before he is received, the sources for an increase of membership are greatly limited. For it is notorious that the wealthy are not usually inclined to religion. There are some brilliant and conspicuous exceptions, but as a class they are noted rather for pleasure than religion. Perhaps this may account, too, for the movement of the churches from poor neighborhoods, where they are badly needed, to the residential districts. There needs to be a revolution in this matter. There are no classes in Christ. He never asks how much a man has, but what is his spirit, and if he has Christ's spirit, whether he be rich or poor, he will prove his love for God by loving his brother also.

An American Kipling

PRESIDENT ROOSEVELT has come to the conclusion that the American Navy is able to furnish as good material to immortalize in a literary sense, as the Army of Great Britain has supplied to Rudyard Kipling. To this end, Mr. James B. Connolly, already well known through his sea tales, was persuaded to enlist as a yeoman, and was drafted for duty on board the battleship Alabama, which is now on a cruise to Guantanamo and the Caribbean Sea.

Mr. Connolly's mission will, of course, be known to the naval officers in general, and it is intended that, during his two years of service, he shall visit many parts of the globe, and be attached to various squadrons. Naturally, he will be given as much freedom as is compatible with the carrying out of his purpose—that of winning the confidence of the sailormen, among whom he expects to obtain the working material for his literary task.

There can be no question that the only method of getting at the heart of America's "bluejackets"—of thoroughly assimilating their point of view, their attitude toward the problems and pleasures, the hazards and contrasts which make up their lives—is to get next to them, and, in the spirit of true comradeship, to enjoy and endure with them. Bayard Taylor, one of the most prolific among American journalists and authors, recognized the advantage to be gained by intimate contact with the subjects of his pen, when he sought and obtaned permission to join the renowned Perry expedition to Japan, a half century ago. His Visit to Japan, which appeared soon after, was instinct with the spirit of a man who had lived what he wrote about, rather than figured in the character of an on-looker.

Mr. Connolly has for years been marked by an originality and vigor of style, and the work which he is contemplating, is well calculated to call forth all of his peculiarly forceful phraseology. The reading public will await with interest the result of the idea which President Roosevelt's desire has carried into effect, and Mr. Connolly's adventures during his career "upon the deep," will be followed by many who will doubtless profit by the recital.

The Father's Eye

IN certain portraits, some of us have seen an eye which, wherever you stand in the room, looks directly at you. It turns all ways, and seems to remind you that all your movements are within its immediate attention.

So all our actions in daily life are under the all-seeing eye of the eternal and almighty God. The fact that God does see us constantly, is often thought of as a warning or a threat; but it ought not to be interpreted solely on the adverse side. It is a Father's eye. We are told in the Book of Job: "His eye seeth every precious thing."

The despairing effort at goodness that the better nature sometimes makes, only to fall back defeated and overcome by the pressure of some weight or the power of some besetting sin; the wistful look towards active usefulness that comes from a crippled and broken life; the timid, unconfessed desire to know the Saviour and be at peace with God that fills some life, but which is held back by some blindness from open identification with the Kingdom of Christ; the groping steps of one who walks in the twilight, but is beginning to feel that life must have a deeper and holier meaning—all these things would not pass muster as Christian experience, as proof of conversion and regeneration; they might not be named before the church committee as grounds for admission to church membership, but to the eye of the Father they are "precious things."

The Kingston Calamity

THE history of the last twelve months has been marked by its record of widespread disaster by earthquakes and the conflagrations which were a natural consequence of the serious seismic disturbances. This unrest of the old earth's crust has exhibited itself through the preceding months by well-nigh completing the circle of the globe. From Japan to South America, from Vesuvius to San Francisco, the tide of human distress caused by terrestrial convulsion has risen high. Some well-defined upheavals which have occurred in the same period at the bottom of the sea, would have been attended by the most frightful consequences had they taken place upon dry land.

Scarcely have we recovered from the shock of the Pacific coast catastrophe, when we are again filled with dismay at the reports of the sweeping destruction which has overtaken the city of Kingston, Jamaica. That the extent of the devastation cannot be over-estimated is more definitely decided by each day's advices from the stricken city. With thousands of women and little children wandering homeless and hungry about the scene of the calamity, with the fabric of many years of toil and industry lying in ruins, it is a singular fact that comparatively few Europeans or Americans are among the victims.

More than a thousand human beings lie dead in the midst of the wreck of their own homes, the greater proportion being negroes. Yet "God hath made of one blood all the nations of the earth," and whatever of sorrow and sympathy we feel for the bereaved survivors, as well as for the thousands who are injured and suffering, is expressed in our prompt response to the call of humanity to succor the victims of this awful catastrophe. No less than 10,000 persons are homeless and destitute.

It is a significant fact that almost simultaneously with the Kingston tragedy, Austria, Switzerland, Hawaii, and the Philippines sustained slight shocks from earthquake. Where the next convulsion of the earth's surface may find its line of least resistance may well afford a theme for the scientists. Chinese Reforms QUAINT customs are observed in China on New Year, which begins there on January 25. The streets are crowded with hilarious people, like an Italian city in carnival time. Grotesque processions pass through the principal quarters, and a regular Fourth of July discharge of fireworks makes the ears of listeners tingle. A visitor in Canton, who has recently returned, reports that among other strange customs in connection with these processions was that of carrying long poles, on the summit of which were seated girls dressed in European dress, or in dresses like those put on the idols in the temples. No procession is complete without one of these girls, who sits quite at her ease ten feet above the heads of the people. The lower end of the pole rested, like the pole of a banner, in a socket on the back of a strong Chinaman, while another, the tallest available, holds up the pole and keeps it steady. Sometimes there are several of these poles in a procession. With them go men and women, some on horseback, and some on foot, clad in grotesque garments, and rendering the discordant music. Such customs seem as ridiculous to us as the antics of a crowd, blowing horns on the streets of New York on New Year's eve, seems to a Chinaman. There seems now a probability of this and similar Chinese customs being changed.

For more than a month past three commissions have been sitting with the purpose of modernizing China. Eventually it is intended to have a Chinese Parliament, and these commissions are to prepare the people for it. "Their being summoned," says Mr. Williams, of the Chinese legation, "constitutes one of the most important epochs in the history of China, and while the outcome will undoubtedly be disappointed in the results, there seems to be no reason to doubt that the desire of the throne, and of many patriotic officials for reform is most sincere, and that some measure of improvement will follow. We may hope at least that the changes now being inaugurated will prove to be but the beginning of a movement that will bring China into line with the most progressive nations of the world." The real hope of China, which would be of greater benefit to the country even than a constitution, would be the acceptance of the Gospel of Christ.

If the Son make you free, ye shall be free indeed (John 8:36)

Golden Streets

A recent report in a Western mining review says that there is a city in Mexico the streets of which are almost paved with gold. "Gold and silver to the value of six thousand dollars have already been discovered in the asphalt pavements laid there in the last two years by the Mexican Asphalt Paving Company. In the preparation of the asphalt mixture the company used tailings from old Spanish and Mexican reduction works in the Etzatian district. A few days ago a big shipment of tailings was received for additional work, and wholly through curiosity the company's local manager had a number of assays made. These revealed that the tailings average fifteen dollars a ton in gold and silver. Already about four hundred tons of tailings have been used in pavement construction." We do not know what kind of pavement the precious metals make, but probably the people who use it are no happier on account of its value. It is not with that city as with the heavenly Jerusalem, a mere adjunct to the glory and beauty of a beatified condition.

The street of the city was pure gold, as it were transparent glass; and the nations of the saved shall walk in the light of it (Rev. 21:21-24)

Obstinate Lepers

The sudden increase in sufferers from leprosy in the Russian province of Esthenia has caused general alarm. In that province alone there are now over five thousand registered cases, while in the Baltic provinces there are an enormous number. A society for the cure of leprosy has recently been formed at Dorpat, Livonia, a university city, and sanitaria have been built. Doctors have been sent out to travel through the country to search out persons suffering from the disease, but they report that they have met with great difficulties, as the people refuse to submit to examination or to avail themselves of the facilities offered for treatment. The sufferers perhaps do not believe that cure is possible, and are reluctant to leave their friends to undergo treatment. The proposal made to them is necessarily experimental, as no certain means of cure has as yet been discovered, though many that have seemed promising have been reported. There is not, however, that excuse for those who are suffering from the malady of sin, which is as deadly to the soul as leprosy is to the body. None of those sufferers who have gone humbly and contritely and with faith to Jesus for relief have ever failed of cure.

Wherefore he is able also to save them to the uttermost that come unto God by him (Heb. 7 : 25).

A $200,000,000 Estimate

Persons who have a fair prospect of living ten years longer, will be astonished to hear that the famous millionaire philanthropist, Andrew Carnegie, places the value of ten years of life at two hundred million dollars. His friend, Colonel A. K. McClure gives this report of a conversation with Mr. Carnegie: "'Two hundred millions, Alec,' he said to me, 'that's what I'd give for a lease on this life. I'm not hoggish, either, I'd give it for ten years only.' I said: 'Andy, you would be buncoed at that price.'" Probably, from a money point of view, ten years would not be worth such a sum even to Mr. Carnegie, but it might be all too short to do what he wants to do. Yet how many there are who will squander in idle pleasure the period that is estimated at so high a price!

So teach us to number our days, that we may apply our hearts unto wisdom (Psalm 90 : 12).

Electrical Music

An audience of musicians and scientists assembled recently in a hall in New York to listen to a new kind of music. It seemed like a magical exhibition. From a chandelier came the notes of a French horn, rendering Chopin's Second Nocturne; and then from a hanging basket of ferns a clarionet in Mendelssohn's Spring Song. The principle was shown by a row of lights, which responded to the music. When the high notes of a song were sounded, the lights faded and almost disappeared, but they glowed and illumined the big room when the theme ran into the lower register. That the music seemed to come from the chandelier and other parts of the room, was explained by the fact that there was concealed in each of those articles a diaphragm similar to that of the telephone, and the operator in the basement could shift the connection from one article to another as easily as a telephone operator moves its switches. The whole was controlled and directed from the telharmonium, a machine resembling a combination of the switchboard and the keyboard of a pipe organ with a double bank of keys. There seems to be no end to the services electricity can render us. It carries our messages, gives us light, draws our cars, runs our machines, and now, it appears, can give us music surpassing that of the most delicate instruments. The world has been stumbling along all these centuries, searching for power, while this agency was all the time close at hand. This is becoming a new world through human discoveries. If its spiritual progress kept pace with its material progress, it would be a far better world. But men have not been so successful in becoming like God in character, as they have been in gaining the power that was formerly supposed to belong to him alone.

Canst thou send forth lightnings, that they may go, and say unto thee, Here we are? (Job 38 : 35).

A Night on the Mountains

The inmates of a farmhouse, near Paterson, N. J., were aroused at daybreak one morning last week by a knocking at their door. The wife of the farmer, on opening it, found a lady in doleful plight. She seemed to be utterly exhausted, her clothing was torn and her shoes worn down. She said she had been all night on the Preakness Mountains. She was taken in and fed, and put in a comfortable bed. She was so weak that, later in the day, a physician was summoned, and a telegram was sent to her family in New York. It appears she had gone to Paterson to visit some friends, but found they had removed to Midland Park. She went there, but was unable to locate them. It is supposed that she missed her way, and in trying to get back to Paterson she wandered on to the mountain side. She continued to walk all night, afraid to sit down to rest, and yet almost overcome with weariness. She had fallen over bowlders, struggled through heavy brush, and plodded through ravines. She looked in vain for the friendly light of a farmhouse, and not until the gray light of morning did she see the shelter where she was received. It is thought that she must have tramped fifteen miles. It was a distressing experience, but one is glad to think she found a friendly shelter at last. How many there are who pass through a spiritual experience akin to this, who do not end so happily. The mountains of sin and unbelief are full of danger to those who wander on them in the dark. Happy are they whose faith keeps them from such a way.

Before your feet stumble on the dark mountains, and while ye look for light, he turn it into the shadow of death, and make it gross darkness (Jer. 13: 16).

OUR HISTORICAL EXPOSITION

The Jamestown Tercentennial to be Thrown Open to the Public on April 26, 1907

Mines and Metallurgy Building

Machinery and Transportation Palace

THE prime object of the Jamestown Exposition is to celebrate the three hundredth anniversary of the first English settlement in America, which, as history records, occurred on the 13th day of May, 1607, on a peninsula jutting out into the James River, about forty miles from its mouth. This colony, after many privations, succeeded in establishing a permanent settlement, and this in turn grew till the seeds sown there developed into the original thirteen States, and they in turn eventually became the United States of America.

But the waters of the James River have long since transformed the peninsula into an island, and the island has almost been carried down into Hampton Roads into which the river empties.

There is now little left of the original Jamestown but an island marsh, and the old church tower fast falling to decay. The few hardy Englishmen who came over in the Godspeed, the Susan Constant and the Discoverer, first landed at what is now Old Point Comfort, to rest and recuperate, having been driven off Cape Henry by hostile savages. It was decided that this point, or some point near it, should be chosen for the Jamestown Exposition. Sewell's Point, directly opposite Old Point Comfort, with the broad and deep waters of Hampton Roads lying between them, was considered the most available and was happily chosen. Jamestown, where Liberty was virtually born, and Yorktown, where it virtually reached its majority, are close together; Washington at the head of tidewater on the Potomac, and Richmond at the head of tidewater on the James, are not far from here, and not far from here or from either of them, is Appomattox, where the strife that centered in these two capitals, reached its climax and its close. Out of all this conflict and chaos has come one of the most prosperous nations on earth, and it is to commemorate its history and its growth and material prosperity, that the Jamestown Exposition will be held on Hampton Roads, near Norfolk, this year, commencing at noon on the 26th day of April, and closing at midnight of the 30th day of November.

The fact that the government has appropriated over a million and a half dollars for the various government buildings, naval and military manœuvres and drills, for the entertainment of foreign nations who will participate, and most of them have accepted the invitation of the President of the United States to do so, is a guarantee that th ture alone will attract world-wide attention. A duction of the famous battle between the Monito Merrimac, as it was fought in Hampton Roads in directly in front of what is now the Exposition gr will be one of the leading fea The government has approp $10,000 for this purpose alone.

The historic interest that att to the site of the Jamestown E tion, and to the immediately surr ing country, covering a period of hundred years from the landing first English settlers to the p time, is well known. The State Buildings will be an interesting feature.
The prevailing style of architecture is Colonial, but some of the States will reproduce famous buildings of different types—homes and halls, where great personages dwelt, or where great events occurred.
These buildings will be of a permanent character, and after the Exposition will be converted into homes, club houses, hotels, and the like. Most of the States' Buildings are located along Willoughby Boulevard, facing Hampton Roads, and from them visitors will be able to see naval and other vessels entering and leaving the harbor, and also see the great naval manœuvres and the great battle between the Monitor and Merrimac.

Georgia will have as its building a replica of Bulloch Hall, the birthplace and home of President Roose-

Pennsylvania will reproduce old Independence Hall. It is also hoped to have the old Liberty Bell at the Exposition. Maryland will have as her building a replica of the historic home of Charles Carroll of Carrollton, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. One of the rooms will be fashioned after the chamber in the old State House in Annapolis, where Washington resigned his commission as Commander-in-Chief of the Continental Army.

Connecticut will have a rethe first colonial mansion erected in that State. Colonel Benjamin Talmadge, who erected the mansion, was a staunch patriot, and one of the most valued members of Washington's staff. "Adena," the first stone house

WAR ON The Wedding Ring

BY MARGARET E. SANGSTER

FROM the earliest ages the symbol of a circle—a thing without visible beginningor end—has been significant of eternity. Marriage, the most intimate and sacred of human relations, has been, through centuries, completed in its ceremonial by the placing a ring on the finger of the bride. The wedding ring is a band of pure gold, and thousands of women never take it off during their entire lives. To those who have the right feeling about marriage, the wedding ring is the seal of a solemn covenant. Whatever may follow the union of two hearts, whether the road traveled by the partners in marriage be rough or smooth, it is in the very essence and spirit of the bond that they remain together.

In a recently published book, Dolores Bacon flings a wanton and undeserved slur at the Puritans, by the statement that they regarded marriage less as a religious rite than as a civil contract, and adds the gratuitous remark, "as we do now." It will be a bad day for America when marriage generally comes to be regarded merely in the light of a civil contract—a sort of limited partnership, that may be dissolved at discretion when the parties to it grow dissatisfied with one another, or with their conditions. The family is the oldest institution on earth, antedating the tribe, the clan and the community, and whenever a blow is struck at the permanence of family life and the integrity of the home, the stab goes deep into the State itself.

Recently, we have been told that there is among fashionable women in some of our larger cities, a fad that decrees against wearing a wedding ring. The married woman in the sets referred to, takes her wedding ring off and puts it on at her pleasure, as if it were only a bit of tinsel, or a piece of decorative ornament. She does not wish to wear a badge of slavery, and she shows her independence by throwing aside as useless rubbish, the thing that her mother and grandmother, and the women of her race for ages, regarded as their highest honor. Let us hope that the slighting a symbol that should be held in reverence is confined to a very few.

The vast majority of women must continue to wear the wedding ring at its full value. Notwithstanding the increasing frequency of divorce, and the ease with which new marriages are made, the immense majority of our people manage to live fealty from the beginning to the end of their blended lives.

One lovely feature of the wedding ring is that it belongs alike on the finger of the queen, and on that of the poorest peasant. The lofty and the lowly, the rich and the humble, the rich and the poor, are equally entitled to this distinction of pure womanhood and wifehood, the wedding ring. The slender threat of gold is as much at home on the callous and worn finger of the drudge who has scrubbed floors to earn a livelihood for her fatherless children, as on the soft white hand of the woman who has been clothed in purple and fine linen, and whose diamonds and pearls are valued at the cost of many a fortune.

When the ring ceremony is followed precisely, the best man gives the ring to the bridegroom, who passes it to the bride, and she hands it to the clergyman who gives it to the bridegroom who then places it on the third finger of the bride's left hand.

A MIDWINTER FLOWER FESTIVAL

In Pasadena, Calif., the annual floral festival was most enjoyable this year. Although the season was midwinter, the display was as varied and luxuriant as if it had been June instead of January. Our photograph shows one of the prettiest cars in the "Tournament of Roses."

central tower cracked from top to bottom, they decided to wait no longer, but left the hotel with all their baggage, and took refuge on one of the vessels in the harbor. Equally fortunate were a party of business men in Collegiate Hall. They were startled by the first rumblings of the quake, and a moment later, when the building began to rock perceptibly, they decided to leave. Eye-witnesses describe the scenes of Monday in the streets of Kingston as painful in the extreme. The first great shock, which lasted about thirty seconds, was followed at short intervals by two slighter shocks, which completed the work of destruction. These shocks made themselves felt within a radius of fifty miles. When the fires broke out and began to spread in various directions, the negro population became greatly excited. They gathered in groups, shouting and screaming, and praying to heaven for mercy. They told each other that "the end of the world had come." Negro exhorters addressed them in fervid language, increasing the excitement, and calling upon the people to repent. These scenes were continued long into the night.

Notwithstanding all the excitement, however, there was little difficulty in preserving order. Two Zouave regiments of native troops, with white officers, rendered efficient service, checking every attempt at disturbance. There was some petty thieving, but no looting, except in the case of a few rum shops, which negroes invaded. One of the saddest features of the calamity, is the uncertainty regarding the fate of a number of the tourists who were in Kingston and vicinity at the time. Unquestionably, when all the debris is removed, it will be found that more white men have perished than was supposed, not only tourists, but business men, many of whom met death in their offices and warehouses, being overwhelmed before they had an opportunity to escape. In one tourist bureau, it is reported thirty-five out of fifty-five employes perished. In the collapse of the Myrtle Bank Hotel, from thirty to forty lives were lost.

As is usually the case in time of disasters, there were many sensational and exaggerated reports. One rumor was that a great tidal wave had swept Annetta Bay, on the northern coast of Jamaica, two days after the Kingston earthquake, and that long stretches of the coast had sunk into the sea. Still another story was that the lower part of Kingston itself was sinking, and the city might at any moment share the fate of Port Royal, part of which was submerged in 1692. Port Royal is now reported as sinking for the second time. Sir Alexander Swettenham, Governor of Jamaica, in a report to the British Government, states the situation conservatively. He says that up to Thursday, January 17th, there had been 343 burials of earthquake victims; that many more bodies were still under the wreck and that 440 were in the town hospitals, in addition those treated on steamships or on the improvised hospitals on the docks. He adds that 10,000 are homeless. One-thirtieth of the city was burned. The property loss he places at $25,000,000. Port Antonio practically unharmed, with the exception of the Tom Hall, which was destroyed. On the other hand, he says "hardly a building is left standing in the entire city of Kingston, and every one not demolished is unsafe and uninhabited." So far as known, no Americans have been killed or injured, although one report places eight American tourists among the missing.

The population generally, the Governor adds, is encamped on the parade grounds, the race-course and other open spaces. He is arranging for the supplying of food temporarily, and for the transfer of the homeless and destitute to other parishes. All relief measures are being carried out under the authority and direction of Governor Swettenham, who is thoroughly familiar with the needs of the sufferers and of the character and extent of the relief necessary. Lady Swettenham is aiding him nobly. Several United States warships have already reached the scene, and are affording every aid in their power to the authorities, and the American Red Cross is also forwarding food and medical supplies.

Charles Balevre, the organist of the n, was introduced as the successor late Victor Benke, the "Volunteer ist." Mr. Balevre's testimony provrofoundly interesting one. Again the story of a respectable, well- ed man ruined by drink, and sink- wn into the depths of a hopeless, led life. He left his wife and three en, the youngest only a babe of six s, and for fifteen years never looked their faces again. The settlement tain property matters necessitated esence, and he was advertised for in ily newspapers, but no trace of him be found. Then his wife was obligsecure a divorce, and the courts of Jersey declared him to be dead in es of the law. So, for many years, ed the most hopeless and miserable of life in the Bowery, until, finally, reat Shepherd found the wandering . He gave himself up unreservedly e hands of God. He sought "first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness," and "all things" had been "added." Following the great spiritual change, there came in time reconciliation with his friends, remarriage with his wife; the rebuilding of his home; and, touching indeed, was the picture he sketched of his surroundings at the recent Christmas season.

John J. Leary was introduced as a representative of the younger converts. He told how, fifteen months ago, he was led to the Bowery Mission and there savingly converted to God. He declared himself to be a stenographer, having to work hard for his living, but that he had been in New York City long enough to acquire the habits of a gambler. He was fast making a shipwreck of his life when he came in contact with the real Christ through the instrumentality of "Mother" Bird. His one great overpowering ambition in life now was to be a soul-winner.

William P. Tobin said he had spent most of his life on the dramatic stage. Recently he came to New York, after fulfilling an engagement in Pennsylvania. Finding himself without money, he was wandering disconsolately through the streets, when he came in contact with a young man who directed him to the Bowery Mission. There he surrendered himself to Christ, and he could not find words to express the overwhelming joy that he felt at the change that had come over his life. He had now obtained a position in one of the great city factories, and spends all his leisure time in the Bowery Mission, bringing sinners to the Christ that had saved him. He had been brought up a Roman Catholic, but for many years had never entered a church.

Mr. Grant Hopkins was an ex-soldier in the U. S. Army, and had served an honorable term in the Philippines. He told of the utter degradation in which he had fallen when he came into the Bowery Mission, seven years ago. An outcast in his native town, having driven an old father into the streets, a scornful and blasphemous railer against religion, he had ultimately come to be a hopeless tramp, and when he entered the Bowery Mission, seven years ago, he decided to give himself up to God, and God saved him, and from that time to this he has kept the promise he made when he cried to God for mercy on the night of his first visit to the Mission—that he would on every possible occasion be glad to tell of the Saviour who had saved him from his sins.

Mr. Edward Chambers (whose story has already been told in the columns of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD), spoke of his salvation as being the result of his mother's prayers. For some years he lived the life of a homeless tramp. Seven years ago, he surrendered himself to God in the Bowery Mission. He is now a foreman in a city factory. He believed his employer was present at that service listening to his testimony. The whole service was of a most impressive character, and will long be remembered by those who were present.

Blessedness Through Faithfulness

International Sunday School Lesson for February 10,

*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

WHEN Abram was a dweller in Ur of the Chaldees, he must have been a different man from those about him, or the Lord would not have said to him: "Get thee out of thy country . . . I will make of thee a great nation." Ur was a city of great wealth and grandeur, but there was no hesitation on Abram's part to quit it for a land of uncultivated plains when the summons to do so came from God.

Abram went 600 miles on his journey, toward the north, to Haran, and there halted for five years. Probably because his father, Terah, who was a hundred years old, was either not inclined, or too feeble to go to Canaan. Terah died in Haran. Then the word of the Lord came to Abram a second time to enter the land of Canaan, and God's promise was again repeated to him: "I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt be a blessing." We do not think that God made any promise of blessing to Lot. Abram had no immediate family, save Sarai, his wife. She had a direct promise of blessing from God, who had promised that she would be "a mother of nations" (Gen. 17:16), as Abram was to be a father of nations. Abram's name itself, meaning "exalted father," showed that he was a great and wise master over a multitude.

Abram took Sarai and Lot, and all their Substance, to go to Canaan

Welcome to Canaan

They journeyed many days, and when at last they reached the Promised Land, the Lord himself met them to give them welcome, saying: "Unto thy seed will I give this land." And Abram showed his loyalty to God by erecting there an altar unto the Lord. His first act in the new home was to establish family worship, while as yet he had no dwelling-place but a tent. It was not long after this God changed his name to "Abraham," meaning the father of the faithful. A venerable oak tree, say the credulous people, marks the spot of his early home. Its trunk measures 32 feet around, and its branches shade a circle of more than 275 feet in circumference.

Illustration and Application

God's Call: God called Abram to be a good emigrant; to get out of his own country: to be a "pilgrim father," seeking a land where purer worship could be established; in other words, to get out of the "evil communications" that "corrupt good manners." It was Greatheart called to leave the "City of Destruction." What is God's call to you? He calls everybody, but not all to the same thing. Perhaps he calls you to stay right where you are, and be one of ten to save Sodom. You may be somewhat uncertain what God wants you to do for life, but you know what he wants you to do to-day, and if you do your appointed work each day, you will at last have done your life work.

God's Calls

How varied are God's ways of calling us? Sometimes he speaks through the open door of Opportunity. If you hesitate, it may close in a moment—forever. Sometimes he whispers in conscience. Sometimes he thunders in judgment. By a friend's death, perhaps, "the Master is come and calleth for thee." What a difference it would have made to the world if Noah, Abraham, Moses, Paul or Luther had been "disobedient to the heavenly vision!" What a difference, also, if the "Pilgrim fathers" had not obeyed God's call to America!

What sought they thus afar?
Bright jewels of the mine,
The wealth of seas, the spoils of war?
They sought a faith's pure shrine.

"Freedom to worship God" was also the prompting of Abram's migration. His country was given to idolatry (Josh. 24:2; Gen. 31:19-20). If he could have purified his own country he might have been called to continue there his battle against false gods. He had already proved himself one of those great ones who rise above that devil's watchword, "My country right or wrong." He had dared to be better than his neighbors, which is one of the supreme tests of courage. But God saw that the most effective way to fight idolatry was for him to go to a new country and develop a new nation, separated from idols, and let that nation go forth into all the world to proclaim a pure faith. Only now and then is one thus called to be the founder and "Father of his country," but to all comes the call to separation from complicity with the wicked: "Come out from among them and be ye separate, and touch not the unclean thing, and I will receive you" (II. Cor. 6:17-18). And we are all called to fight idolatry in some form and in some way.

Germany's Idol Tree

More than 1,100 years ago, when Germany was peopled with wild, fierce tribes, there grew in one part of the country a gigantic oak, which was dedicated to Thor, the god of thunder. The pagans worshiped this tree, and at certain seasons held feasts beneath its branches in honor of the god. Boniface, a brave and zealous missionary, who had long been trying to turn the people to the true God, determined to destroy the tree. His intention becoming known, an angry multitude rushed to defend it, and Boniface found himself confronted by hundreds of fierce men and women, brandishing their weapons, and threatening him with a terrible death, if he persisted in his purpose to destroy their sacred tree. Alone and fearless, trusting in his God, the missionary walked into their midst, and, axe in hand, leveled the first blow at the mighty trunk. The heathen, struck with amazement at his courage, looked on in silence. Tradition says that when the tree was partly severed, a mighty wind completed its fall, and the fall of the superstitious worship also. In that case Boniface had come from afar for the conversion of an idolatrous land, which, through his brave and persistent efforts, became a Christian land, whence other missionaries go forth to turn yet other lands from idols to the living, loving Christ of God.

Guthrie's Bells

The hardest test of faith is when God calls a man to stay in an unfavorable environment, and yet separate himself from all its sins, and bear witness by life and lips against them. A story from Scotland tells how one of the "heathen at home" was called of God. A Christian visitor in Edinburgh, seeing some of the tall tenement houses, felt moved to call on some of the people who were housed so high up, that she thought everybody else might have missed them. There was no elevator, and she slowly toiled up to the top story. With a prayer for guidance, she knocked. The door was opened just a very little by an old Seotchwoman. "What do you want?" "I want to see you," was the smiling response. "Nobody ever comes here, or wants me," said the old woman. "But that is just the reason why I came up all these stairs to see you," said her visitor. "Awell, ye can just come in!" After a few kindly words, Mrs. Lawson said: "I am not going to ask you, my friend, if you know the Lord, but can you tell me anything to show me that he knows you, and has found you out in your lonely little room?" A bright look passed over the old face at once as she said: "Oh, yes, that I can; I'll just tell you all about it. You see, if He had not sought me, I should never have known Him, for I lived just like a heathen here. I have had many troubles. I lost my all, and having no one to love me, and no friends, I shut myself up in this room, away even from my neighbors, week-days and Sundays, and never went anywhere! I just lived as if I had no soul." "But how did you get wakened out of this state?" "Well, it was just Dr. Guthrie's bells! Ye ken, that's Dr. Guthrie's old church over there, and when the bells rung o'Sabbath, didn't I wish they would leave off, they troubled me so. At last, one Sabbath, I couldn't bear it any longer, they seemed to call me; so I put on my shawl and went to church, just to get away from the bells!" "And how did you like what you heard?" "Eh! Not at all. Wasn't I angry, just. Dr. Guthrie preached all about me, though there was a fine crowd there! I made up my mind I'd never go to hear him again. But when next Sabbath came—those bells! I was tormented more than ever, and I went again and again, and heard the guid man; his words told me of Jesus Christ and his precious blood, and now I know it has taken all my sins away."

Stages of Separation

Separation begun. Abram's first start was only half obedience, ending at Haran instead of Canaan. That's why he needed, as most beginners do, a "second blessing." Why he halted five years we do not know; but it is safe to assume that the why was an excuse, not a reason. He had encountered obstacles, but he should have remembered that "all God's biddings are enablings." The practical thing for us all to ask, is whether each of us has made progress in five years past, or have we too been halting. Has our separation from sin been only a half separation? Many times it is some little thing that interferes with our giving to God a faithful and efficient service.

Only a Grain of Sand

"I can't make out what is the matter with my watch!" said Willie Stevens in a vexed tone to his friend and schoolmate, as they walked home after lessons. "Well, see here is old Scratehley the watchmaker's; come in and let him overhaul it. He'll soon tell you what ails the watch."

Together the lads entered the shop, and handed in the watch to be examined by old Scratchley. Old he certainly was; wizened in face, and very white-haired. He had only one eye, too; the other being covered with a broad green patch. But as everyone said, "Old Scratchley saw more with his one eye than most people saw with two." Taking up a very powerful glass, he put it between that wonderful one eye and the works of the watch, and uttered an exclamation: "A grain of sand has got into one of these delicate bits of machinery, and is causing the watch to lose time continually." "Only that!" exclaimed Willie, "what a trifle to be sure." Old Scratchley looked at him. It was wonderful how far into, and through a person that eye could see, as well as what it could find out in a watch! Then the old man spoke slowly but emphatically: "Aye, Master Will, 'tis only that. You think because a grain of sand is a small thing, and takes up but little room, that it cannot injure the watch. But just because it is small, it does the greatest harm, for few would suspect it lay hidden there. So it is with most of us, young gentlemen. There's many a little grain of sin that sets the machinery of heart and life a-running wrong. Boys; you and me's got to look to the Lord to keep us running right, and never say 'only that!' to a sin, however small we may think it."

Separation completed. They went forth to go into the land of Canaan, and into the land of Canaan they came. Purpose this time was incarnated in complete fulfilment. No more halting, no more compromises — complete separation realized! Abram was at last out and out for God. "We can serve God without condemnation, only when we serve him without reservation."

A Message From Utah

Dear Dr. Klopsch: — It is with great pleasure that I acknowledge receipt of the Bible. It was for my boy, and I tell you he is more than pleased. Also thank you very much for the beautiful Calendar; it is such a lovely face in our home. Bear with me while I say a few words for my precious paper; it is the only means of grace and blessing to me in this dark spot; I pass it on to others when I have well read every word. E. GORE.

Dying of Hunger in China

LATE cablegrams from Shanghai indicate that the famine in the flooded districts along the Grand Canal is steadily increasing in severity. Viceroy Tuanfong estimates that over four million persons are destitute. Winter has fairly set in, and the misery that prevails in many localities (which sustained the double calamity of flood and crop failure) is appalling. There have been many deaths, and unless relief comes in a substantial form, and quickly, the next four months will be marked by a startling mortality.

Relief work under the Missionary Committee at Chinkiang and the official Committee at Shanghai is being pushed vigorously, but the funds at disposal for the aid of the suffering are quite inadequate, and the life-sustaining food is supplied in pitifully meagre quantities. Up to January 11 (according to a cablegram from United States Consul Rodger at Shanghai to the State Department at Washington) the Shanghai Relief Committee had received about $150,000 Mexican. The system adopted in distributing relief is excellent, but the work is making only a slight impression owing to the inability to supply more than a part of the afflicted territory.

Captain Kirton, who is acting as foreign relief commissioner in the famine camp at Tsing-Kiang-Fu, describes the refuge camps as consisting of matsheds arranged in rectangular groups in street formation, two miles long and a mile wide. In the other camps in the vicinity of Tsing-Kiang-Fu, of nearly half a million refugees, thirty per cent. show signs of distress, and among ten per cent. the suffering is acute. The roads are thronged with rice pedlers. Women tear up the roots of grass for food and are cooking leaves and twigs.

"The efforts of the officials," he adds, "are largely confined to attempts to persuade the people to return to their homes. Some of them comply, but more arrive than depart. One hundred thousand men are absolutely idle. Though it would not be difficult to organize relief works, none has yet been started. If the inaction continues there will be a gigantic problem to face. The end cannot be foreseen. The worst pinch has not yet been felt."

He estimates that 250,000 persons are doomed to starvation at Singkiang alone and 400,000 at Antung. Smallpox now adds to the general distress.

The American Red Cross, acting under the authority of the State Department, is arranging to send a food cargo to Shanghai for distribution in the suffering provinces. As the situation will continue to become more acute from now until May next, it is believed that a relief ship reaching the Chinese port some time next month, would be most gratefully welcomed.

Mr. Ellis, a correspondent of this journal, now traveling in China, has visited the famine districts, and sends this cablegram as the result of his personal observation and inquiries:

"SHANGHAI, Jan. 15.

"KLOPSCH, New York.

"Find famine worse than reported. Three million must be fed five months. $50,000 cabled now will prevent deaths for a month. CHRISTIAN HERALD is our main reliance. Send to Shanghai Committee, with which Missionary Committee is now merged. ELLIS."

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has already cabled through our State Department $5,000 for immediate relief work, and has also sent $1,000 direct to the Missionary Committee. Any contributions which our readers may desire to make in aid of the famine sufferers may be sent to this journal, which will acknowledge them, and forward the gifts through the State Department to the relief workers in the field.

LESSONS FROM NOAH'S LIFE*

AMONG the notable men of faith mentioned by the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, Noah rightly occupies a conspicuous place. His conduct, as described in Genesis, must have entailed upon him a great deal of ridicule and no little expense. Timber for the ark, we may suppose, was easily procurable, but men must have been required to cut and prepare it, and as they evidently were not believers, they would naturally demand compensation. But of such matters the Bible tells us nothing. We have, as usual in the Bible, the facts that concern us and the lessons we need to learn. They are the indignation of God over a world wholly corrupt; the fruitlessness of Noah's preaching; his obedience to a command which must have appeared to him unreasonable; his faith justified by the event of God's care of a righteous man among an unrighteous people.

The superiority of the Bible to other books was never more clearly proved than in this incident. The Accadian tablets, found a few years ago, and believed to have been written 3000 B. C., tell a similar story, but it is mixed with stories of gods and goddesses, which show it conclusively to be a myth. In that story, Ea, the god of wisdom, reveals to Sit-napisti the intention of Bel to bring a flood on the earth, and advises him to build a ship and save what he can of the precious things. It is built and covered with bitumen and filled with provisions and jewels and slaves and animals and birds. Then the door is shut and there is a wild storm continuing seven days, which makes even the gods afraid. When the storm abates, Sit-napisti sends forth a dove, which returns, and a raven, which does not return. Finally, the ship rests on a mountain peak and Sit-napisti comes forth and offers a sacrifice. The aroma rises and the gods, smelling the savor, rush down like flies. One of them makes a rainbow and afterwards they get into a wrangle over Ea having given away the secret to Sit-napisti. The story is like, yet in striking contrast to the simple, quaint story as we have it in Genesis.

The value of the Bible story to us has been realized by many a Christian living among wicked people, keeping himself from contamination, and trusting God to deliver him from the judgment, which, though long deferred, must inevitably overtake all who defy God and abandon themselves to their own evil propensities.

Persecuted for Christs' Sake

EX-RABBI LEOPOLD COHN'S mission among the 200,000 Jews of Brooklyn, N. Y., is making substantial progress. Jews, drawn by the story of the Messiah, flock to the unattractive and poorly ventilated store where the meetings are held. One Jew used to come to the Wednesday evening "Question Meeting" in order to show his learning and his wisdom by putting forth strong arguments against Christianity. He did so for a long time in such a way that it required a great deal of patience on the part of the conductors. But the truth took root, and now that young man is preaching the Gospel to other Jews. Wherever he meets them, he tells them that Jesus of Nazareth is their true Messiah, and that the Jews can never prosper until they accept him as their Saviour. He has already begun to triffle persecution and personal violence.

A young Jew, lately married, came to the meetings and after a time of careful and earnest study, he publicly confessed Christ as his Saviour. Persecution began from prominent relatives, and even his wife left him, but he continues to preach Christ. He secured a permit to preach on the streets where he spoke to audiences of from four and five hundred Jews. Influential Hebrews protested and persecuted the officials to revoke his permit.

Ex-Rabbi Cohn publishes monthly a record of his Mission work which will be sent free to any interested person who may address him at 620a Quincy Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

There all the naval manœuvres will take place, and that can easily be seen from the various State buildings, and from almost every point along the two-and-a-half miles of water front. This magnificent water area is conservatively estimated at 25,000 acres, and, with 500 acres of land, make an area of 30,000 acres that can justly be claimed as the Exposition area. Hampton Roads is broad and deep enough to safely harbor all the naval fleets in the world, and still have plenty of room for the merchantmen of every nation, while the grounds, under the skilful hand of landscape gardeners, have been transformed into a scene of beauty that must be visited to be appreciated. Here stands a magic city of rare splendor and beauty, with magnificent palaces and cozy cottages, its broad avenues flanked on either side by stately trees, shrubs and flowers, the whole re splendent at night with millions of incandescent and arc lights. The thirty-acre military parade ground, level as a floor, is surrounded by a row of full-grown apple trees that will scatter their blossoms like a benediction over the scene, and drop their ripened fruit at the feet of the visiting throngs. If the visitor tires of the blare of bands and the glare of the sun on the dazzling structures, he may turn his back upon the gorgeous array of man's handiwork, and, within the grounds, seek the solitude of the forest primeval along the picturesque "canoe trail," that winds its way for about two miles through the sylvan section of the Exposition grounds; or he may stroll along "Lovers' Lane," through sequestered nooks, over rustic bridges, where the sound of band and fife and drum will only reach him as a faint echo from some far enchanted land.

Such is an outline of the plan and scope of the Jamestown Exposition. History, education, art, science, manufacture and commerce will all be represented, illustrated and demonstrated in such a manner that the whole will constitute one great school in which the nations of the earth may learn a lasting and invaluable lesson. In the Arts and Crafts Village will be shown the manner of manufacture three hundred years ago, while in the great buildings close by will be practically demonstrated the modern methods of doing the same work. Certainly there never has been an Exposition where the beautiful, the useful and the good were shown more clearly and advantageously. Every American who can do so, owes it to himself, his country and his progeny, to visit the Jamestown Tercentennial Exposition, and, if possible, take with him his family to this labyrinth of twentieth century wonders. It is expected that millions of visitors from all parts of the Union will take advantage of this ideal outing, and will draw inspiration from the marvelous showing of patriotism and progress at the Jamestown Exposition.

Van Camp's

BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE

PORK AND BEANS

Every Bite Tastes of Quality

"Quality," says Hans, "is a fine word."

In Van Camp's, Quality means richness of flavor, purity of every ingredient and immaculate cleanliness in the preparation of a delicious food, designed not only to nourish but to please even the most discriminating palate.

Van Camp's corps of buyers are held most rigidly to "quality." The finest Michigan beans—the just ripe, luscious tomatoes—the sweetest young pork that the market affords are alone good enough for Van Camp's.

And our chef alone knows how to give the delicious Van Camp savor in blending the toothsome dish that you serve from every can. Our chef sees every baking of Van Camp's go into our special ovens and come out ready for your table. He takes pride in the Van Camp quality which makes every can a masterpiece of the cooking art. No housewife could possibly take more care, step by step to attain the degree of quality that it has been our steady aim for years to put into Van Camp's.

Van Camp's has been such a tremendous success because of a demand for highest quality in foods—because every bite of Van Camp's wherever taken evidences the richness, purity and careful preparation of the ingredients. You should always have a few cans in the house. It makes certain a nourishing, satisfying, savory meal—any time, day or night, in a few minutes.

Music Lessons Free

IN YOUR OWN HOME

A wonderful offer to every lover of music, whether a beginner or an advanced player.

Ninety-six lessons (or a less number if you desire) for either Piano, Organ, Violin, Guitar, Banjo, Cornet or Mandolin will be given free to make our home study courses for these instruments known in your locality. You will get one lesson weekly, and your only expense during the time you take the lessons will be the cost of postage and the music you use, which is small. Write at once. It will mean much to you to get our free booklet. It will place you under no obligation whatever to us if you never write again. You and your friends should know of this work. Hundreds of our pupils write: "Wish I had known of your school before." "Have learned more in one term in my home with your weekly lessons than in three terms with private teachers, and at a great deal less expense." "Everything is so thorough and complete." "The lessons are marvels of simplicity, and my 11-year-old boy has not had the least trouble to learn." One minister writes: "As each succeeding lesson comes I am more and more fully persuaded I made no mistake in becoming your pupil."

We have been established seven years—have hundreds of pupils from eight years of age to seventy. Don't say you cannot learn music till you send for our free booklet and tuition offer. It will be sent by return mail free. Address U. S. SCHOOL OF MUSIC, Box 7, 19 Union Square, New York City.

immediately dries, forming a tough, transparent, waterproof coating. "New-Skin" heals Cuts, Abrasions, Hang-Nails, Chapped and Split Lips or Fingers, Burns, Blisters, etc. Instantly relieves Chilblains, Frosted Ears, Stings of Insects, Chafed or Blistered Feet, Callous Spots, etc., etc.

A coating on the sensitive parts will protect the feet from being chafed or blistered by new or heavy shoes. MECHANICS, SPORTSMEN, BICYCLISTS, GOLFERS, in fact all of us, are liable to bruise, scratch or scrape our skin. "NEW-SKIN" will heal these injuries, will not wash off, and after it is applied the injury is forgotten, as "NEW-SKIN" makes a temporary new skin until the broken skin is healed under it. "Paint it with 'New-Skin' and forget it," is literally true.

CAUTION: WE GUARANTEE our claims for "NEW-SKIN." No one guarantees substitutes or imitations trading on our reputation, and the guarantee of an imitator would be worthless anyway.

Father of the Faithful

By Mrs. M. Baxter

WHATSOEVER God doeth it shall be forever (Eccles. 3:14), and in each generation he has found one man, or one little company of men, who could understand him, and enter into and carry out his purposes. In some way, not detailed in Scripture, God manifested himself to Abram. It may be that in Abram's heart had been awakened that intense hunger after God, that unsatisfied something which is impatient with all would-be religions, which must have the real thing; a craving which is God-begotten, a something which says: "God never called me into being that I might be only like the beasts which perish; if there is a God, where can I find him?" It may be that the cry of his heart moved upon by the Holy Spirit may have gone up to God, and that consciousness of God speaking for the first time, which some of us will never forget during eternity, may have become a fact to this once idolater.

What did God say? That which put to the utmost proof this awakened soul. "Get thee out of thy country, and from thy kindred, and from thy father's house, unto a land which I will show thee: and I will make thee a great nation, and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and be thou a blessing; and I will bless them that bless thee, and him that curseth thee will I curse; and in thee shall all the families of the earth be blessed" (Gen. 12:1-3, R.V.) It was again a new beginning, but on another line. God would not now destroy all the population of the world, but he would make another, a nearer and a holier covenant with one family, taken out of the population of the world. But for this purpose he must find a man loyally willing to leave all for him—one who would choose God before all else, and continue faithful. Abram's call included the loss of all which could afford him personal satisfaction; it put him to the proof how far he valued his God. Like Noah, he must become a man separated from, and misunderstood by his generation, in his responding to this call of God.

We are not told that Abram even weighed the matter; God had spoken—this was enough for him. "Abram went as the Lord had spoken to him." Instant, unquestioning obedience, as soon as the will of God is known to them, characterises the true children of Abraham—the generation of the faithful, the true elect of God. God was about to call out one family from among men which should never, in any age, lose its character, its name, its individuality; and the real, as well as typical head of the family must be a man apart from other men. Nearly four thousand years have elapsed; nations have arisen and fallen, races of men have arisen and perished, or been absorbed; but Abram's seed remains the same. In America, Englishmen, Germans, Frenchmen, Swedes, Russians, after one or two generations, become Americans; but the Israelite in America is still a Jew. The nations of Europe absorb those of other lands who settle amongst them. You do not hear of a German Englishman, but a German Jew, a Polish Jew, a Russian Jew, an Austrian Jew, a Spanish Jew; such are household words. From this point in the sacred history, the whole book treats of the family of Abraham. The other four books of Moses tell exclusively their history, with God's marvelous interventions, and the laws given to this one chosen race of men.

Elevating the Negro*

VERY clear is the negro's claim on the help of the white man. We are well aware of the prejudice against him. Again and again have we heard the full list of his faults, his propensities and his crimes. Nothing remains to be said to his disparagement. Eloquent speakers have declared that he is brutal, coarse, vicious, dishonest, lazy and corrupt. Even if we were to admit all this, the problem would still exist, crying for solution. He is here, and there are nearly nine millions of him, and the number increasing more rapidly than are the whites. What shall be done? What does Christianity require us to do?

For our own sakes, for the benefit of the white race, almost as much as for his own, he ought to be helped to better conditions. We are not altogether free from responsibility for his state. He comes of many generations of slaves. Whatever doubt we may have of the influence of heredity, there can be no doubt that a man whose ancestors were slaves, will have the characteristics of a slave. Even though born in freedom, he is made everywhere to feel his inferiority, and is snubbed and despised. What wonder, then, if he is the being his enemies claim. We have helped to degrade him, have encouraged him to live like an animal; should we then complain if, when he is emancipated, he acts as an animal and sets no restraint on his propensities?

But things are not so bad as they are made to appear. The negro presents good material for development. He is grandly faithful to his friends, he is grateful for help, is ambitious, and, so far as he understands religion, is religious. There are noble specimens of his race which prove that he does pay for culture. He responds to Christian influence, and has proved that he is capable of thinking and working intelligently. Singularly, too, he helps himself. Such colleges as Tuskegee and the little Institute at Mayesville, S. C., where the teachers are themselves colored, have done an extraordinary work. Boys and girls go there eager to be taught, and when they leave, show by their conduct how honest and skilful and good the negro can become. The results at Maysville have astonished all who have watched them, and they would have been greater yet if larger funds had been available. It is by supplying those funds and helping the negro to solve his own problem that we can best aid in that tremendous task.

If You Please –
Don't Merely ask for Flour

Any ordinary mill can make ordinary flour, but ordinary flour is not good enough for you -- or for me, when better can be had for the asking. You want nice, light, creamy bread and biscuits; and rolls and pie crust that are deliciously wholesome. Then ask for GOLD MEDAL FLOUR instead of merely ordering "a sack of flour." The good bread, good biscuits and good pies will come easy enough with GOLD MEDAL FLOUR in the house. Made by special process in the greatest milling plant in the world.

Many Send Help to Suffering China

Kind Deeds the Most Effective Preaching

I feel so sorry that there is so much suffering in this beautiful world, and that another famine, with all its attendant horrors, is raging. But perhaps our Heavenly Father wants to test our love for him by our deeds rather than our words. But it seems to me, the most effective preaching to win souls for Christ is to minister to their souls and ease their suffering, so I send them $10.00. God bless you for your prompt work, and may they receive help from every side. God save us all from a fate like this. Yours in Christian faith, Mrs. F. B.

Blue Hill, Kansas.

"Urgent Business for the Lord"

I enclose $5.00 to help the famine sufferers in China. This is very urgent business for the Lord. E. A. F.

AMID THE RUINS OF KINGSTON

SLOWLY and grudgingly the Island of Jamaica has given up the attempt to make down its towns and cities, and return to the state of nature in which the iscoverers found it three centuries or more ago. For a number of days fter the first great tremor, the ground at intervals would slide and tremble, to the ground many buildings that had been serously damaged, and had enace to the passer-by. A number of rescuing parties were buried in fall- ish while trying to help the injured caught beneath fallen timbers and piles The people, especially the natives, became imbued with the idea that, as f the repeated shocks, the island itself would disappear. One report, that ke wildfire, was to the effect that the island was turning into mud, and e washed t by bit, ry incom- l

Fortunately, the famine that threatened the city for the first few days, was averted by the food supplies brought in on relief ships, and sent in from the surrounding country. Little damage, contrary to the first wild rumors, was done in the interior of the island, and the people of the country districts have been forwarding supplies daily. Supply stations, on the same pattern as those at San Francisco, were opened throughout Kingston by the Saturday following the disaster, and rations distributed to the destitute. These numbered several thousand. Standing in line could be seen people who, one short week before, had held prominent places in the commercial and social life of the island, and who had never been about the streets except in carriages. Many of these were wounded; they were emaciated with hunger, and their faces wore a look of dull despair. Most of the people are now living in outhouses, or camping in the open country beyond the Kingston suburbs. Some who are fortunate enough to have an undamaged room in their ruined houses, sleep there. This, however, involves danger, as a violent tremor might come at any moment and send the rafters about their ears.

Over three thousand people are absolutely homeless,

False Pilot

TEXT:—JOSHUA 24: 15

"Choose you this day whom will serve"

THE higher life depends upon the possession of an aspiration, and the achievement of success therein upon the development of an ambition in accordance with that aspiration. Aspiration is the noble thing we look for; ambition, the zeal with which we strive for it. Aspiration and ambition, coupled with ability and opportunity, form an irresistible combination. Disassociated from aspiration, ambition becomes the meanest of passions, a selfishness which encourages the development of all that is ignoble or base, if so be the end may be gained.

Men are frequently ambitious of power, wealth, fame, position, without an aspiration for anything higher or nobler. The Christian subjects of the Cæsars aspired to a higher life, and were ambitious that all the world should share their aspirations, and they, too, were slain. Ambition and aspiration are not always immediately successful from a worldly point of view, but the dreamed-of empire of the one is forgotten, while the aspiration of the other for a higher life has become interwoven into the very fibres of our existence. The difference between aspiration and ambition is therefore moral. Aspiration is the balance-wheel or governor of ambition; and ambition is, or should be, the subject of aspiration.

Now, men are happily so constituted that their aspirations, to be of value, must be to the real; we must aspire to the definite and concrete, rather than to the vague and abstract. But the source of an aspiration—its inspiration—lies in the possession of an ideal. Ideals, therefore, are rather objective than subjective; real, not imaginary. The mind has no inherent power to go beyond experience. No knowledge of the transcendental can come to us save through revelation. Therefore, the mental image we call our ideal is something we know.

Life a Matter of Choice

Life is a matter of choice; what you will be, depends upon what you are, not what you wish. The power of choice, even though a delegated power, expresses the sum of the magnitude and majesty of man. There has always been a keen appreciation of this fact in humanity, and the passing years have but deepened and intensified it, until no wise man thinks of drifting, or permitting his destiny to be the sport of chance. We eliminate the clogging word "fatality" from our twentieth century vocabulary.

The most unimaginative cherish ideals. The most abject possess ambitions. Even the basest and most ignoble may couple that ambition with an aspiration to something higher. Insensibly the word "excelsior" is written upon most hearts, and its content is back of most purposes. The whole race in the course of its agonizing evolution, nay, all of nature, is thereto committed. But as there are degrees in ambitions, so there are also in aspirations and ideals. The ambition of the Esquimaux, for instance, is for a land where the supply of seal blubber is inexhaustible; the prize-fighter longs for the indefinite possession of the champion's belt, with full liberty to talk about it; the Mohammedan dreams of a heaven abounding with beautiful women without souls; the politician works for a higher and more lucrative office, which he may hold in perpetuity; the poor strive to get rich, and the rich to get richer; while the Christian aspiration is for a nearer walk with God.

The Noblest Aspiration

All things save the Supreme are comparable and comparatively judged. The highest reach of ignorance may be beneath the lowest descent of culture. To aspire is noble, yet the true man must not be satisfied until his aspiration is not only noble, but the noblest; his ideal not only high, but the highest of which man is capable. In that individual choice we must each of us make, what shall be our ideal, our aspiration, our ambition? To-day the summons comes to all, as Joshua stated it in the past: "Choose you this day whom ye will serve; whether the gods which your forefathers served that were on the other side of the flood, or the gods of the Amorites in whose land ye dwell, but as for me and my house we will serve the Lord."

*Preached at Toledo, Ohio.

Two questions, then, may, indeed must, rise before the mind at the beginning, nay, at every moment of life, since each may be a new point of departure: "What shall my ideal be? How shall I serve it?" You must choose something, and that you choose you must serve in some way. What shall it be, that choice and service? One of the best similes likens life to the voyage of a ship. We have youth at the prow, pleasure at the helm, and a freightage of joy for a cargo. The anchor is a-weigh, many staunch vessels swing to the tide in the harbor; the channel to the sea is tortuous, dangerous; each signals for a pilot, who shall convey it to the open water and give it the course. Who and what shall these pilots be?

Vessels in the Harbor

Here is one great ship, powerful and strong, meant for mastery and manful work. She is bound for El Dorado. The young captain looks abroad in the world, and to his dazzled vision riches seem that world's desire, the greatest good. With money one may command ease, comfort, health, consideration, independence. It heightens virtues, and condones sins. Men are bought by it, and women fall through it. Having that, shall I lack anything else? Let us load the ship with qualities we may barter for this shining treasure. Let me have resolution, courage, unscrupulousness, cunning, and no drop of mercy nor love nor pity in the hold. Give me, ye gods, the Midas touch; let Plutus take the wheel, and under his unsparing pilotage we will away!

And lo! here a gallant bark is straining at her anchor, like a hound in the leash? What, ho, the shore! This ship voyages to the Elysian fields, Pleasure is the pilot. Come all ye who would be happy here and take passage with us. The perfume of roses floats over the deck. The lotus leaf of forgetfulness waves as an ensign. Soft strains of music woo the eager spectators, and bright eyes and ringing laughter and gay color repeat the invitation—a happy picture, she glides away. But what sinister ship is that slinking along, stealthily moving to the mouth of the harbor? Why, that is lust's vessel. The wine cask is broached upon the deck, and bold-eyed women and sensuous men look hardily upon the shore. "A short life and a merry one" is blazoned on her flag. The sounds of shameless, sensuous revel rise from hidden cabins, and the gloomy bark presents not even the semblance of a virtue in the bold and naked infamy of her evil purpose. There are no self-delusions aboard of her.

And here is a brilliant little craft, with but a single tenant, disdaining wealth, despising pleasure and abhorring lust. A dazzling figure points a golden trumpet over the waste of water, and says, "Lo! I am fame. Who follows me must come alone, with no thought except for me, and I will make of him one of those who are remembered."

The Mastery of the Sword

And there rise the tall sides of a mighty frigate, the clash of arms rings along its deck; the flash of steel and wave of plume proclaim the soldier. War is the trade. Money, pleasure, fame, all bow down before the sword, for that spells mastery. Come ye who love it. And the black sides of this grim ship shall be wet with the red blood of the slain. Who is for the life of the soldier, the free lance? Glory is our pilot; forward, the watchword; booty, the reward. And what dishevelled crew of fiery menads shrieks above the red decks of this swift corsair? The red flag flaunting aloft proclaims the apotheosis of selfishness, and says that anarchy is the pilot, and there sails the pirate of the seas.

Hither and thither among the fleet smaller boats are plying, in the confusion of departure attaching themselves to the larger vessels. These carry care and trouble and disappointment, but no one notices them in the grand rush to get out of the harbor. The tide begins to ebb. The time is at hand. The last parting is over. The batteries on shore roar out in salute. The departures are taken and the fleet is away; eagerly pressing to the wide sea that lies beyond, the open ocean where they are to try their fortune, while the crowds on the shore cry "Good voyage and farewell."

But what ship is that which goes last out of the harbor, a vessel no whit inferior to the bravest and squadron? It lingers, as if it would fain supervision over the ships ahead. The reflected from white sails, and falls upon a sp "Ho, Captain, whither bound?" "Through to the promised land!" "Thy cargo?" "Lo service?" "God's!" "Thy pilot?" "Chri purpose?" "The good of men!" Amid mocki she sails away, and men note that ever aft one of the little boats of trouble.

The End of the Voyage

And the first vessel that draws near is t ship of lust: the lustful have ever a quick the other side. The eyes of her crew are ha despair. The forms on her deck are loath abhorrent, swollen with disease. Their pilot a hideous thing. In their dull, besotted e and strange voice whispers, "Drive on!" There is a glare of lurid light upon the horiz boat is that? And why drives on that ship so fa out wind or motion?" She is afire! A little s group of tamed menads at the bow, under flaming flag, look in blasted terror towards t and, like a grim spectre, anarchy at the wheel through the flame and smoke, and laughs crazy bark lurches through the tumbling seas.

And here tosses pitifully a frail ship, with to keep her upon an even keel. An pleasure. 'Tis become a hateful thing. Se dead, and with it desire, and so is hope. cling to life; they know nothing else. They h and drunk, but they cannot die.

A Fleet of Despair

Ay, here's a gallant frigate still undaunted. traced its red autograph upon the decks wit fingers; the swords are dulled, the plumes sho crew is smaller now, and older, saddened, They look grimly upon the danger; they ha many and conquered, but here is one they can come. Great is the sword, all things may bow last it fails and the vessel, in obedience to a la "with what measure you mete, it shall be mea you again," follows the command, inexorable that says, "Forward, drive on!"

Despair is in that fleet. The cries of the pe above the noise of the storm. "I trusted to and I, to fame; and I, to glory; and I, to p and I, to love; and I, to self; and I, to polic gave all we had for these things—honor, and and youth, and manhood, and purity, and time;

...the close of the war of the Revolution, a ship, ...of marque, or small privateer, was returning ...successful cruise, loaded with a rich cargo of ...ns of war for the struggling American army. ...le ship was pursued by a large English frigate, ...gradually drew nearer until the capture was ...tly inevitable. On a sudden the captain of the ...an recalls a long, rocky sand-bank in the sea, ...erous a shoal as are the ill-famed Goodwin Sands, called "George's Shoal," and bearing south-southwest from Cape Cod light. It is high tide; there is a narrow winding passage, through which he may possibly be able to carry his own ship, if Providence be kind, but through which it will be impossible for the great, pursuing frigate to follow him.

Our captain's face grew dark and stern,
Deadly white his closed lips were.
The men looked in each other's eyes
Not a look that spoke of fear.
"Hard up!"

Hard up the helm was rammed
The wary steersman spake no word.
In the roar of the breakers on either side
Murmurs of wonder died unheard.
"Heave the lead!"

The lead was hove;
Sharp and short the quick reply.
Steady rose the captain's voice,
Dark fire glowed his swarthy eye.

On and on the good bark drove,
Leaping like mad from wave to wave,
Hissing and roaring round her bow,
Hounding her on to a yawning grave.

On and on the frigate drove,
Right in our track close bearing down.
Our captain's face was still and stern,
Every muscle too rigid to frown.

On and on the frigate drove,
Swooping down in her glorious pride
Lord of heaven! What a shriek was that Ringing over the waters wide.

Striking swift on the sunken rocks,
Down went the frigate beneath the wave
All her crew in an instant sunk;
Gulfed in the closing grave!

We were alone on the rolling sea,
Man looked to man with a silent pain;
Sternly our captain turned away
Our helmsman bore on our course again.

That pursuing frigate followed a false pilot, and he led it to destruction. In the pursuit of their purpose, they recked little of its unrighteousness, and took no account of God until he called them—and they were lost.

Oh, man or woman, are you, too, cherishing an ideal, are you following a purpose? Is it false, or is it true? Honor, fame, riches, power, take these if they come in the way, and make good use of them; but set before you as an ideal, something greater and grander, and truer than any of these. Crave the highest light for your guiding star. God has not left us comfortless; we do not have to follow Abraham, nor Isaac, nor Jacob. Not even a Moses towering in solitary grandeur; nor a Paul, with his matchless logic and noble heart, need be our ideal. We have One set before us beside whom these are as shadows, and that is Jesus, the God-made Man. One of us in every sense of the word. Sharing our troubles, our toils, our temptations; knowing our sorrows, our griefs, our fears and our cares. One who was hungry, and thirsty, and weary; One who experienced ingratitude, endured adversity, surmounted shame; who was betrayed by false friend, opposed by tyrannous power; and yet a Being who is everything which aspiration loves to picture in the vision of the soul. A Man in whose presence all earthly similes fail. He was all courage, all knowledge, all eloquence, all humility, and all love. Christ is forever and forever a comfort and a help. The man who draws nearer to him, ever grows stronger.

The Supreme Ideal

When you have lived long enough, you will see the futility of all earthly hopes, how unsatisfying and bitter they are, their fruition gives little pleasure and accomplishes little good, unless they have been cherished at the same time with Jesus. I do not decry the desire to excel; if it be an infirmity, 'tis one of noble minds, but the doing must be Christlike. We must have him, if we would have courage in the struggle of the present, fortitude in the day of transition, hope in the time of the future, and salvation in the end. In him alone are these things found, not in the code of ethics, not in the schemes of philosophy. But to enjoy them individually you must find him.

Why do you not do it? What keeps you back? What lets or hinders you? Why is it that men must plead, when reason, experience, your heart, tell you this is the proper course, the right—the only—way. Have you the courage to answer that why? Have you not learned this lesson, ye old? Has it not been told you, ye young? Let it have some practical meaning for you. Go not after the old gods before the flood, nor those of the Amorites in whose land ye dwell; with Joshua of old say, "As for me and my house we will serve the Lord!"

He has appointed ways and means of service and acknowledgment. Come forward publicly before all, and show your faith and your devotion. Say as of old, "Sirs, what must I do to be saved?" Prove to men your resolve to try to establish for yourself and your brethren this Christ ideal, which it will be your aspiration to approximate and your ambition to realize in yourself. Say not to me again, "The voice of one crying in the wilderness," which we do not heed. But say to God, all that I have is thine, and we are thine. We, too, will serve thee, and thou shalt pilot us to the haven where we would be—with thee, with thee.

GOSPEL TRIUMPHS IN SAN SALVADOR

These Were Converted Through a Loaned New Testament

...HROUGH the columns of your most valuable and helpful paper, allow me to acknowledge the receipt of $15, contributed by the readers of The Christian Herald for the purchasing of ...ay to God, in Spanish. We extend our sincere ... to them, as well as others, who have sent us ...l packages. All of this has been in response to ...peal published in your issue of October 10, 1906. ...nly knows how much we appreciate this ready and ...ant provision. We praise him, and also thank ... readers for their help and interest.

...haps your readers would be interested to know ...hing more of the progress of the Gospel in this ...lic. During the month of November it was my ...ge to visit five of our stations in the interior. Two ... stations visited were the result of two Testaments ...ere loaned, and after three or four years of trial ...probation, nineteen converts were received by ...m.

... the past eight years we have done all in our ... to scatter printed religious literature, and during the last two years we have had three colporteurs engaged in the distribution of religious literature, with Bibles and Testaments. After such a length of time in seed-sowing, naturally there must be a time of reaping. The colporteurs, during the past year, have told me that the people are really hungering and thirsting for some one to come and teach them the true Way of Life, having been deceived so long by priestcraft. The people in these lands are truly sitting in darkness, but, praise God, the light is shining among them now, and in many hearts the light of the glorious Gospel has already found a place! A few weeks ago, a call came to me from the coast to come and teach the people the Way of Life. Last May I visited a handful of believers along the coast, and sowed the seed by voice and tract. To-day, the number of those who believe has more than doubled.

As it was impossible for me to leave headquarters, I sent a colporteur with another native believer to visit them and give them instruction. After remaining with them twelve days, they came back rejoicing at the wonderful work of the Lord. Many are believing, not only along the coast, but there seems to be a general spiritual awakening all about us in this republic. The fields, indeed, are white unto the harvest, but it is the same story over again, the "laborers are few." We are the only two missionaries among more than a million souls. Many are crying out for the bread of life. Who is going to bring it? The Lord says: "Give ye them to eat." Who will obey the divine injunction and do it?

We have now some twenty stations to look after, with only one native helper. We have several native believers, who would gladly give their time to the service, but the support is lacking. Here is a good opportunity for some one to have a substitute, who could help greatly in overseeing these twenty congregations. Who will be among the first to help?

We are also in need of a mission house for headquarters. Rents are high, and we have to pay $100 a month (equal to $45 American). Living grows more expensive every day. Perhaps some steward of the Lord would be glad to help us to get a house.

We simply suggest this, and leave it to the readers of The Christian Herald to do as their hearts may dictate.

I am sending you pictures of some of our believers living on the coast.

Again thanking your readers for their gift and interest, I am, etc.,

San Salvador, C. A. Robert H. Bender.

THE CRIPPLED CHILDREN'S GUILD

A Novel Humane Work in New York City

SIX years ago the sympathetic friends of the multitudes of "maimed and halt" children of New York City, who are heavily handicapped in the race of life by their physical infirmities, formed a society known as the Guild for Crippled Children. On Manhattan Island alone there are no less than 7,000 of these helpless children of school age, and the two schools which have been founded under the patronage of the Guild, have ministered to both the physical and mental needs of a large proportion of these children of misfortune since the inception of the organization. Thousands have been benefited, and scores restored to the control of their bodies.

The cost of supplying teachers and books is relatively a small item in this benefaction for little unfortunates, although the Guild is full of gratitude to the city's Board of Education for furnishing teachers since last September for the oldest and largest of its schools, hitherto situated at 29 Montgomery Street. The uptown school at 2111 Madison Avenue will also, in the near future, be supplied with teachers by the city. The children, however, must be conveyed to and from school; they must have medical attendance, surgical appliances, baths, proper food, and often the oversight of trained nurses.

All these things, in addition to the teachers, the Board of Managers of the Guild have provided for six years, bringing their work to the attention of the Board of Education only when the improved condition of some of the little cripples permitted of their being transferred to the public schools. Not only has the elementary education of the children been borne in mind, as well as their physical welfare, but the fundamental object of the Guild has been to ultimately these children self-supporting by in manual training.

Little Cripples in Manual Training Class

A class in sewing for girls who have long pas age of school days is an interesting feature, an the way for the acquisition in needlework, where physical ity prevents the girls from employment in shop or facto far, lack of room has limi possibilities for the boys to wage-earning trades, to cla basket weaving, chair canin leather work; but the new buil Water Street, in which the town school will soon be has a fully equipped printing in process of preparation, whi afford much greater facilities fo ing at useful trades.

For the three summer mo each year, the Guild devotes tire energies to the winning of s and vigor for the disorted, en frames of the little cripples, by of the sea baths and fresh which their two homes at Branch and Bartow-on-the- make possible.

The entire movement is adm not only in its immediate pur relieving and assisting the c youth of the city, but in its far- motive of preventing future pau by providing weapons that eve weak hands may wield in life's w The Guild proposes to impro plant for manual training, which is especially us those who will never be able to attend the public s

A GIFT OF LOOMS FOR THE BOER GIRLS

I AM enclosing a few photos, representing our Boer girls at their looms and spinning wheels, and also some of their work, which created such a sensation at the Johannesburg Exhibition. Of course, this reproduction on a picture gives but a poor idea of the goods, which are in reality beautiful in design, in coloring, and in softness. Often have I wished that some of these first specimens of Miss Hobhouse's home industries could be sent to America, for I feel assured that the generous friends we have found in your country would marvel, as we have done here in Switzerland, to think that in so short a time young girls have been able to achieve so much.

When we think that about eighteen months ago our weavers begun work in a wretchedly poor stable at Langlaagte, we feel joyfully relieved to read this charming description Miss Hobhouse gives in her last letter of November 11th:

"The new schoolroom at Johannesburg is built of brick, and, in consequence, is far cooler; it can accommodate the forty-two yard looms, as well as several small looms, and the warping mill and all the rug looms. I was obliged to put up a tin cottage for a dyehouse, and a storeroom for the finished goods; this has a brick floor, cemented. Some twenty-five wheels, which could not be housed, I have stored in my boxroom in the tiny cottage. They were carried across here, two at a time, by Zimha, a Natal Zulu, a first-class boy, who works like a steam-engine.

"A cheering piece of news is that this week I had a gift from America of £101, 10s. 8d., besides $10 from a farmer's wife in Michigan. This money is given by the generous readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. I have determined that it shall be spent upon looms, our greatest present need; for if we have no more than at present, of what use will the yarn of all our increased spinners be? So, as Switzerland and Germany have provided the bulk of the wheels, our American friends will have given the looms. I think it will pu about twenty and pay the freightage. Our e country schools hang fire for want of these, so I order them at once.

Boer Girls at Their New Swiss Spinning Wheels

"We have invited some thirty or forty Joh burg and Germiston people to a private of the work, before it goes to the P Exhibition.

"Nov. 11th. This show was quite cess. There is a large court behin premises, surrounded by a high fence, determined to hang the goods all roun have tea in the middle. The effect wa gay and Oriental. The gentlemen Thomases; they would and could not b we had really made all these beautiful from the sheep of this country. We greatly pleased."

Whilst reading these pleasant deta thought to myself that the readers of CHRISTIAN HERALD and all my frien America have reason to be pleased als is no easy matter to say in a few words welcome their donations have been. not merely the gift in itself that chee but the knowledge that in far distant tries hearts beat with ours and loving grasp our own. This great love, disp by so many unknown sympathisers, like a benediction on this beautiful taking.

Thanking you once more heartily for great help in making our work know America, and wishing you a peaceful, h New Year, I am, etc.,

HOW OUR READERS APPRECIATE THE PREMIUMS

One Article Worth the Price of the Book

Dear Dr. Klopsch: The premiums of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, "The Greatest Natural Wonders of the World," The "Worth While" Library and the "Surprise" Calendar have all arrived and have been duly examined. The first article in "Greatest Wonders" is alone worth more than twice the cost of the book. I do not think the language used in describing The Blue Grotto of Capri can be exceled by any human being. As to The "Worth While" Library, it is composed of three little gems, that should be in every family in this land for the perusal of both adults and children, as they are brimful of useful, interesting and entertaining reading. You told us (the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD) that the Calendar for 1907 would be a surprise, but the term was entirely inadequate to give an idea of the beautiful premium that we were to receive.

Washington, D.C. JACOB PERSINGER.

Likes the "Devotional Library"

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—Pardon my delay in the acknowledgment of the receipt o "Devotional Library." I feel very grateful for the same, for I find muc enlighten and interest me. Being a new subscriber for THE CHRISTIAN HER I must add that I find it worthy of praise.

Tarrytown, N. Y. MRS. IDA CRISP

A Spiritual Uplift

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—The 1907 Calendar received. I think it exceeds all—all ot Thank you for the kind wishes for the family for the New Year. Let me wish Godspeed. I want to tell you that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has been and is t an uplift of soul. It has broadened my conception of God.

Scenes in the Flooded Districts in China, now Depopulated by Famine

CHINA'S FAMINE IS SPREADING

Countless Multitudes Starving and Cases of Cannibalism Reported—Relief Urgently Needed

TE dispatches from China by cable, supplemented by mail advices, indicate that the great famine in the three provinces adjacent to the Grand is slowly but surely extending. Enormous masses t population are in danger of perishing from rvtion and exposure.

Sne of the accounts that reach us from Shanghai, ll awful misery and suffering. The Viceroy of one th afflicted provinces, states that the famine is "ten neworse than any known in the last forty years."

e lls of a family consisting of husband, wife, and o hildren, in which the mother went foraging for od and during her absence the father threw the ilden into the river and drowned them. On her tu the mother asked for her children, and was told at he father could not bear to see them gradually ar ng to death, and there was no chance of feeding er so he made away with them. The mother, greatly stssed, flung herself into the river, following her ildren. The head of the family, in utter despair at e ss of his all, took his life also. The whole family us erished.

My suicides are taking place, and parents are vo ing their children because of their inability to vo le them with food. Children are also being sold f m one to three dollars each, and household goods, rm ng implements and cattle are also being disposed t provide food for their immediate needs. Actual sa are known in which girls have been sold for $3, ad oys for $2. Worst of all, there are stories current t tual cannibalism, but these reports do not come on the officials, who are trying to cover up the facts v gue statements and denials, although the general mpssion is that they are only too true.

Driven to Cannibalism

A correspondent of the Echo de Chine says that in w districts, Sinchow and Paichow, starving and des- er e people are eating their children, all the plants, ra es and roots having been exhausted. This corres- pnent adds that there have been many cases of canni- al n. He personally investigated several, and found ne only too true. Human flesh, in some few localities was actually being sold for food, although the hdlish traffic was conducted secretly.

At Woosung a great number of famine refugees have rrved lately. They were actually naked, with the exception of a few rags round their loins, and the women ud led their equally naked children to their breasts a gular Chinese fashion. They had the awful wolfish ca of starving people, which, when once seen, is not ay forgotten. Some of them ventured to snatch a ev grains of burnt rice, which had been placed on a m in the sunshine to dry. These refugees had tramped ll he way from the province of Honan. The North Ha Daily News says: "They were the first contin- e of a large number who had broken through the p on instituted by the local officials. The impression ems to be gaining ground, that the extent and magni- d of this calamity has not yet been realized by most eple. It threatens to equal the appalling famines 1h, nearly thirty years ago, devastated the northern r inces, and destroyed hundreds of thousands of eple."

In Honan, to which the famine has spread in the last e weeks, there are thousands starving, and refugees r pouring southward over the border. More than a lion are reported starving in three prefectures, viz.: Huaianfu, Haichou, and Hauchoufu. Cases of cannibalism are reported from Suchien. There are 10,000 refugees at Chinkiang (where the Missionary Relief Association is located), and 30,000 at Yangchou, and more are constantly coming. Relief stations have been established at a number of places, where messes of gruel are distributed to the sufferers. The refugees absolutely refuse to return to their homes, believing that certain death by starvation awaits them if they go back.

In response to a cablegram of inquiry from the proprietor of this journal, Hon. W. W. Rockhill, the United States Minister in China, cables from Shanghai as follows:

"DR. KLOPSCH, CHRISTIAN HERALD, New York:—Central government and provinces already aiding relief. Foreigners organizing at Shanghai, but American assistance would certainly be most welcome, especially if prompt. Extent of famine not accurately known here, but will probably cover large and populous region.

(Signed) ROCKHILL."

The Executive Committee of the Central China Famine Relief Fund issues another appeal, which says:

Reports from Europeans and Americans in Northern Kiangsu, as well as official dispatches, give news of existing and ever-increasing sufferings of several millions of starving Chinese. One shrinks from picturing the real condition of the people. Hsuchoufu, Huaianfu, and Haichou in Northern Kiangsu (spoken of as Kiangpeh) are in greatest destitution. Other districts in the provinces of Honan and Anhui are also affected. Several millions are not only destitute, but on the verge of starvation, and this will continue for several months. The larger portion are also without sufficient clothing for the winter.

Appealing to Europe and America

The following telegrams were dispatched by the Executive Relief Committee at Shanghai:

Lord Mayor, London:—Central China Famine Fund Committee, composed Consuls, Customs, leading foreign merchants, Chinese gentry appeal you open Mansion House Fund. Millions on verge starvation. Large sums urgently required. Also appealing New York, Paris, Berlin. Please wire remittance Honkong-Shanghai Bank. Consul-General telegraphs Foreign Office. COMMITTEE.

President Roosevelt, Washington:—Central China Famine Fund Committee, composed Consuls, Customs, leading foreign merchants, Chinese gentry, appealing through American Asiatic Association for relief funds. Millions on verge starvation. Large sums urgently required. Appeal to you for your support.

COMMITTEE.

Letters from Missionaries

Rev. T. F. McCrea, Treasurer of the Missionary Society, writes:

I have visited the refugee camps in Chinkiang and Yangchow. Their condition is truly pitiable. Thousands of men, women and children are huddled together in little mat and mud huts. Even if we are able to feed them, I fear that many must perish through cold and disease. I can't express the feeling that came over me at Yangchow, as I looked out over the great camps, and saw nearly 20,000 people huddled in among their little huts, which are ranged in narrow streets something like a millitary camp. I thought of that day when Christ fed the hungry five thousand. I wonder if Christ's people are going to have compassion on these hungry thousands in China, who must perish with cold and hunger unless we help them this winter.

Your telegram was received last night. We are greatly rejoiced that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is at work for us in the homeland. You may rest assured that our Committee will be most careful in distributing the funds they receive. It will be done under our own personal supervision.

Rev. Henry M. Woods, Southern Presbyterian Mission, Huaianfu, writes:

In Northern Kiangsu, and parts of Honan and Northern Anhui provinces, there are at least ten million people seriously affected by the famine, and no less than four millions absolutely destitute and starving. The heavy floods were occasioned by the great rains. Not only was there a great local rise of the streams in this province, but an immense volume of water was sent down from Shantung, just north of the famine districts. The lakes by which the Grand Canal is fed, having risen alarmingly, a frightened official, to save his own neighborhood, opened the sluice gates and sent a vast stream down south to augment the already large flood. The result was great districts were submerged; houses made of reeds and mud crumbled away; the wheat, just gathered, was ruined, and in the fields, where the farmers, according to custom, expected to put in the second crop of the year, there was a sheet of water varying from one to four feet in depth extending for miles.

Just west of the city of Huaianfu, there is a large plain fifteen or more miles wide, by thirty or more miles long, this under ordinary circumstances is dry, and is covered with crops, of which two are reaped every year. This year the wheat was for the most part destroyed before it could be garnered. The second crop of beans, sweet potatoes and ground nuts could not be put in, and, what is worse, the high water prevented in large measure the autumn sowing for next year's harvest. As a result, robery and murder are rife among the villages. The cattle, on which the farmers rely for plowing and hauling, have all been sold "for a song," and now the children are offered for sale by parents, and are often sold for from $2 to $5 Mexican. For weeks past thousands of poor, respectable farmers have been living on one meal a day, and that consists of the boiled leaves of the sweet potatoe vine, the potatoes having all rotted. In some places the people have already been stripping the bark from the elm and other trees to use for food. Unless liberal aid is given by friendly nations, there will be a great catastrophe among the famine refugees. Already over 500,000 are huddled together at Tsing Kiangpu, in low mat huts, being fed on a most meagre allowance by the officials, thirty cash (about one and a half cents gold) being allowed for each adult; fifteen cash (three-quarters of a cent gold) for each child. The contributions being made by the Government and local officials, are wholly inadequate to meet the crisis. We are hoping great things from the benevolent efforts of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and from its readers.

Rev. A. D. Rice, Presbyterian Mission, Tsing Kiangpu, writes:

The famine-stricken district of North Kiangsu Province is estimated at forty thousand square miles. I have just returned from a two weeks' trip over a great part of this district. Half the destitution and suffering has not yet been told. . . . . Not one fifth of a year's crop was gathered. Everything was drowned out, the houses, being made of mud, have fallen down. The people are homeless and starving.

My trip extended north from Tsing Kiangpu, one hundred miles to Haichou. Over all this district, flour, rice, fuel and every necessity of life is more than double its usual price, and little to be had at any price. Haichou is a great salt depot, all the salt used in this part of the Empire comes from there. The salt is made from water taken from salt wells and evaporated on mud pans in the sun. The wells and salt pans were all submerged in fresh water for days. The result is a great salt famine. On the streets of Haichou salt usually sells for two cash for three pounds, now it is twenty-eight cash per pound.

All this section of country is now being rapidly deserted. The lame, the blind and the weak, are being left at home, while the stronger are coming south as refugees for the winter. A conservative estimate of the number camped at Tsing Kiangpu at present is five hundred thousand, and still they come. Other cities also have these refugee camps, though the numbers are not so large. These refugees are being very systematically helped by the officials. They are getting now thirty cash (one and a-half cent), or the equivalent of a teacup of rice per day for one person. The officials cannot undertake to give them more.

I am sure that Christian hearts cannot but be moved by the sufferings of their fellow beings. Come to the help of these people that are in such distress, and prove your faith by your works.

Many letters have come to us from our readers expressing a desire to assist China in her present time of distress and suffering. It is especially important that relief of some substantial sort should be sent quickly to the three districts of Suchien, Sinchow and Paichow, where the starving people have been driven to cannibalism, and an effort is now being made with that object in view.

All contributions in aid of Chinese Relief should be addressed China Famine Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York. Every gift will be acknowledged in these pages. On another page of this issue will be found the list of contributions to date.

Substitutes in the Field

FROM almost every part of the Union, letters have come to this journal cordially endorsing the plan of individual support for native missionary workers in the foreign field. It is evident that the proposed method of bringing the patron at home into the closest possible contact with his or her substitute at the front, is destined to be the means of awakening a new and wholesome interest in missionary work generally.

Many write to us inquiring as to the expense, and desiring full particulars concerning the proposed system of furnishing support for native catechists, evangelists and Christian workers in foreign lands. As can readily be understood, there is a wide difference in the cost of support in the various mission fields. Thus, in Africa and certain parts of Asia it is possible to support a native worker in connection with an established mission at $50 a year. In some sections of China, India and the Philippines, the cost may be very little if anything above that figure; but in other parts of these countries, especially near the populous sections along the seaboard, it is necessarily higher.

It is, therefore, clearly impossible to establish a uniform rate for all foreign lands. In the table given below, we have shown the various available fields, and the estimated annual cost of maintaining a native Christian worker in each of these fields, serving in connection with some established mission.

FIELD OF LABOR	COST OF SUPPORT
	Man	Woman
Africa	$50	$40 to $50
China	$50 to $100	$30 to $80
Colombia, South America	$120	$120
Guatemala, South America	$120	$120
India	$50 to $100	$35 to $100
Japan	$100 to $130	$50 to $60
Korea	$45	$20 to $45
Philippines	$75 to $100

In addition to the foregoing, which is compiled from reports received from the varions denominational boards within the last two weeks, there are other fields yet to be heard from. These include Turkey in Asia, Persia, Tibet, many parts of South America, the Arctic lands and the South Pacific islands, in all of which we believe there is a golden opportunity for missionary work on the "personal substitute" plan. We hope to be able soon to add them to the tabulated list, at figures well within the two extremes.

We invite our readers to study the table carefully and prayerfully. We would suggest that those who wish to undertake the support of a native substitute at the front should write to us fully, stating their preferences as to sex, location and denomination. We will reply to all such letters, giving the fullest information available. When the decision is made, it will require comparatively little time to complete the arrangement satisfactorily, although some delay may be occasioned in cases where communication is necessarily slow owing to geographical difficulties.

A Prophet of an "Age of Gold"

THAT a college dignitary is not always a practical or logical thinker, is very aptly illustrated in the case of Chancellor Day of Syracuse University. Twice within a month the doughty Chancellor has rushed more or less rampantly into the public arena as the self-appointed champion of the trusts and corporations. On both of these occasions, his deliverances have been such as to challenge anything but admiration or approval, either for fairness or accuracy. The average intelligence revolts at the statement that the workers, as a class, are overpaid; that they are improvident and vicious, and that their love of drink is the chief support of the multitude of saloons in our great cities; that the united interests of labor constitute a despotism which threatens the permanency of democratic institutions, "clutching by the throat our fundamental liberties, and making the absurd boast of having produced the wealth of the world by the hand." This, and much more to the same effect.

In these stirring days, he is a wise man who tries not to inflame class against class by the use of vituperation, but rather endeavors to find a common basis for harmonizing the interests of all. It is the ill-advised championship of precisely such men as Chancellor Day that is making far more acute than reason and fact would justify the situation as between labor and capital. No sensible person, legislator or private citizen, wants to "destroy the present forms of corporate business." All that is proposed is to regulate them by suitable legislation. This the Chancellor knows as well as anybody else. Even the most strenuous defense of the corporations cannot justify his foolish philippic against the industrial classes, which is calculated to intensify rather than allay that "class feeling" which all sensible Americans condemn.

There is the suggestion of a mild form of megalomania in the assumption by Chancellor Day of the role of a prophet of the coming billionairism. Peering into the future, he discerns on every side the approaching triumph of wealth. The coming American will be essentially a money-getter. The growth of the faculty of acquisitiveness will develop the master-mathematician—the billionaire. "We have only begun," says Mr. Day, "to swell the fortunes of the world. Millions have taken the place of hundreds of thousands as a measure of wealth. Billions will displace millions before the century closes."

We will not go more deeply into this golden dream of a Midas age, which seems to have so fascinated the Syracuse Chancellor that all other considerations are forgotten. Most Americans will differ with him. Prosperity with honor we welcome; but there are a thousand things that have to do with the well-being of our beloved land that are far more to be desired than the dawn of an age of colossal fortunes, which would mean the decline of the Republic.

Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
Where wealth accumulates and men decay.

An Egotist's Ingratitude

THERE could be no better proof of the firm and enduring friendship subsisting between this country and Great Britain, than the spirit in which the unfortunate dispute with Governor Swettenham of Jamaica, has been taken. In former times, and in other circumstances, an act so ungracious as that of the stupid official, would have entailed long correspondence and disagreeable interchange of angry dispatches. Our Government and people have shown that they understand the situation, and cordially accept the apologies of the English Government for their surly and ungrateful representative.

The incident is fully explained on another page of this number. Briefly, it is that, hearing of the disaster in the island, Rear Admiral Davis hurried there to render any assistance in his power, as it would be a long time before any ship from the British navy could reach the scene. The bluff sailor thought more of relieving the suffering than of attending to matters of etiquette, and with the energy of a generous-hearted man, began to distribute surgical supplies and stores of food. While so engaged, he heard that there was an outbreak in the prison, and there was fear that dangerous criminals would overpower their guards and gain their liberty, to prey on the people of the city. At the request of the Colonial Secretary and other officials, Admiral Davis landed fifty American sailors to aid in preserving order. In the confusion and general disorganization, he omitted to ask permission of Governor Swettenham, probably thinking that the urgency of the need fully justified him in acting promptly. But the Governor, with more concern for his own dignity than for the welfare of the people under his charge, curtly reproved Admiral Davis for this breach of etiquette, and intimated that he was able to deal with the situation without American help. The Admiral therefore retired, bearing the snub with the self-respect of a gentleman.

It is difficult to make any excuse for the ungracious act, but it is probable that it was due to the previous nervous strain acting on a nature too weak to meet a great emergency. Such men as Swettenham ought never to be put in positions of responsibility; but, as with ourselves, unfit men sometimes succeed by the influence of their families in getting appointments for which they have no capacity. The British Government have practically repudiated his acts, and will doubtless punish him by consigning him to the obscurity from which he ought never to have emerged. He has earned the contempt of the whole civilized world, and now may rightly be forgotten. Our sympathies are with the sufferers, who, through his egotism and rudeness, have been deprived of the relief which this country was ready to furnish.

A Missionary's View of the "New Id

Dear Editor:—Your editorial in THE CHRISTIAN H of January 23, on "The New Idea in Missions," to my notice this morning, and I was indeed ple see you take up this work. Though I have ne fore corresponded with you, I have known of you work for many years and have been specially int in the great work you have done for India. I you are now going to enter upon a work that will you to do for evangelistic work what you have d thoroughly for orphans, famine sufferers, and before. What relief you will be able to bring to burdened missionaries, by giving them the little that will enable them to send a catechist or Bible-v to some new village!

How often, while in India, did I wish that son would give me a dollar or two a month more tha I got from the board, so that I might respond to appeal for a teacher or catechist. I dare say that missionary uses his appropriation to the last cen then when a special opportunity arises, he hasn't a to fall back on. And he cannot do otherwise. His r work calls for more money than he receives, and then, must become of the special work? God gran your efforts may be crowned with the greatest succ

Afghanistan's Ruler

TING India at the present time is a potentate hose good-will to that country and its Govern- ent is of great importance. He is Habib Ullah , he Ameer of Afghanistan. The sovereign of a stan has long been called the keeper of the gate d. The much talked-of, long-dreaded invasion of y Russia, would be made in all probability g that country, if it were ever made at all. His private life is the subject asant gossip. He is said to be dissipated, and to disgusting orgies in his palace. He has four who receive allowances from the royal treasury from $50,000 to $10,000 a year. He is reputed rongly opposed to British interests, and to resent ence in the concerns of his kingdom. His step- on the other hand, whose concern is naturally for Mohammed Omar, takes the other side, and has promised her favor to the British in case of a ul revolution. His position is evidently precari- ecially if the reports of his character are true.

nificant relic of the famous French Emperor was red last month at Marseilles. It appears that Napoleon was at Marseilles, on his way back to fter his campaign in Egypt, he left irty small volumes, which had been panions of his travels. lant Rescue shipwrecked seamen arrived in New York last whose rescue was effected at a desperate risk. were on the schooner Fireman, which sailed from Stonington, Me., laden with granite. They encountered head winds from the start, and two days later ran into a fierce gale. A great gust of wind tore the mainsail to ribbons, and the schooner listed so badly that the cargo shifted, and forced her lower seams open. It was necessary to keep the pumps continually going in order to keep afloat. After three hours the pumps broke down, and then the men cut holes in the deck and bailed out the water with buckets. It was fearfully cold, and the men were growing weak. As the sun set the poor sailors looked sadly at it, fearing they would never see it rise again. One man was detailed to keep a torch waving, and to give with it the three waves, which is the signal of distress. It was seen from the bridge of the steamer Manhattan, from Portland, Me., to New York. It was then near Cape Elizabeth, a rugged promontory on the Maine coast. The captain of the Manhattan realized the danger of the struggling crew, and called for volunteers to go to the rescue. The first officer and four sailors responded. A boat was lowered, and the five men went on the perilous expedition. It appeared to be almost certain death, but the first officer said "We thought of those poor fellows on the schooner, and we risked it." The boat was run under the lee of the sinking vessel, and the call was given to the men to jump. One after another was caught, until all were in the boat, and in half an hour they were safe on board the steamer. It is strange how the peril of utter strangers develops the heroic in men. It shows in this how they are partakers of the divine nature.

God commendeth his love toward us, in that while we were yet sinners, Christ died for us (Rom. 5 : 8).

A Loaf as a Weapon

A curious case was on trial before a magistrate in the Butler Street Police Court, in Brooklyn, a few days ago. A young man was charged with attempting to rob a tall, young girl on the street. He was said to have had two companions, and to have been loafing on the corner of the street, ready to prey on any person who appeared to be incapable of making a defense. Since the union of Brooklyn with New York, the most efficient of the police of the two cities are sent to New York, and the corner loafers are generally unmolested. In this case however, the young highwaymen seem to have made a mistake. They were right in suspecting that no policemen would be at hand, but their intended victim was not so inoffensive as they had imagined. She had been sent by her mother to the grocery to make certain purchases, and she had them with her. When the three ruffians assaulted her, she threw all the goods down except a long loaf of Italian bread, and with this as a weapon she defended herself. So vigorously did she use it that two of her assailants fled ignominiously, and she reduced the third to powerlessness, and held him until a policeman was found and brought to the scene of conflict. It was a strange weapon to use, but it served the purpose. We often speak of bread as the staff of life, but in this case it was near being made the staff of death. The most beneficial things of life may become the most deadly, according to the way they are used, and it is so in the spiritual world.

The commandment, which was ordained to life, I found to be unto death (Rom. 7 : 10).

A Strange Delusion

A physician, who has had a wide experience among the insane, writes a learned description in the Lancet of a disease, which he names agoraphobia, which he has found present in many of his demented patients. "The craving of the subject of this malady," says the doctor, "is to be near some tall vertical structure. Away from such a structure, he has just the feeling of dread, of impending danger, of imminent disaster, of something dreadful about to happen that a man would have who was walking through a jungle infested by tigers, or that a child has when alone in the dark. I have seen a woman affected with agoraphobia get from one side of a court to the other, by not only going around by the wall and touching it all the way, but squeezing herself up against it and clutching at the bare surface. Sufferers from this malady cannot cross an open space. They cannot venture more than a step or two from some vertical surface. They feel no uneasiness in a colonnade, open all around them though it be. Their reason tells them that their dread is groundless, but reason is powerless against instinct, and an imperious instinct shouts 'danger' in their ears." The doctor thinks that the state of mind is a survival of traits in their ancestors in ages long past. He believes they are descendants of a race which stood in great fear of huge carnivorous foes, from whom there was no escape but by climbing trees. The feeling that there was no safety for them except in being near trees, or something high, that they could quickly climb, was ingrained in them, and appears in their descendants when their faculties become disordered. To the lay mind the doctor's reasoning does not seem conclusive, inasmuch as that particular form of insanity is rare, while the descendants of the extinct race must have been numerous. It is not so, however, with the tendency to sin, which was manifested in the earliest times, and still affects the whole human race.

Wherefore, as through one man sin entered into the world, and death through sin; and so death passed unto all men, for that all have sinned (Rom. 5 : 12).

AMID THE RUINS OF KINGSTON

and sleep by the roadside or wherever night overtakes them. The second week many ships made their way into the harbor. Among them were the British cruiser Brilliant, the French cruiser Kleber, the Haytian presidential yacht Nord Alexis, with supplies; and the Advance, from Colon, with supplies. All ships offered assistance. The Advance belongs to the Panama Canal Company, and had on board one hundred tons of food, part of it from the Panama Canal Commission. Over one hundred and fifty tents were given out to the homeless.

On the first Sunday, memorial services for the dead were held in the open air in all parts of the city. They were attended by great throngs of mourning people. Hardly one was present who had not lost relatives or friends. Some indeed could not tell whether the members of their own families were living or dead. The negroes are discussing the religious side of the earthquake. They seem to think the catastrophe a punishment for bad blacks and whites. They have been holding daily services, at which they earnestly promise repentance and asked to be saved.

Governor Swettenham

The people are now beginning to be hopeful that the check to the prosperity of the island will be only temporary. Kingston, however, will have to be rebuilt from the ground up. The buildings that still hold together are not really safe, as the foundations are strained and cracked. Some rebuilding has already begun. The structures are, for the most part, small shops. Archbishop Nuttall, who was one of the heroes of the recent disaster, working almost night and day for the relief of the suffering, is hopeful for the future, as the earthquake did not hurt the producing power of the country. "The opinion is," reads one dispatch, "that some official plan should be outlined regarding the class and location of new buildings, individuals doing the rest. However, the officials are unapproachable."

Something in the nature of an "international incident" was created by the extraordinary course pursued by Governor Swettenham, in relation to the relief work which was so promptly and efficiently done by the officers and crews of the American warships under Admiral Davis. On the arrival of the American warships in Kingston harbor, they fired the customary salute. Governor Swettenham's deputy made a formal request of Admiral Davis, asking that he land troops to preserve order, and this was promptly complied with. The Governor objected to the salute, as his people, he said, were liable to imagine that another earthquake was taking place. He added that there was no need of American aid; that his own troops could preserve order and do all the relief work. Admiral Davis replied by note regretting the salute, and stating that the service his men were performing ashore was in the interest of humanity, and that, as robberies had actually occurred, he judged that the local protection afforded to property was inadequate.

In his reply to this courteous communication, Governor Swettenham wholly repudiated the action of his deputy, who had requested the presence of the Americans. He wrote:

> . . . I feel it my duty to ask you to re-embark the working party and all parties which your kindness prompted you to land.
> If, in consideration of the American Vice-Consul's assiduous attentions to his family at his country house, the American Consulate needs guarding, in your opinion (although he was present and it was not guarded an hour ago), I have no objection to you detailing a force for the sole purpose of guarding; but the party must have no firearms and nothing more offensive than clubs or staves for this function. . . . . .
>
> It is no longer a question of humanity; all the dead died days ago, and the work of giving them burial is merely one of convenience. . . . . .
> I believe the police surveillance of the city is adequate for the protection of private property. I may remind Your Excellency that not long ago it was discovered that thieves had lodged in and pillaged the residence of a New York millionaire during his absence in the summer; but this would not have justified a British admiral landing an armed party and assisting the New York police.

When this most discourteous effusion reached the hands of Admiral Davis, it naturally excited his surprise. The charitable conclusion was that Governor Swettenham had given way under the nervous tension of the situation, and "lost his head." No reply was sent to the note, and the American vessels left shortly afterward.

When the contents and nature of Governor Swettenham's communication became known in England a storm of disapprobation quickly sprang up, and his conduct was censured on all sides. The leading British journals denounced him unsparingly. A few explained his act by affirming that the calamity must have temporarily affected his reason. Others recalled th that while holding former Government appointme the Colonies he had shown himself so undipl and irritable, as to make himself decidedly sive and unpopular. His indignity to the Am Admiral, it was urged, should in no sense be reg as an official expression, but rather as the irration of a man whose eccentricities had frequently trouble in the past.

Hon. Mr. Haldane, British Secretary of Stat War, cabled to our Government at Washington, r ting the undiplomatic course of Governor Swette and assuring us of the cordial appreciation o humane service rendered at Kingston. To this a was cabled by President Roosevelt, entirely ign the Swettenham incident, and expressing the conv that England would have been equally prompt and ing to render friendly aid had the circumstances reversed.

But if the incident was closed, as far as our Go ment was concerned—the act of the discredited Gov being regarded as beneath its official notice—the was viewed in a different light in England and i British colonies. There were loud and insisten mands for Swettenham's recall. The Governor's si aggravated the offense. The Mayor of Kingston wr Admiral Davis, begging him to ignore Swettenh act—which, indeed, he had done throughout. Archbishop of Jamaica, in a letter to Pres Roosevelt, condemned the act of the Gove and expressed the thanks of the Christian p of Jamaica for the good help rendered them. other charges against the irascible Governor came he was accused of brutality toward the sufferers were injured in the earthquake, and especially of blooded indifference to the fate of the unfort foreigners who happened to be in Kingston when calamity occurred. Americans seemed to be his aversion, and evidence was brought forward to show he had been guilty of the grossest inhumanity to them. These statements were confirmed by citize Kingston, white and black. The London Times clared: "Governor Swettenham's action is depri thousands of women and children of adequate food shelter. Prominent English officials, clergymen judges join in condemning the Governor's cour Public opinion in England was united in regarding career as at an end.

GOSPEL WORK AMONG THE RICH AND AMONG THE LOWLY

The Two Extremes of Society

PROF. M. H. CHAMBERLIN, President of McKendree College, Lebanon, Ill., gives this interesting account of his experience with extremes of religious worship in New York:

As a stranger in your city, a recent Sabbath furnished me a remarkable, long-to-be-remembered experience. In the forenoon, it was my privilege to attend the Bowery Mission. The 400—not those of the late Ward McAllister's designation—which crowded the audience room, constituted a motley assemblage indeed, having come in from the Bowery representatives from every State in the Union, and, I would think, almost every nation.

The reverential respect with which this incongruous gathering listened to every word, and responded to every request of "Mother Bird" (as she called them her "boys"), show the marvelous power this godly woman exercises over case-hardened souls.

The Scripture readings, prayers, testimonies of men redeemed from the lowest plane of degradation, the stirring Gospel hymns, in which all seemed to join, and last, but not least, the effective sermon of Superintendent Hallimond.

In the evening, I attended the church of the Rev. Donald Sage Mackay, he having given the hour over to converts from the Hadley Mission, on the Bowery, that they might testify before his congregation of the power of Christ Jesus to save to the uttermost from all sin. The testimonies were remarkable.

In a single day, I had worshiped with the people of the two extremes of society, seeing them brought together, whereby a most significant object-lesson was furnished of the fact that we are all one in Christ Jesus.

I could but think that this timely innovation of Dr. Mackay might ultimate in such an understanding between these two widely divorced elements of society, as to lead the more fortunate of the two to generously lay its hand of power under these Christian workers among the lowly, and to furnish the means whereby your wonderful city might be made as great in moral grandeur as it is in commercial splendor.

Sang the Mont-Lawn Songs

MR. C. D. DEVARE, Superintendent of the Abigail Free School and Kindergarten, 170 Sullivan Street, New York, in a letter to the editor of this journal, relates an incident which will be read with genuine pleasure by our friends, and more especially by those who are personally interested in our work among the children of the poor at Mont-Lawn. Mr. Devare writes:

Last summer you entertained many of our children at your ideal children's resort, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Children's Home at Mont-Lawn. Since then, Sullivan and Thompson Streets and surrounding sections have been alive with children's songs. The Scripture verses which the little ones learned to sing with you during their sojourn at Mont-Lawn, now sung in their homes.

Just think of it! Talk about Gospel preac Just try to realize the effect which this verse-singing must inevitably produce upon parents and guardians of these children.

A little before Christmas, Mrs. Devare g party to her sewing-school children and parents. About sixty children, with as grown persons, attended. After they had taken of refreshments, the children, with mothers and friends, enjoyed themselves in social games. Being tired of these, the started, all impromptu, to sing the Mont-L Bible verse-songs. They sang tune after without interruption, for about thirty min the mothers, in broken English, joining in.

The pathos of it all struck the innermost c of my soul, and affected my wife and othe the same manner. When the children at las ished, there was not a dry eye among the g people in that assembled throng. The lines, the homes that we may brighten," etc., c forcibly home to me.

God bless you, dear Brother Klopsch, helpers, and THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. You ar doing great things to uplift the lowly.

I have such a better supply of religion, so that she would be satisfied to wear 'sackcloth and ashes.' Just tell them that I have lots of religion, and have worn a great many ill-looking and uncomfortable things without a murmur, and would wear sackcloth and a whole barrelful of ashes if it were for the good of the cause, but when I can help the cause better in something comfortable and pretty and can just as well have it as not that way, why I think the Lord will endorse it. So here goes for something else pretty—some light ginghams or light calico, to wear to get tea when I want to be awfully wicked and wear my very best dress all the afternoon and evening. (Another instance of total depravity.) I am much in need of a pair of scissors; toilet and sewing basket articles are a little short in this house. I have a pair of shears, but they are too large to cut the missionary's hair. I do this little job myself to save twenty-five cents. I do not get it, but I guess I get my one-third out of it.

"Our old clock, too, is about worn out, and our jeweler says that it is of no use fussing with it. It does not keep good time, and things are always expected to move like clockwork in a minister's family. They sometimes go as our clock works, and get us mixed up, as they did last Sunday. We have no bell, and the other church had no service, and our clock failed to properly notify us of the time. Consequently we were late, which made some of the 'sisters' look at us with such a shocked and abused air.

"I want to ask you a question. When we receive a box, there has always been five dollars or more in Mr. ———'s vest pocket. Why is it always in the preacher's pocket? Wish you would send me a pound of candy. The first box we received had some candy in it. Have looked for candy in one ever since, and none ever came. I do not spend money for candy. My conscience will not let me, and I have not only the noted sugar tooth, but a full doule set all around.

"Cordially yours, —— ——."

Fete-Day in a Neapolitan Vegetable Market

THE artist here depicts a pleasing feature of the fete-day in Naples, when the "fruits of the earth" are on display. It is a picturesque occasion, with its evergreen booths and their great variety of garden produce. Musicians are there, too, in plenty: their hearts are as cloudless as the blue skies of their sunny Italy, and their quaint instruments merrily pipe forth the Neapolitan airs which befit the occasion. The neighboring country districts have contributed their quota to the holiday throng, which sways to and fro under the glowing sunshine, adding color and life to the charm of the scene.

The Richest Woman in the World

The little home missionary wife has happiness and love amid poverty. Away across the ocean at Essen, in Prussia, young, charming, and happy in her newly married life, lives Frau von Bohlen, the richest woman in the world. Before she was married, a few weeks ago, in the little chapel on her estate, with the kaiser present and a throng of noble people to grace the function, she was Bertha Krupp, sole heiress of Frederick Krupp, who died suddenly in 1902. His father and grandfather had been renowned as workers in metal, and his father was known as having discovered how to cast steel in immense forms.

Alfred Krupp, Bertha's grandfather, was the inventor of the terrible siege guns, which have made the German army famous. The proprietress of the Krupp works at Essen is this young woman of twenty, who married Herr von Bohlen. A visitor recently was entertained at dinner in the castle at Essen, and found the young couple as simple-hearted and as happy as if the man had been a clerk on a small salary and the wife a young matron doing her own housework. There were plenty of servants, there were gold and silver-plate and costly china, and the castle, within and without, was like a palace. Yet the young people took their wealth as a matter of course, and Frau von Bohlen personally conducted her visitor over the grounds, and showed him with pride her twenty-eight horses and her dogs. The horses and dogs manifested the greatest pleasure in seeing their mistress, who knows every one of them by name.

The men who founded the magnificent fortune were shrewd and sagacious, and endowed with brains of no common order. It is apparent that they have bequeathed to the daughter of the house common sense, straightforwardness, and an ability to secure what she wants. She will make a model German wife, which is saying much. One of these days the Von Bohlens are coming to America, where they will receive a warm welcome. At present Frau von Bohlen is known and loved by the workmen on the estate and at the factories, and by their families. She is a sort of Lady Bountiful, and when her carriage passes every head is bared, the little lads bow and the girls courtsey.

If these two pictures have any lesson, it is this: A heart of gold is worth more than gold and silver. Happy are the rich or the poor with whom love abides.

A Genuine "Surprise"

Dear Dr. Klopsch:—I am in receipt of the "Surprise" Calendar and it is indeed a surprise. If that is a specimen of your production, in the face of the lithographers' strike, I wonder what you could have done without the strike. It is certainly a splendid specimen of the artist's ability.

HALF-HEARTED OR WHOLE-HEARTE

International Sunday School Lesson for February 17

*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

THERE is nothing more dreaded among Orientals than "the evil eye." It is to them a malignant force that is always seeking to bring ill-fortune and disaster upon them. They try to guard themselves against "the evil eye," by wearing turquoise. They have it set in finger-rings, toe-rings, earrings and nose-rings. Shepherds have it embedded in their flutes and other musical instruments, and it is even set in weapons. In the case of Lot, however, it was no imaginary "evil eye" of another, but his own "lust of the eye" that caused him to choose the grassy, well-watered plain, even though he must take Sodom with it.

Two men, one old, and the other younger, may be seen standing together, engaged in solemn converse. Near them are encampments, where children are at play, and women move about in their daily duties. Beyond the tents, as far as the eye can see, are flocks and herds, with herders scattered among them. Some herders are in groups, and they actually appear to be fighting. The landscape is almost barren of verdure, and the dry beds of streams look like serpents stretched about. Let us draw near enough to hear what the two men are talking about, for evidently they have a grave matter to settle. The face of the older man is earnest but kind, while the face of the younger man has a sinister glitter about it. Abram, the older man, says to Lot, the younger: "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen; for we be brethren."

The difficulty is insufficient grass and water to sustain the herds, particularly in a time of partial drought. In consequence, the herders have been quarreling with each other about the possession of the limited supply. Abram is ready to yield his rights and precedence, and so he gives Lot first choice, saying to him: "Is not the whole land before thee? separate thyself, I pray thee, from me: if thou wilt take the left hand, then I will go to the right; or if thou depart to the right hand, then I will go to the left." Lot turns toward the east, for there is the rich plain watered by the Jordan River. Without any consideration whatever of Abram, he decides upon that region as his abode. And then the two men separate, not in anger, but as brethren. Lot soon finds himself among evil companions, the worst the world has ever known; while Abram fixed his dwelling just where the Lord had intended he should be when he gave him the land of Canaan for his possession. His first act is to set up an altar to the Lord and offer sacrifices, that he may establish his household in godliness. How wide the contrast between the two men! It had probably shown itself in their characters before this. We cannot better express it than in the alternative this lesson bears as its banner: "Half-hearted or whole-hearted?"

Abram said: Let there be no strife. Is not the whole land before thee?

Illustration and Application

What is it like in the Bible? "History repeats itself," and few chapters oftener than the sad story of Lot, the half-hearted professor of religion, from whose heart the "covetousness which is idolatry" was never fully cast out. What warnings the Bible gives all through its pages that one may be predominantly wicked though a formal worshiper! Cain was a worshiper, but his worship was really sacrilege, because envy and hatred filled his soul. Nadab and Abihu, profaning even the priesthood with drink, were smitten of God even while they sacrificed. Achan was on the roll of "God's people," when his covetousness brought defeat to his nation and death to himself and family. Gehazi, though a preacher's assistant, became a leper in soul from covetousness and then a leper in body, for men to see how hideous it looked to God. Jehu, too, was half-hearted—done on one side and dough on the other. Simon, the new convert at Jerusalem, speedily revealed that he, too, was a shallow-ground Christian, when he planned to make money by the laying on of hands. And Demas, even when he had started on a missionary tour, fell out and left the sad record by Paul, "Demas hath forsaken me, having loved this present world." When we add to these who went through the forms of worship without real faith, one of Christianity's highest twelve, in whom covetousness wrought shipwreck of faith, we may all well say: "Lord, is it I?"

Enrollment on church books, coming to God's altar in formal service—surely no intelligent man in the light of history will count these as guarantees of salvation. It is to unfaithful church members, young and old, that God cries: "Repent, or I will come unto thee quickly." But it is also to backslidden Israel that God gives the alluring promise: "Though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow." That such as Lot should be counted "righteous" and saved from burning Sodom, illustrates the promise of Jesus for weak and wayward Christians: "The bruised reed he will not break, and the smoking flax he will not quench." But let us not be content that our light should be only a smoke.

Covetousness in the Heart

Let us recall Lot's instructive story to see just why his light did not shine, but only smoked. He left the land of visible idols with Abram, keeping the idol of covetousness all the while in his heart, like the idols Rachel hid in her saddle when she made the same journey at a later time. Probably Lot left the land of idols less because of any deep revolt against them in his own heart, than because he wished to please and accompany his strong-hearted uncle. The revealing hour came when it became necessary for the two caravans to separate. If he had been whole-hearted, he would have waived first choice to which his uncle was every way entitled, and he would, in any case, have selected any place for himself and his family but the neighborhood of corrupt Sodom. Twice he lost the Sodom property that he bought at the cost of family peace and purity (chaps. 14 and 19), and he lost his wife and the character of his daughters and most of his own—all illustrating Christ's proclamation of the failure of selfishness, "He that saveth his life shall lose it."

Survivals of Lot's Family

What is it like in common life? We all despise Lot's commercialism, but the important thing is that we should despise and conquer it in ourselves and those about us. Let us, therefore, look for members of the Lot family in our own town, who have other names, but the same nature. Here is one Mr. Lot in the real estate business. He has from boyhood regarded the liquor traffic as one of the great curses of the world, but when the brewer came to ask him to take charge of all his rents at a handsome fee, he took the agency because he could not bear to lose so much money. Here is another Mr. Lot, who is a grocer. He knows that some of the goods he is expected to keep are harmful, and others are not what they claim to be; but he reasons that if people cannot get them at his place they will take all their trade elsewhere, and so he goes on selling the stuff. And here is another Mr. Lot, who runs a paper, in which people seek to advertise quack medicines that will both rob and injure those who answer the advertisements; but he cannot bring himself to refuse all the quackeries in spite of their big bribes. Another Mr. Lot is in the law business, who takes any client, however mean, and helps him to defraud others and at the same time escape the law. Another Mr. Lot is a doctor, who will not tell his rich patient that it is his wine that makes him sick, lest he drive him to some other doctor. And here is Mrs. Lot, advising her daughter to choose the suitor who has the most money, though he has the worst morals. And here is Miss Lot, who has inherited such commercial spirit she cannot eve evening with a suitor without ga money at cards. She cannot even without making money. And he young Mr. Lot, cannot even take what he sport of kings" without dragging in the "s American demon of commercialism, by bettin races. And here is little Master Lot, who taught that work and traffic on the Sabbath a but when a newsdealer offers to pay him to deli ing papers, he takes the job, though he must d Sunday papers in violation of the laws of God All the Lots have one mark—they will not risk dollar, even if they have to risk losing their so will all move from a safe home to Sodom if chance to "make something," even though lose something in character that is really precious. That is always a foolish choice wh God out of the account.

Many years ago, in the days when hand-l weaving silk were in use, a weaver sat at his t was busy over a splendid piece, which was go pattern and gay in color, and it was whispere his fellow-workmen that it was destined to king's palace. The weaver sat at his task one when he ended one reel he took up another table, and began to prepare the silk to be us work. "Stay, friend," cried an elderly man, come in to praise the weaver's work and watch gress, "there seems to be something wrong w reel." "No," replied the weaver, "I think not drop yester even among some stuff that my wi for cleaning her ribl ere this it is dry, stain will never sh the silk is worked i the rest." So t weaver went slowly home, and without the cons of thinking that it was a mistake or an oversig he knew he had, with his eyes open, inserted t thread that had spoilt the whole.

THE NEW CRY OF THE ORIENT

"ASIA FOR THE ASIATICS," THE UNIVERSAL SLOGAN---AN ORIENTAL'S IMPRESSIONS

The East bowed low before the blast
In patient, deep disdain;
She heard the legions thunder past
And plunged in thought again.
—Matthew Arnold

By SAINT N. SING

(An Educated East Indian now Visiting America)

That the old, unprogressive Orient has changed during the last few years, and that it is now in a stage of rapid transition is no longer a debatable issue, even with the most conservative mind.

Amongst the manifold potent factors which have been instrumental in piercing the proverbially tough skin of Oriental conservatism, and changing its course towards progress and prosperity, is the silent and unostentatious fraternity of the Occidental missionaries, who, under adverse circumstances and trying conditions, have carried on evangelistic and humanitarian work in various countries of the Orient.

Mr. Saint N. Sing

The standard commonly employed in the Western countries to measure the work of the missionaries in India is faulty. To test the services rendered by the pioneers of a "foreign" religion, by the number of "actual" converts, is unjust. The appreciation of the far-reaching work, has yet to be done by the level-headed and large-hearted missionaries, especially of those who, along with the direct evangelistic work, have done valuable educational, industrial and philanthropic work, has yet to be appreciated.

Since the Orient has been awakened. A great many of the Oriental institutions have already been revolutionized. Others are in the throes of a quick and complete metamorphosis.

The writer has had unique opportunities for observing the work and methods of the Occidental missionaries in the Orient. From infancy he went to a missionary school. In his college life he attended a missionary college. In his professional career he came into intimate contact with many European and American missionaries in India. Through almost every country this side of India he has lovingly looked into the character of the missions. The suggestions he offers here are not actuated by any unfriendly or hostile spirit.

Those who have endeavored to read the signs of the times, and who keep in touch with recent events in the Orient, know the "India for the Indians," "China for the Chinese," "Japan for the Japanese," and "Asia for the Asiatics" propagandists. These movements have assumed gigantic proportions. He is a visionary indeed who dreads the yellow, or, to be more accurate, the color, peril; but that such strong sub-currents of unrest and spirit as are embodied in the statement "Asia for the Asiatics" do exist in nearly every country in the Orient, can not be gainsaid. This sentiment does find in more or less active form in nearly all the Asiatic countries, and is gaining additional ground daily. The writer laments that, unfortunately, it has not been recognized by the Occident in its fullest significance.

Occidentals generally admit that the necessity of the Western missionary to direct, control, organize and superintend the missionary fields and activities in these countries, does exist, and will continue to exist for years to come. In the course of time, the Oriental will reach a stage of evolution where this necessity may be done away with. In the estimation of the writer, the time is not very distant when the Oriental, possessed of the capability of taking care of himself and his effects, will frown upon outside help as undesirable patronage. There are, however, ultra-radical advocates of complete independence, who plead that if the Orientals are ever to assume charge and be responsible for the direction, supervision, and initiation of their affairs, they must begin some day, and plod on through foolish mistakes and misadventures. But time alone can solve the problem whether or not complete independence is desirable and practical.

Two things are indisputably certain.

First. That the Oriental has shown, during recent years, that he desires to equip himself and manage his own affairs. He is somewhat chary of foreign yoke. It is also plain that, unless he is given a freer hand in the activities, unless the Occidental be willing to make some concessions, there is a danger of the present amicable understanding being snapped asunder. The writer was very much impressed with the grim determination of the native Christians in North China, who, about this time last year, were making plans and passing resolutions to acquire greater privileges in the management of their church affairs.

Second. It is becoming evident that if the Oriental does not become too impatient and allow himself to be led away by the new sentiment, the spirit of self-help and self-dependence will work for the good of the Orient, and should be encouraged by all the well-wishers of Asia.

While it is admitted that for many years to come it will be essential that the general formuation, direction, supervision and extension of the missionary plans, fields and activities should be left in the hands of the Occidental missionaries in the Orient, in the light of the above facts it is equally essential that the native workers should, as soon as possible, be trained to carry the brunt of the burden.

A Native Teacher of India

Chapel Built by Chinese Christians

Native Chinese Evangelist

In Far Eastern countries, the European and Occidental missionaries are called "foreign" missionaries. The writer is reminded of scenes which he saw often in the Oriental lands. He has observed many a missionary, clothed in the orthodox European clerical garb, talking religion to a knot of country rustics—half-clad and half-famished people. Let the reader judge how much "at home" that missionary must be in that multitude. The truth is, that the average Occidental missionary in the Orient is an out-and-out "foreigner." His sympathies are with the people; but the popular impression of him is crystalized in the epithet, "foreigner." Every inch of him looks "foreign" to the people amongst whom he has made his home, and vowed to spend his life for Christ's sake. The masses, ignorant, superstitious and prejudiced, cannot help remarking to themselves the foreign dress, mode of cooking, manner of living, etiquette, accent, and figures of speech of the average European missionaries. These stamp the Occidental preacher as a foreigner.

Of late years many Occidental missionaries have given up their Western ways, to make themselves at home with the people amongst whom they live. This only strengthens the writer's point, that the Occidental missionaries should divest themselves of their "foreign oddities"; but the percentage of the Occidental missionaries in the Orient who have followed this wise course is very small.

There is another serious drawback—the inadequacy of their vocabulary, and lack of freedom and grace in its use. It is almost an axiomatic truth that the Oriental beats the members of the English-speaking race in acquiring foreign languages. While there are hundreds of thousands of Orientals who speak and write different European languages, it is a rare exception to meet English-speaking people who employ the Asian languages with freedom or grace. It is rarer still to meet those who, in addition to having a large and ready command of the Oriental languages, have a good accent. The writer has met hundreds of Occidental missionaries in the Orient, but he can count on the tips of his fingers the number of those who had attained any high proficiency in the acquisition of an Asiatic language. The inadequacy of vocabulary and bad accent are very serious drawbacks.

The Western missionary in the Oriental field is, at best, an exotic, a hothouse plant, one who is looked upon as a "foreigner," and who labors under the stress of almost insuperable drawbacks of inadequacy of language and lack of understanding of the Oriental people.

Those who wish to get an adequate return for the sacrifice and money expended on the Oriental missions, who wish to get full value for every dollar subscribed for the missionary work in Asia, would find that the best way to meet the Oriental demand expressed in the "Orient-for-the-Orientals" sentiment, is to foster and encourage the spirit of self-knowledge, self-help, and self-reliance, and to freely employ native workers, native evangelists, Bible women, teachers and preachers. The acceptance of Christianity may estrange them from their folks; but still they will be more at home with and less "foreign" to the people at large. Native workers, coming as they do from the ranks of their own people, know the ideals, sentiments, customs, habits and manners of the persons amongst whom their work lies. Besides, they are not hampered with language difficulties in their work.

Let it be freely and frankly conceded, however, that the missions in the Orient have not yet reached that stage where natives can manage their own affairs without external aid. But the time has arrived when the bulk of the missionary workers should be the natives of the land. Let these sons of the soil steer the missionary vessel in the Orient, the Occidental missionaries only directing and supervising the workings of the craft. Let the keynote of the missionary work in the Orient be the native evangelists, Bible-women, teachers, preachers and Gospel workers. It may be asked, are these men forthcoming? The writer is strongly of opinion that such workers are available in the Orient. But, if difficulty be experienced, special effort should be made to train up men and women who can creditably and conscientiously discharge these duties.

There are hosts of native Christians in the Orient, whose patriotism is the pride of their country; but the general tendency of native Christians has hitherto been to adopt the Western clothes, ways and manners of life, and this has been the reason of their being accused of denationalization. Under the inspiration of the new idea the tide should be changed henceforward.

A Methodist Pastor's Commendation

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Your Red Letter Bible arrived safely, and I am much pleased with the book. The binding is good, type good, plain and clear. The synopsis of books of the Old and New Testaments is a special feature, which I think a great deal of, and the helps and maps I consider very complete. I am showing it to many people, who without dissent claim to admire it. The Calendar is a thing of beauty, and will be a joy as long as it lasts.

A Western Gospel Tour

By Mrs. Whittemore, Founder of the "Door of Hope"

DURING our recent Western trip, the Holy Spirit was manifested in a marvelous way. This was specially the case at Toledo. Several meetings were also held at the Moody Bible Institute of Chicago. At Hinsdale, at the sanitarium, many of the patients manifested a desire to be all that God would require them to be. In several small towns in Illinois, as Shelbyville, Cowdan, etc., although the meetings were not so largely attended, the results were something wonderful. At Kansas City, were several meetings were held in connection with the Door of Hope, much interest was manifested and the work was strengthened.

Mrs. E. M. Whittemore

During a brief trip of two months in California, a large number of services were held at Pasadena, Los Angeles, Redlands, Riverside, Glendora, etc., some in halls, some in churches, some in hotels, etc., with some marked results of decisions for Christ.

The Door of Hope in Los Angeles, founded three years ago, is now in a very flourishing condition. A large number of girls have been rescued. Some are happily married, and others are living truly Christian lives. The home is located at 3000 South Main Street, and occupies quite a large space of ground. The rooms are commodious, and furnished in an attractive manner, so as to have a refining influence, while sheltering the girls sufficiently long to help them to become acquainted with the Christian life.

On the return trip, a large number of meetings were also held, and in almost every place the results exceeded our expectations. On Sunday, January 13, a large mass-meeting was held in the Bijou Theatre, in Philadelphia, where many hundreds were gathered, and listened for nearly two hours most attentively to all that was said. At the close, a very large number raised their hands for prayer, and some took a decided stand for Christ.

One of our most wonderful meetings was at Cambridge, Ohio.

This closed a tour of three months' service. We had some very interesting cases of drug victims, who came out most decidedly for the Lord. There were also some addicted to the drink habit. A large number of young people in every service signified their desire to become Christians.

The Word of God in Korea

THE following testimony of the wonderful way in which reading the Word of God is bringing people to know Christ as their Saviour, is taken from the report of the Bible Committee of the Presbyterian Mission.

The Rev. J. L. Gerdine of the Methodist Episcopal Mission, South, Wonsan, who often accompanies his colporteurs on their trips, writes: "A method I have used with success has been to load a donkey, and, accompanied by one or two colporteurs, go from village to village off the main road, where, after preaching at some central place, the Scriptures were offered for sale. At such times there would be an eager demand for them, the difficulty being to provide books to meet the demand.

"On one trip in new territory, we offered Gospels for sale in a large magistracy, where the story of life had never been heard. Our remnant of about one hundred copies were sold in about an hour. I have since visited that place and found a congregation of about sixty, with their own church building, and as earnest and enthusiastic a group as I have seen in Korea. The eagerness with which they bought the Word on our visit, seemed an index to the way in which they received the truth when they understood its meaning."

The Rev. W. R. Foote, of the Canadian Presbyterian Mission, writes: "One instance of the opinion the heathen hold of Christianity. A man of good family and some wealth had been for a long time given to drink, and with the years the habit grew, until his family were alarmed lest he should waste all he had. Finally some men of the village met and told him that it would be well for him to become a Christian—that nothing else could reform him. They had seen bad men become good and he could be saved too—but only by becoming a Christian. It was decided that he should go to church the following Wednesday evening. His friends went with him, and he decided to believe, and continues to live a life consistent with his profession. I visited his home recently, and am much pleased with the progress he and his family are making in the Christian life.

"In the South, in Kyeng Sang Province, the same good work is being done by our colporteur. Mr. Chang, our colporteur, was at the market in Chogei City. A man came forward and bought two Gospels, and entered into conversation. It appeared that ten months before he had bought two Gospels, and after reading them became convinced that they contained a good message to him. He believed in secret. Twice, as the colporteur had come to Chogei, he had bought more books, but this time he wanted to get the whole story more correctly. So he said, 'Please come to my house to-night and bring your friend along,' for Mr. Yi was helping Mr. Chang proclaim the Gospel, although Mr. Yi was not drawing any salary. On going to the house that night, they were surprised to find the man knew quite a good deal of the Scripture story. On the wall were some funny papers. 'What are these?' they asked. 'Those are prayers. The Gospel said I must pray, and I supposed that was the way to pray. Do not the people who do this doctrine pray by these papers on the wall?' And they taught him the real inwardness of prayer from the heart. They urged him to let his light shine, for as yet he was only a secret believer. After some persuasion, he went out and brought in some friends. They, too, heard gladly. For ten days Mr. Chang and Mr. Yi preached in that house when they were not out in the villages near by, and they left five men definitely promised for Christ."

One can hardly close a report of Christian work in Korea for the year 1905, without making mention of the movement during the year towards the uniting of mission work. At mass meetings held in September, committees representing the various mission bodies and phases of the work were appointed to consider plans for the practical working out of the proposed union. Already newspapers and Sunday School literature have been united, a committee has been appointed to prepare a Union hymnal, and some of the schools and hospital work have been united. These tidings of awakening in Korea should encourage Christians in America to greater effort to give more of these people the Word of God.

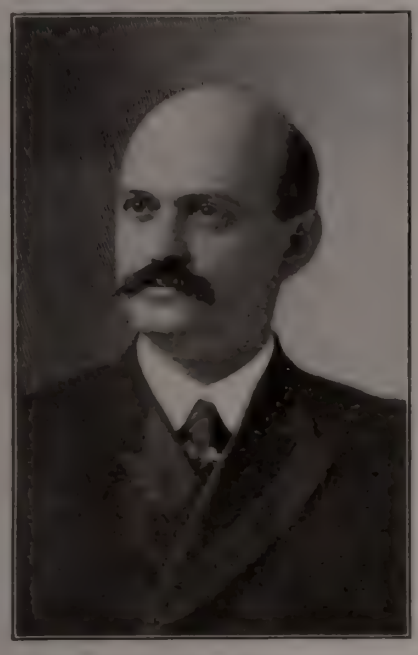
to know what Jesus taught. I have left the level of debate and come down to that of conduct. I am seeking to lead the people to become practical followers of him who "went about doing good," and we have already begun to do good in all ways possible to all the people, regardless of race, creed or previous condition of servitude.

The attitude of the church on social questions has brought much disgrace on Christianity. I want the church to occupy a large space in the world; but she will never do it if she persists in her silence on the great pressing problems vexing us for solution, and divorces herself from philanthropy, reform, and the progress of the world.



Rev. Madison C. Peters

I have inaugurated this movement in order that I may freely speak what I honestly think. I protest against being hired by the privileged few to preach what they like. Many a preacher to-day, to hold his job, must sell his manhood to the favor of the men who pay his salary. He is expected to fawn upon them and flatter them, and, for bread and cake, pander to prejudices in public which in private he despises. There is not a church in New York that has grown at all in proportion to the growth of the population. There are fewer Protestants in New York to-day than twenty-five years ago. There are never more than 15,000 men in the Protestant churches of New York on the fairest day.

Broad-minded and aggressive men, like Robert Stuart MacArthur, of Calvary Baptist Church, have, with both pen and voice, commended my movement, Dr. MacArthur declaring that instead of one man preaching in a theatre, there should be ten in New York, the greatest foreign and domestic missionary field in all the world; and the large audiences which have already attended these services prove conclusively that the movement fills a long-felt want.

It may be just to say here that the people who are attending my meetings are persons of influence, choice spirits, who are open to spiritual persuasion. Fully eighty per cent. of the attendants are men—warm hearts and fine minds. I am reaching people of various minds, and I doubt whether in all America there is to-day a congregation like that which assembles Sunday mornings in the Majestic Theatre. On a common meeting-ground assemble the Jew and the Gentile, the Catholic and the Protestant, the believer and the unbeliever, the infidel and the Christian, the pagan and the worshiper; and I have brought them all together to clasp hands in the bonds of brotherhood and love and helpfulness, in the unity of Christianity, before Christianity's God, the Father of all.

The question I put last, I am always asked first: "How can you sustain these meetings financially?" My own church, which I lately served, has started off the movement with a liberal subscription; but aside from this, as a beginning, I must depend upon the voluntary offerings of the people and of friends who believe in this kind of work. I think I can not only prove the necessity for such a work, but command the confidence of the people in such a way that friends will be raised up in all parts of the country, who will help to continue the work so auspiciously begun.

Through The Storm

the lighthouse shines. During the year 1906, while subjected to criticism just and unjust, the Mutual Life paid for death claims and endowments over 26 million dollars. After the storm the lighthouse stands. To-day, under a new management that has cheerfully conformed to every new legal requirement, and carefully installed every possible economy, the Mutual Life stands before policyholders and public on a sounder basis than ever.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company

has never had its solvency questioned. On the other hand, its great solidity and strength have caused wonder in the financial world. With its vast resources and great advantages employed solely in the policyholder's interest, still more is to be expected from this time on. To get behind its protection and to get the benefit of its economies is surely wise.

The Time to Act is NOW.

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

PEACE AN ACTUAL PROCESS OF HISTORY*

IN a series of masterly studies upon the ideals whereon modern government and citizenship are builded, Miss Jane Addams, of Hull House, Chicago, presents to the thoughtful reader a logical history of the evolution of national and international peace as a normal state, through the reciprocal restraint which has been found to be necessary for the common good of nations, as of individuals.

Miss Addams could have made no more thorough preparation for her work, than by the reading and mental absorption of such writers as Hobhouse and Lecky. Through the warfare and bloodshed of centuries the ever onward march of progress has wrought the spectacle—not indeed of permanent and universal peace, but certainly "that ancient kindliness which sat beside the cradle of the race," is manifesting itself as never before in the codes and institutions of the present-day civilization. The author calls to the witness-stand many eminent speculative writers of Germany and England, to prove that every stage of human progress is marked by a curtailment of brute force; and she demonstrates that with the rule of law and order, society is controlled, not by warfare, but by recognized ideals of social justice. It is not the heroism connected with battle and destruction which appeals to our constant admiration and emulation, as does the truer heroism which pertains to labor and the nourishing or succor of human life. The hero who wages war against the dread enemies, Poverty and Disease, is he who compels our respect and enthusiasm.

Miss Addams devotes a chapter to immigration, using it as a powerful argument for the attainment of peaceful cosmopolitan relations; she advocates the extension of the functions of municipal administration, voicing her belief in the "average man," and pleading for the modern realization of Aristotle's ideal of a city, "where men live a common life for noble ends."

Chapters upon the protection of children by legislation and the carefully elucidated theory that all industrial questions are germane to righteous government, are followed by a ringing challenge to women to take advantage of the franchise, and to work toward the definite object of acquiring it. Miss Addams says:

> Because women consider the government men's affair, and something which concerns itself with elections and alarms, they have become so confused in regard to their traditional business in life, the rearing of children, that they hear with complacency a statement made by the Nestor of sanitary reformers, that one-half of the tiny lives which make up the city's death rate each year might be saved by a more thorough application of sanitary science. Because it implies the use of the suffrage, they do not consider it women's business to save these lives. Are we going to lose ourselves in the old circle of convention and add to that sum of wrong-doing which is continually committed in the world, because we do not look at things as they really are? Old-fashioned ways which no longer apply to changed conditions, are a snare in which the feet of women have always become readily entangled. It is so easy to believe that things that used to exist, still go on long after they are passed; it is so easy to commit irreparable blunders, because we fail to correct our theories by our changing experience. So many of the stumbling-blocks against which we fall, are the opportunities to which we have not adjusted ourselves. Because it shocks an obsolete ideal, we keep hold of a convention which no longer squares with our genuine insight, and we are slow to follow a cue which might enable us to solace and improve the life about us.

The book closes with a summary of existing conditions and a comparison of war, with its gruesome harvest of desolation upon the one hand—and labor upon the other, representing productive, not destructive, effort; and bringing with its reign a moral reaction in the shape of a great sense of joy that "all voluntary destruction of human life, all the deliberate wasting of the fruits of labor, have become a thing of the past."

America's Awakening: The Triumph of Righteousness in High Places. By Philip Loring Allen. It describes the "spirit and accomplishment of our national revival," and deals with the "moral upheaval," which has been so marked throughout the country of late: its contents include character sketches of Roosevelt, Lafayette, Jerome, Folk, and other leading spirits of the new era of political activity. Pp. 288; illustrated with portraits; cloth covers. Price $1.25. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York, Chicago and Toronto, publishers.

The Life of Sir George Williams is a biographical labor of love, which is assured of a wide circulation, both in England and America. It is the story of a man whose work will never die—the founder of the Young Men's Christian Association. The book begins with that crisis in a boy's life, the day when he leaves the home of his childhood and goes out into the great, unknown world. The boy of fourteen, youngest of a family of eight children, bids farewell to the little farmstead, and goes to make a place for himself in the life of cities. How he does it, how he makes his own world, and the entire world a better place because he has lived, how he and his work grew in years and in honors, is told with simple and telling earnestness by Mr. J. E. Hodder Williams, who lived the story as he wrote it. The work is as truly a history of the Young Men's Christian Association in England and America, as it is the record of one life. Illustrated. Pp. 358. Price $1.25. A. C. Armstrong & Son, publishers, New York.

Hymns of Worship and Service, Chapel Edition, is an excellent compilation offered by the Century Company, New York, comprising 385 hymns, especially appropriate for mid-week services, young people's meetings, and of the chapel exercises in educational institutions. It also contains fifty-two responsive services. Pp. 340. Price 35 cents.

The Immediate Care of the Injured, by Albert S. Morrow, M.D., is a work containing much practical instruction for physicians, nurses, and more especially laymen, who find themselves confronted with the immediate need for "first aid," and beyond the reach of a physician. The book tells exactly what to do in all cases of accidents, injuries and sickness. The subjects considered have been presented in clear and simple language. The author, recognizing that illustrations are often of more value than descriptive text, has introduced a large number in explanation of points which might otherwise be misunderstood. Pp. 323. Price $2.50. W. B. Saunders Company, Philadelphia and London.

eadin' in THE CHRISTIAN last evenin', some of the din' accounts of the suffer- n' people in China, and in furin' the night, I paid 'em w how I got there, but the ed I was a settin' down f a great multitude of fam- creatures, old men and ger men and women, boys ll ages and sizes; but the ght of all was the poor little n' babies.

in this Christian land of ou could have seen those ed, hungry, sufferin', dyin' earts and your hands must t to them—hearts filled with ith food.

self there were a number of men from this land of ours, an armful of great, beauti- bread, while I had only one f, which was to last me till ne way get back to America. of the famishing creatures y first impulse was to reach loaf to one of them. Then ught: What use, it will only d I will have nothing left, know how much need I may before I get away from this en land. Let those others, h an abundance, feed them. see what they were doing, prise I saw them marching on ngry throng, hugging tight ed loaves, intent only upon y out of the crowd without that which they valued so rom them to the thousands of hands and imploring eyes, d even the smallness of my gotten, and, almost before I knew it, I began to break up my little loaf and distribute it, thinking, "I will give to as many as I possibly can, one mouthful anyway, and I give it in the name of Christ."

But the more I broke off the more there seemed to be, while those to whom I had given the pieces also began breakin' and distributin' to those near them, while from the throngin' thousands arose a glad cry of thanksgiving and blessing, and how my heart thrilled as I heard these words: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

Well, this went on until all that hungry multitude was fed — yes, feasted, and I still had an abundance for my own need.

And now I bethought me again of the men and women who had been so loaded down with the loaves they would not part with even to save the lives of their fellow creatures. They were still hugging their treasures to their breasts, but the beautiful loaves had become shrunken, dried, wasted, until scarcely anything remained, while they themselves were but living skeletons.

And, as I looked, they marched on in a line toward a steep precipice, yet seemed blind to their danger, intent only upon getting away with their still treasured loaves. On, on they went, till off that terrible height they stepped right out into eternity! And I awoke.

"What does this dream mean?" was my first thought "Is it because I have been thinkin' that as I could do so little, when the need is so great, it wasn't worth while to do even that little?"

"Well," sez I to myself, "I haven't much 'tis true, but what I can do I will, and that right away. And the Lord have mercy upon those who are marchin' towards eternity with their arms full of big loaves." AUNT JERUSHY MARIER.

A Criminal Redeemed

With the death of Mr. George M. Callahan, Assistant Superintendent of the Union City Mission, Minneapolis, Minn., has been removed an effective worker from the Western mission field, and an interesting figure in the ranks of reclaimed men who become notable agents for good in their Christian lives.

Born in the slums of New York, Mr. Callahan began life as a newsboy, but gradually drifted from petty offenses to serious crimes. After eleven years spent in prison, the man went to Minneapolis, where, in a mission into which he aimlessly wandered, he was converted under the preaching of John Callahan, now the Superintendent of the Hadley Rescue Hall, New York City. The new convert was sincere in his reformation. His street preaching, though crude, possessed a quality of power which made business men and church workers to stop on the curb to listen. His immediate associate and chief at the Minneapolis Mission says: "Mr. Callahan was one of the most remarkable Christian workers I have ever known or met. He lived only to help others."

When You Look in Your Mirror Are You Satisfied?

Any Woman Can Have Good Health, a Refined Face and Good Figure

MANY a woman has surprised her husband and friends by giving 15 minutes a day in the privacy of her own room to special directions which I give to her for the care of health, face and figure. Over 20,000 women have studied themselves under my direction in the past five years.

Are You Tired of Drugs?

I use no drugs. I study each woman's case just as a physician studies it, the only difference being that I strengthen and put in place weakened organs by exercise for nerves and muscles controlling such organs, bring a good circulation of warm blood which I purify by teaching correct breathing and by prescribing the special diet, bathing, etc., adapted to each individual. I strengthen all your vital organs, lungs, heart, nerve centers and send your blood bounding through your veins as when a child.

I develop or reduce your figure to correct proportions. I teach you to stand and to walk with an ease and dignity which at once bespeak culture and refinement.

Clear Skin and a Good Figure

Every figure can be rounded out symmetrically unless bones are missing or tissues entirely wasted away, and the woman who carries from 20 to 100 pounds of superfluous flesh every time she moves has my sympathy—but she does not need to do so—and surely it is every woman's privilege and duty to keep herself attractive and pleasing.

When you request details about my lessons, I send you free, a booklet showing you how to stand and walk correctly, with a card of correct poise for your dressing table.

MISS COCROFT AT HER DESK

What My Pupils Say of My Work

I wish every nervous teacher could know what benefit is to be derived from your physical culture
I have lost 34 pounds, and was never better. I look ten years younger.
My constipation and biliousness are entirely relieved
Just think how I have gained, since I began with you from 112 to 137½ lbs in one year.
My catarrh and lungs are much better and my body, which was a lean, crooked structure, is actually beginning to look like your picture of correct poise.
My head is steady, the confused feeling having gone. It is the best money ever spent for myself.
Just think, Miss Cocroft, before I took up your work I could not eat anything without the greatest distress, and now I think I could digest tacks. I am so happy.

Personal Instructions

Write me fully, also letting me know your faults of figure etc. I will make a personal study of your case and will let you know whether I can help you or not. Your letter will be held in strict confidence. I never publish letters without special permission, though I can send you hundreds of testimonials from women I have helped, who have given me permission to show their letters.

N. M., Bluffton, O. Was the darkness at the crucifixion due to an eclipse of the sun?

There is no record of such eclipse that is reliable. It was more probably a miraculous darkening. If it could have been accounted for in a natural way, the centurion would not have been so much impressed by it and the accompanying phenomena.

L. E. B., Mound Ridge, Kan. 1. What is implied by the phrase, "Sowing wild oats"? 2. Does the Bible refer to the actual literal heart in such phrases as "My son, give me thy heart"?

H. C., Purdum, Neb. Has the prophecy in Ezekiel 4:3, of a city besieged from a wall of iron, ever been fulfilled?

It was not a prophecy at all, but a picture sermon. The situation was this: A number of Jewish exiles in Babylon were naturally concerned about what was happening at home in Jerusalem. There were no newspapers, and they went to Ezekiel's house to learn what he thought. He was a man of eminence and piety. Some of the exiles did not believe that Jehovah would allow the city and temple to be hurt; others thought that nothing could resist the Assyrian armies. Ezekiel believed that the city would be destroyed. To impress the conviction upon them, he made a clay model of the city and set up an iron wall before it. Perhaps he talked to them, too, but the symbol would tell the story whether he did so or not. As you know, Jerusalem was taken and the temple ourned.

1. It implies that a young man is leading a vicious life. The theory is that immorality in a young man may be excused on the ground of his youth, and that when he gets older he may clean up. It is a most mischievous theory, not justified by facts. The harvest of the wild oats sown in youth is generally sorrow, sickness and remorse. 2. No; the heart in such phrases signifies the centre of life and being. If a man gives his heart to God, he consecrates to him all his being.

V. T., Kennewick, Wash. 1. Please give me some particulars of the Tay Bridge disaster in Scotland. 2. Also tell me who publishes Hundred Choice Selections?

1. The bridge across the Tay River at Dundee, on Sunday, December 28, 1879, was partly destroyed by a gale while a train was passing over it. A gap of about 3,000 feet was made, and between seventy-five and ninety persons perished. 2. There are many such selections indicated by number, as, One Hundred Choice Selections, No 1, etc. Published by Schoonmaker.

H. F. R., Winona, Mo. 1. A preacher here declares that if, after hearing him preach four times, we do not leave our churches and join his, we are doomed to perdition. Has he any authority to say so? 2. Did David ever repent of the murder of Uriah? 3. Is it true that a real Christian cannot fall away? 4. Has there ever been a time when there was no witness for Christ? 5. Is there in the New Testament a command to keep the Sabbath?

1. Pay no heed to any preacher of that kind. It is a impotent threat that he makes. He has no authority for the statement. If he says he has, tell him to pray for deliverance from the sin of lying. 2. Yes. Read Psalm 51, which he wrote at the time, and see how deeply he grieved and repented. 3. Unhappily there are many instances of a Christian falling away. It is doubtful, however, whether one dies in his sins. God deals with him generally, and by discipline brings him to repentance. 4. Men have thought so, but probably it was not true. As in the time of Elijah, men do not see as God sees (see I. Kings 19: 14, 18). 5. No; but there are intimations that the Christian should keep holy the Lord's Day. Heb. 10: 25 is a direction to join in the religious assemblies which were held on Sunday (Acts 20: 7; I. Cor. 16: 2). The Lord's Day is not the Sabbath, which was simply a day of rest. The Lord's Day is a day of religious activity.

H. S. G., Cambridge Springs, Pa. 1. Is the moral condition of the world better to-day than it was in the century before Christ's birth? 2. Is it probable that Paul's statement: "So in Christ shall all be made alive" (I. Cor. 15: 22), will ever be verified?

1. It is incomparably better. If you read the Roman historians Tacitus, Horace, etc., and the modern historians of that period,

The Mysterious "Death Valley," where Many Have Perished

ALTHOUGH the greater part of the West has been thoroughly explored, and the tourist, in Pullman or automobile, now crosses mountains and canyons once known only to prospector or pioneer, there are still spots that remain as forsaken as they were centuries before the white men came. Among these is the Death Valley that lies near the dividing line between Nevada and California. It got its grewsome name from the number of immigrants who were lost in its arid wastes while trying to make their way to California at the time of the "gold fever," in 1849. Every year since that time some hapless traveler has perished on the trail from thirst, heat or starvation. The bottom of the valley is a sandy plain, 115 feet below sea-level. There are but two or three springs in the region, and travelers must carry water for both themselves and horses. The heat is so intense in summer, reaching 130 degrees in the shade, that few can enter the region. Even in November, the temperature is between 80 and 90 degrees. There is but one way to become famous in Death Valley, according to Robert H. Chapman, of the United States Geological Survey, and that is to die near to a trail, so that one's remains may be found and a post put up recording the fact.

J. E. Rose, Kans. Was Solomon a negro or not? If not, what does "The Song of Solomon," chapter I., 5th and 6th verses, mean?

In the opinion of many of the best commentators, the passage has no reference to Solomon himself. Gregory Nozianzus calls the Song of Solomon a "bridal dramatic song"; Patrick calls it a "dramatic poem"; and Lowth describes it as a drama—an "epithalamium or nuptial song of a pastoral kind." Others have applied a spiritual meaning to it. A few give it a literal interpretation, as relating to the marriage of Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter or with an Israelitish woman (the Shulamite).

MAY BE COFFEE

That Causes all the Trouble.

When the house is afire, it's like a body when disease begins to show, it's no time to talk but time to act—delay is dangerous—remove the cause of the trouble at once.

"For a number of years," says a Kansas lady, "I felt sure that coffee was hurting me, and yet I was so fond of it I could not give it up. I paltered with my appetite and of course yielded to the temptation to drink more. At last I got so bad that I made up my mind I must either quit the use of coffee or die.

"Everything I ate distressed me, and I suffered severely almost all the time with palpitation of the heart. I frequently woke up in the night with the feeling that I was almost gone—my heart seemed so smothered and weak in its action that I feared it would stop beating. My breath grew short and the least exertion set me to panting. I slept but little and suffered from rheumatism.

"Two years ago I stopped using the old kind of coffee and began to use Postum Food Coffee, and from the very first I began to improve. It worked a miracle! Now I can eat anything and digest it without trouble. I sleep like a baby, and my heart beats full, strong and easily. My breathing has become steady and normal, and my rheumatism has left me. I feel like another person, and it is all due to quitting coffee and using Postum Food Coffee, for I haven't used any medicine and none would have done any good as long as I kept drugging with coffee." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. "There's a Reason." Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. All grocers.

An Odd Wager on Potatoes

MRS. ADELINE B. HOUSE, of the Industrial Home Farm, Salonica, Turkey, sends us this quaint anecdote.

It is only right to say that potatoes are a comparatively new vegetable in some parts of the country. Many Bulgarians are good farmers and gardeners.

My friend came upon a villager one day planting potatoes. Into each hole he dug he would put about as many potatoes as would fill a Turkish fez.

"That is not the way, let me show you how," said the Austrian, taking a knife from his pocket, and cutting a potato into pieces.

"Oh, go away!" cried the villager. "Do you suppose you can get potatoes if you cut up the seed? Go away from here I tell you!" But this would-be helper was not so easily discouraged.

"Now, brother," he said, "let me tell you something. You plant a few rows of potatoes as you know how, and I will plant as many rows my way. Then when they are ripe we will each of us dig up three hills and weigh them. If your hills weigh most, I will give you fifty okes, but if my hills weigh most, you are to give me fifty okes."

The villager thought that a safe bargain, so he agreed, and each man moistened his thumb with his lips and they pressed them together to seal the compact, and make sure that neither should go back on his bargain.

At last the day came for the trial. The priest and most of the village gathered around the potato patch to see the result. The Austrian was the first to dig up one of his hills and out came some fine, big potatoes. His companion laughed.

"Ah, you have put them into the hill! Now that is not fair."

"No," his friend said, "but I will tell you what we will do. You shall dig up three of my hills where you like, and I will dig up three of yours." So that was decided upon, with the result that the Austrian's hills were much the heavier.

"You were right," the villager acknowledged, "but," he added, whispering in the other man's ear, "I will give you 100 okes, but don't tell the secret to any one else."

THE "COWBOY PREACHER"

MANY readers of this journal will remember the Rev. Frederic Baylis, better known as the "Cowboy Preacher," whose work has been occasionally referred to in these columns. Mr. Baylis writes that he is building a new church at Holder, Ill., a neat little structure, but lacking a bell, and also pulpit furniture. He will be glad to communicate with any one who feels interested in the subject, and who may be disposed to help this struggling church.

Don't Be a Soap-Slave!

DO you know that it's soap that piles up your household labors doubles your duties?

Not because of what it does, but because of what it doesn't d

For, with soap alone, home-purity depends on your efforts, a not upon its meager help.

Mere soap is so powerless—so totally unnecessary—for household use, that it is a wonder any thinking woman will continue to pestered by it.

GOLD DUST

is soap "with its working clothes on"—good, honest, vegetable-oil soa ground fine and blended with other purifying materials—a smoo golden powder that vigorously and thoroughly cleanses, without taxi your strength, and with no injury to garments or fine woodwork.

No soap, borax, soda, ammonia, naphtha, kerosene or other foreign ingredient needed with GOLD DUST

Gold Dust dissolves quickly in hot or cold, hard or soft water—becomes "liquid muscle," rich, cleansing, purifying suds, almost in an instant.

For washing clothes and dishes, scrubbing floors, cleaning woodwork, oil cloth, silverware and tinware, polishing brasswork, cleaning bath room pipes, refrigerators, etc., softening hard water and making the finest soft soap.

nts a Responsibility*

R position in the Church should never be a matter of ambition, or envy, or jealousy, but each should or to the utmost of his power to do at lies within his power and opportunity.

So much Paul implies in the passage associated with the topic. His ion is one of solidarity. He regards the Church as Christ's body, and is readers to be concerned about its ment and perfection, rather than heir own part in it. The evangelist to lament that he is not a prophet, stor that he is not an apostle, but to rejoice that he has a work to do at his work is part of the great Each work is needed and each be honored in the Church, as it fulpurpose of God. If all Christ's servere of one kind, and all had the pecial talent, there would be many of the Church's need unattended to. have various talents in order that Church may be completely served. If man was a preacher, where would dience be? If the whole Church ingers, who would do the preaching aching? ives Easy and Hard†

SY and hard are terms which, when applied to life, are liable to mislead. A man that goes to the rtory, penitentiary and the scaffold, intervals of liberty, in which the of a policeman spoils all enjoyment, easy life. Again, a noble soul sured by uncongenial people, harassed nptation, agonized by the cravings of and imperious appetites, yet resolute ist them, a soul ridiculed, abused and derstood, has no easy life. Both lives ard, but with what a difference! The nary toiling in a heathen land, far from friends and country, suspected metimes hated by the people he has to save, has no easy life. A man of deeds, a man called to great service, has promise of ease, and if he looks over history, he will see that such as he have never had peace or rest. , David, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Daniel ves of harass, with continual risk of a t death. Read the long list of Paul's hips and perils in II. Corinthians 11:

Modern heroes of the faith have rly suffered. Luther, Savonarola, iffe, Knox, Cromwell and a host of s took their pay in this way, and d in it. Their lives are hard, but not rd as the transgressor endures. They their faith to support them; he is ious that he is flinging his life away, leasures end in satiety, and his mis- bring vengeance upon him, either by le or by the hand of an enemy.

e choice a young man has to make is between the easy and the hard, but en the good and the bad. He canscape hardship. Even the lazy, in- t life is not free from pain and ness, and the active sinner is sure to . The choice lies between hardship red in work that ennobles, in work God approves, and hardship incurred e service of sin, which has no hope or lation in it. Let no one dream that by sing a self-indulgent life of pleasure ill find ease and peace; he will come at the last to hate his life, and to loathe the joys that no longer gratify him. The case that comes from a conscience at peace is the only ease worth having. At the last he will be able to say with satisfaction, I have fought a good fight; I have kept the faith.

The Satisfied Soul

LONG have I sought substantial joy,
Among the scenes of earth,
In youthful pleasures, light and gay,
Hilarity and mirth.
I quaffed the streams that earth sent forth,
To cheer the sons of men,
But found them bitter to my taste,
And yielding only pain.

I plucked and ate the blushing fruit,
That in earth's garden grew,
But neither did they satisfy
Though pleasant to my view.
I sought some flower of earthly growth,
That would not fade away,
But found, alas! that all alike,
Were subject to decay.

In friendship then I thought to find
True pleasure unalloyed;
But disappointment, with his wand
Touched, and my bliss destroyed.
For death stole noiseless on their track,
And broke each tender tie,
Thus calling me to seek that bliss,
Which comes from God on high.

I humbly knelt before his throne
And asked him to reveal,
Where I might find unfading joy,
For He alone could tell.
He pointed to a lowly vine,
That grew hard by his throne,
A branch of which reached down to earth,
Though by the world unknown.

He bade me taste its luscious fruit,
I ate; was satisfied,
And found it gave more real joy
Than aught else I had tried.
He led me to a little well;
I drank; it quenched my thirst,
And wondering much from whence it flowed,
Saw from his throne it burst.

REV. A. D. LAUGHLIN.

Called Higher

Miss Kate Drinnin died in Wyoming, Ill., on the 14th of December, 1906, aged 25 years. She was a bright and cheerful exponent of the Christian life, and has gone where pain and sorrow are no more.

Mr. Ambrose L. Thomas died at Chicago, Ill., on November 10, aged 55 years. His associates testify appreciatively to the "loyalty, integrity and unswerving devotion to honorable policy in business" which their dead leader manifested, and, with his family, testify to the great respect and love in which Mr. Thomas was held.

Mrs. Maria A. Bell, passed peacefully from this life at her home in Waynesville, Ill., on July 22, 1906, in her 81st year. She was all her life an earnest worker in the cause of her Master, and her home was a Bethel where praise and prayer were a daily custom and delight. It was her joy that she lived to see her four children converted and united with the church of God.

Mrs. Mary Adams Sharick died at Seattle, Wash., March 12, 1906, aged 83 years. A "shut-in" for three years—a crippled invalid for sixteen years, she spent every moment of her waking hours when freedom from suffering would permit, in active work for somebody, piecing with her own tired hands nearly twenty quilts for a nearby orphan asylum. Her last words were, "I have just been called—ask that I may be found worthy to enter into the glorious kingdom."

Mrs. Eunice W. Lewis entered into rest on July 8, in Woodville, Miss., in her 94th year. A native of New England, she had, during her married life of 70 years, impressed herself for good upon the history of Woodville. Identified with the Methodist Church, she was a leader in its many interests, and the halo of Christian love surrounded her daily life. "Grandma Lewis," as she was known far and wide, has laid down her eventful and honorable life on earth; but she has taken it up in the glorified presence of God.

Duffy's Apple Juice

Contains the Juice of Two Ripe Apples

LIBERAL OFFER TO THE CLERGY

In order to introduce the greatest temperance beverage to temperance people the AMERICAN FRUIT PRODUCT COMPANY has decided on a very liberal plan, and will send to every regularly ordained minister of the Gospel who is now pastor of a congregation, a bottle of DUFFY'S 1842 APPLE JUICE, which is the pure juice of the apple.

It is non-alcoholic, sterilized and effervescent, and free from all preservatives.

It is a food and tonic for the entire family, and if used regularly no medicine will be required as it drives the uric acid and impurities out of the blood, and keeps the system in a healthy condition.

Simply write to the AMERICAN FRUIT PRODUCT COMPANY WHITE STREET ROCHESTER, N. Y., state name of church you are pastor of, and a full size bottle of DUFFY'S APPLE JUICE will be sent you free, express prepaid.

We do this knowing that every minister of the Gospel is anxious to find a pure, wholesome, non-intoxicant non-alcoholic beverage which he can safely recommend to the members of his congregation.

I Am the Paint Man

2 Full Gallons Free to Try—6 Months Time to Pay

I Guarantee Freight Charges.

O. L. Chase
St. Louis, Mo.

I AM the paint man.

I have a new way of manufacturing and selling paints. It's unique—it's better. It revolutionized the paint business of this country last year.

Before my plan was invented paint was sold in two ways — either ready-mixed or the ingredients were bought and mixed by the painter. Ready-mixed paint settles on the shelves, forming a sediment at the bottom of the can. The chemical action in ready-mixed paint, when standing in oil, eats the life out of the oil. The oil is the very life of all paints.

Paint made by the painter cannot be properly made on account of lack of the heavy mixing machine.

My paint is unlike any other paint in the world. It is ready to use, but not ready-mixed.

My paint is made to order after each order is received, packed in hermetically sealed cans with the very day it is made stamped on each can by my factory inspector.

I ship my thick pigment, which is double strength, freshly ground, in separate cans, and in another can, I ship the pure, old process Linseed Oil—the kind you used to buy years ago. Any child can stir them together.

I sell my paint direct from my factory to user you pay no dealer or middleman profits.

My $100.00 Cash Guarantee

I guarantee, under $100 Cash Forfeit, that the paint I am offering you does not contain water, benzine, whiting, or barytes—and that my Oilo is pure, old-fashioned linseed oil and contains absolutely no foreign substance whatever.

I guarantee the freight on six gallons or over.

My paint is so good that I make this wonderfully fair test offer:

When you receive your shipment of paint, you can use two full gallons—that will cover 600 square feet of wall—two coats.

If, after you have used that much of my paint, you are not perfectly satisfied with it in every detail, you can return the remainder of your order and the two gallons will not cost you one penny.

No other paint manufacturer ever made such a liberal offer.

It is because I manufacture the finest paint, put up in the best way, that I can make this offer.

I go even further. I sell all of my paint on six months' time, if desired.

This gives you an opportunity to paint your buildings when they need it, and pay for the paint at your convenience.

Back of my paint stands my Eight-Year officially signed, iron-clad Guarantee.

For further particulars regarding my plan of selling, and complete color card of all colors, send a postal to O. L. Chase, St. Louis, Mo. I will send my paint book—the most complete book of its kind ever published—absolutely free. Also my instruction book entitled "This Little Book Tells How to Paint" and copy of my 8-year guarantee.

NOTE—My 8 Year Guarantee Backed by $50,000 Bond.

"Stunted lamp-light"—smoky chimney, poor draught, imperfect fit, cracking chimney, clouded glass—why do people put up with this when good lamp-light is the best light to read by?

I make and put my name—MACBETH—on lamp-chimneys that are clear as crystal, never break from heat, and fit perfectly.

MACBETH lamp-chimneys give lamps new life.

Let me send you my Index to tell you how to get the right chimney for your lamp; it's free.

A Deserving Work for Sailors

San Francisco's work for sailors, under the auspices of the Mariner's Church, has been established for forty-eight years. During that time no less than 5,500 souls have been brought to confess Christ as their Saviour, a glorious record of spiritual life-saving. During the disaster of last April, their house of worship was burned to the ground, leaving them, as their worthy pastor, the Rev. J. Roswell, writes, "stranded and helpless." They are hoping to erect a new building, partly for mission work, and partly for renting purposes which will add to their income. Rev. Mr. Roswell will be glad to answer any communication addressed to him by those who may be interested.

WHITE BRONZE MONUMENTS

"The White Bronze Soldiers' Monument at the Presidio looks as majestic as ever—without a blemish, while all around the large marble and granite monuments, flat, cracked and broken."

R. S. STALL
San Francisco

is beautiful in appearance and unequaled for durability. It will not stain, crack or crumble. It is not a substitute for marble and granite, but a decided improvement—at a lower price.

And thus it happens that in ...a town there are children of God of ...ent parties, who will not so much as ...ogether in the same prayer-meetings, and the prayer of the Lord Jesus receives no "Amen" from their hearts, "That they all may be one, as thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they also may be one in us; that the world may believe that thou has sent me" (John 17: 21).

It was Abraham who first regarded contention as intolerable. He "said unto Lot, Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herdmen and thy herdmen, for we be brethren."

An Active Pastor's New Field

THE Wesleyan Academy at Wilbraham, Mass., one of the old and esteemed institutions of Methodism in New England, is to have a new principal in the person of the Rev. Charles M. Melden, D.D., at present pastor of the most important church in the New England Southern Conference. Dr. Melden, in addition to his varied experiences as a clergyman, is exceptionally qualified for his future work by having, for some years, successfully acted as the principal of Clark University, Atlanta, Ga. The four years of his Providence pastorate have been productive of much progress in the church he served, and he has come to be regarded as a moving spirit in the religious life of the city. Before the departure, in April, of Dr. Melden and his family, his people are planning an appropriate celebration of the clearing off of their debt under his ministry.

A BRAINY CHILD

Wise Mother Proves the Value of Grape-Nuts in Rearing Children.

There is no surer test of real knowledge than the personal test; observation with our own eyes and other senses.

"Having been raised to believe that one could not exist without meat, hot biscuit and coffee for breakfast, I was skeptical at first about the value of Grape-Nuts.

But our little girl as well as myself had indigestion all the time and I could not understand why.

"About five years ago, attracted by the advertisements concerning Grape-Nuts, I decided to try some to see whether it would afford nourishment like meat, etc. I was worried about our little girl.

"In a short time after changing from heavy food at breakfast and supper to Grape-Nuts, she had no more headache, put on flesh and now, after five years of this way of living, at the age of ten she is 4 feet high, weighs 81 lbs., is in the 5th grade and in every way is a fine brainy child.

"Our boy 5 years old, has been raised on Grape-Nuts, eats it for two meals each day, is very large for his age and fine looking." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Be One (1) P. W. Underfeed Furnace
One (1) Ton Cheapest Black Coal

(A DOCTOR'S PRESCRIPTION GUARANTEED AS A SURE CURE FOR COLD HOUSES AND BIG COAL BILLS)

IN the economy of days, February, the shortest month of the twelve, is the longest on the coal pile. In the economy of heating equipment, not only in February, but all other months—nothing compares with the Underfeed Furnace in marvelously low cost of maintenance. Wherever Jack Frost leaves his autograph, it is a matter of real live news to know that the

Peck-Williamson Underfeed Furnace
Saves 1-2 to 2-3 on Coal Bills

It is upon the cornerstone of a wealth of testimony to this saving truth that we have built and are operating the largest furnace plant in the world. Every Underfeed Furnace sold has been in effect a first-class salesman for us. The Underfeed, with all the fire on top, consumes smoke and gases, wasted in all other furnaces, and gets as much heat out of cheap slack and low grade coal as highest grade anthracite will yield. The difference in coal represents net profit to you.

Dr. Bert M. Bristol, of Groton, Mass., prescribes the UNDERFEED as a sure cure for COLD houses and BIG coal bills. He writes:

"The UNDERFEED Furnace which you installed for me is heating my ten room house to my entire satisfaction at a saving of one-half on the old furnace. Besides that, the old furnace never thoroughly heated the house. As near as I can figure $60.00 worth of pea coal will run me all winter when previously I used to pay $125.00 to $140.00 for my winter's coal supply. One thing that has especially pleased me is the entire absence of gas in the house. There is no way that you can possibly have the dampers or drafts and throw gas through the house, as it seems to be consumed when it comes to the surface of the coal. There is no other furnace that I have ever seen that will keep up with it in this respect. Another thing that has especially pleased me is the way it holds fire. Several times last winter in the coldest weather I left it for 36 hours and found it all right on my return. Those in the house only adjusted the dampers as necessary."

Illustration shows how coal is forced up under fire—which burns on top. Our Underfeed Booklet, which fully describes it will, with fac-simile testimonials, be gladly sent YOU. Heating plans and services of our Engineering Department are at your command—FREE. Write to-day, giving name of local dealer with whom you prefer to deal.

SOMETHING'S HAPPENED! SOMETHING MISSING SOMETHING KILLED!

READERS LISTEN SHARP, DON'T MISS—BEST THING EVER HAPPENED!
Hundred years coming, here at last full grown—so startling will say it's impossible—but wait, don't worry. LADIES, THERE'S NO MORE WASH DAY! IT'S DEAD! LAID AWAY! WIPED OUT FOREVER.

Washing machine swallows wash boards.

The world's watched for the man to cut wash day in two. He lives—taken more than half—left only minutes—cut so much wash day's all over, changed—there's new way cleaning clothes—different from anything known—new principles, ideas, methods, NEW EVERYTHING. Wonderful, but true, family washing cleaned with no more work than getting a simple meal, less time—no rubbing, squeezing, pounding, packing, pressing, no injury—no drudgery—that's past. Good-by wash boards, washing machines, laundries—throw them away—the EASY WAY is here to bless humanity. Women have prayed for death of wash day—for clean clothes without rubbing—ruining health, looks—when they could wash, get dinner, see friends, indulge in recreation without fatigue—when women thought no more of washing clothes than to get a simple meal. That glorious day has come. The world's full wash boards, so-called washing machines, yet wash day same as ever—still long, dreary day—no easier, no shorter, no better. Use wash board or washing machine, it's drudgery, long hours, hard work—backache—a day no woman forgets. Invention that killed wash day named EASY WAY—name tells whole story—easy on clothes—easy used—kept clean—handled—easy on women—makes washing easy—easy to buy and sell. Not called a machine—powers inside concealed—caution the way it gets dirt—has awful appetite for dirt—increases more it gets—goes after all the dirt in all the clothes at same time—little, but mighty—silent, but powerful—uses no spirits, yet works in darkness. OPERATED ON STOVE—move knob occasionally—that's all—scarcely anything to do but wait between batches—child can do it. All iron and steel—always ready—sets away on shelf. Entirely unlike old methods. Verily, wash day is dead—EASY WAY settled that—woman's joy, satisfaction, their God-send. Less than an hour cleans washing which before took all day—cleans all clothes, finest laces, curtains, etc., in about one-tenth time without rubbing, squeezing, packing, pressing—without chemicals to injure goods. Saves 52 days drudgery yearly—makes woman's hardest work easiest household duty—saves clothes, labor, fuel, health, looks. Surprises all—sounds strange, is strange, but listen, it's no experiment, going on daily. You can do it.

Throw them away.

Blessing the Inventor.

MRS. FRITTER, Norway, writes: "With EASY WAY I clean a week's washing in less than an hour without rubbing." W. BROWN, Ohio, writes: "Wash day now wash hour—EASY WAY does the work with perfect success." J. H. BARRETT, Ark., after ordering 38 Easy Ways, says: "I don't understand why it does the work, but it does. You have the grandest invention I ever heard of. People are skeptical: have to be shown." J.W.MYERS, Ga., says: "Find check to cover one dozen 'Easy Ways.' Easy Way greatest invention for womanhood, forever abolishing miserable wash day. Saves me turning old washer for hours. I am ready to have old washer accompany all others to the Dump. Sells itself." I. BECK, Ga., writes:—"Enclose order. Find 'Easy Way' as represented. Worked 4 days and have 15 orders." J. T. PEAY, N. C., says:—"Been out 2 days—sold 1 dozen, for which enclose order. Everybody is carried away that sees it work." CHAS. BOWLES, O., writes: "Where tried have given general satisfaction." Guaranteed, everything proven, old house, responsible, capital $100,000.00. PRICE, ONLY $5.00 COMPLETE, ready to use—sent to any address. Not sold in Stores.

BEST EVER HAPPENED FOR AGENTS, SALESMEN,
MANAGERS—MEN OR WOMEN—at home or traveling, all or part time—showing—taking orders—appointing agents. "EASY WAY" new. Nothing like it. Demand world wide—agents reaping harvests of dollars. When operated people stop, look, listen, crowd, push, squeeze, miss engagements, get excited—watch it as though a miracle occurred. To see—to buy. Write to-day for Special Agents Plan. World unsupplied. Act quick.

JAMIESON, FAUSSET & BROWN'S BIBLE COMMENTARY (Two Vols.)

By Robert Jamieson, D.D., St. Paul's, Glasgow; Rev. A. R. Fausset, A.M., St. Cuthbert's, York; and David Brown, D.D., Professor of Theology, Aberdeen.

A complete commentary—critical, explanatory and practical—on the Old and New Testaments, 1880 pages. Former Price, $9.00. The body of the work consists of notes that are concise, learned, free from verbiage and easily understood, that elucidate and explain difficult passages of Scripture, or whose import is not readily apprehended. Far in advance of the older works now in use, it is also the most practical, suggestive and scientific.

Rev. J. H. Vincent, Bishop M. E. Church: "It deserves a place on the table of every Bible student."

CRITICAL AND EXPOSITORY BIBLE CYCLOPÆDIA

By Rev. A. R. Fausset, A.M., joint author of the Jamieson, Fausset & Brown Bible Commentary. 750 three-column pages; 600 illustrations. Regular Price, $5.00.

This great work is the result of seven years of labor by the author, contains three thousand seven hundred articles and presents a completeness, conciseness and thoroughness such as to make it a perfect Bible Cyclopædia. It sets forth briefly and suggestively those doctrinal and experimental truths which are contained in the Written Word itself.

The late Rev. Dr. T. De Witt Talmage: "It is in advance of all books in that line—unique, learned, accurate and valuable."

THE COMPLETE WORKS OF FLAVIUS JOSEPHUS

The celebrated Jewish Historian, translated from the Original Greek by William Whitson, A.M. Nearly 1000 pages. Former Price, $4.00.

In this great work is contained the History and Antiquities of the Jews, Destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; also Dissertations concerning Jesus Christ, John the Baptist, James the Just, and the sacrifice of Isaac.

ILLUSTRATED HISTORY OF THE BIBLE

By Rev. John Kitto, D.D., F.S.A. It contains 735 double-column pages, 220 engravings. Former Price, $4.50.

No modern writer has contributed more largely to enrich the biblical literature of our time, or to clothe with a fresh and living interest the main personages and incidents in Bible History than John Kitto in this magnificent work. Deeply interesting and instructive, and abounding in striking pictorial illustrations, it should have a place in every home. Over 100,000 copies of this popular work have been sold.

EDERSHEIM'S LIFE AND TIMES OF JESUS THE MESSIAH

(2 Vols.) The Authorized American Edition. By Alfred Edersheim, M.A., Oxon., D.D., Lecturer Oxford University.

Former Price, $6.00. Royal 8vo. 1,524 pages, handsomely bound in silk cloth. Gives a full account of the society, life and development—intellectual and religious—in Palestine, to serve as a frame and background for the picture of Christ. The fresh study of the text of the Gospels makes the book a historical commentary on the four Gospels.

The Sunday School Times recommends it: "It is positively refreshing to read a life of the Saviour which is critical in the best and truest sense of the word, and is biblical at the same time."

CONCISE CYCLOPÆDIA OF RELIGIOUS KNOWLEDGE

Biblical, Biographical, Theological, Historical, Geographical and Practical. By Rev. E. B. Ford, D.D., assisted by a brilliant galaxy of Biblical Scholars and Divines. 985 pages, beautifully illustrated. Regular Price, $3.50.

To the seekers after knowledge this work will prove a surprising storehouse of information regarding Church History, Bible History, Bible Names, Places, Customs, Doctrines, Creeds, Denominations, the Early Church, Story of the Reformation, the various Young People's Societies, Theologians, Scholars, Cathedrals, Churches.

Christian Endeavor World, Boston: "Knowledge is here available for which many have not known just where to turn."

SMITH'S DICTIONARY OF THE BIBLE

Edited by William Smith, LL.D., Classical Examiner of University of London. It formerly sold for $4.50.

Contains 1,024 large octavo pages finely illustrated. An indispensable aid to ministers, teachers, family, Sunday School Superintendents and Bible readers generally. This is, undoubtedly, the best work of its kind in the English language.

THE LIFE AND EPISTLES OF ST. PAUL

By the Rev. W. J. Conybeare, M.A., of Cambridge, and J. S. Howson, D.D., of Liverpool. Formerly sold for $4.50.

Contains 1,014 large octavo pages, many fine illustrations, maps, charts, etc. There is no work that can compare with this in giving a life-like picture of the great apostle and the work which he did.

CRUDEN'S COMPLETE CONCORDANCE

By Alexander Cruden, M.A. Former Price, $1.50.

Contains 756 large octavo pages, clearly printed and handsomely and strongly bound in cloth. Scripture is the best interpreter of Scripture, and next to the Bible no volume is of greater value to the Bible student than Cruden's Concordance.

THREE THOUSAND SELECTED QUOTATIONS

By Josiah Gilbert. Introduction by Chas. S. Robinson, D.D. 681 pages. Former Price, $2.00.

Burning words of brilliant writers from the literature of all ages, with complete index of authors and subjects. Undenominational and evangelical. Preachers, Teachers and Bible students will be charmed with these beautiful utterances, which clearly and forcibly express or apply some religious truth.

Take Notice! We will take back any or all books that are not satisfactory in ten days after examination, and will return money, deducting only the return freight or express charges. This marvelous offer is limited, and money will be returned if the books are exhausted and we cannot fill your order. As to our responsibility, we refer to any commercial agency. Established 1866. Mention The Christian Herald when you order.

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but as evidence of genuineness and good faith. Where an answer by mail is desired, ten cents in postage stamps must be forwarded by the writers, with full address.

Reader, Sioux Falls. Who was the first Colonial Governor of Rhode Island?

William Coddington, Governor of Portsmouth. He took office March 1, 1630. The several towns or districts had their own governors at first. About 1654, the four towns united and elected Nicholas Easton as President under the patent. The first governor under the royal charter was Benedict Arnold, not to be confused with the general of the Revolution.

S. M. T., Lakewood, N. J. Is it true, as I heard a Baptist minister assert recently, that there never was such a person as Abraham? Could he have been a fictitious character?

It is rather late to make such an assertion, and it is almost as difficult to prove the reality of Abraham's character as it is for your friend to prove his assertion. All the facts that we know and the inferences we are entitled to draw from history tend to confirm the Biblical narrative. The recently discovered tablets mention certain kings that are enumerated in the fourteenth chapter of Genesis which such men as your friend were loudly declaring a few years ago were fictitious, and letters from those kings have been found. It would not surprise us if, as the work of deciphering the tablets proceeds, the name of Abraham should be found and his existence proved beyond a doubt.

A. B., Madison, N. Y. Why is the short deck at the front of a ship called the forecastle?

During the middle ages, and down to the end of the seventeenth century, this part of the ship was built higher by a deck or two than the main part, and used as the station for archers and crossbowmen in a sea fight, hence the name. Sometimes it had wooden turrets, giving it much the appearance of a castle.

J. B. McG., Maine, N. Y. Your answer about the unpardonable sin seems to me incorrect. The Pharisees made no charge against the Holy Spirit.

If you will read the context of the passage relating to it (Matt. 12 : 24-32), you will see the grounds on which our answer was based. We believe that the sin is the attributing to devilish power the work done by the Holy Spirit. We are unable in the face of the written words to arrive at any other conclusion, and we have the support of some of the most learned scholars.

A. J. B., New York City. Are not the paintings of God and Christ that we see in art galleries and some churches direct violations of the second commandment?

It has long been a subject of debate what the second commandment forbids. The common view is that it forbade the Hebrews making a graven image, a sculpture, or representation for the purpose of worship; but that it did not forbid them making such things for any other purpose. In proof of this we are reminded that Moses made cherubim to be placed on the ark, also that later he made a brazen serpent. On the other hand, some scholars say that the commandment forbade painting or sculpture for any purpose, and, in support of the view, they point out that Jews have excelled as musicians, poets, and orators, but they have not produced great sculptors or painters. The paintings of God are objectionable, because they indicate a crude idea of the infinite and all-pervading Spirit.

D. D., Edgeley, N. Dak.; Constant Reader, Jackson, Pa., and others. Was Jesus anointed more than once? If not, which of the evangelists gives the correct account of the incident?

This question has long been a matter of dispute. Some authorities believe that there were three anointings, but modern scholars think there were only two. Very few believe that there was only one. The general opinion is that Luke's account is of a totally different incident from that described by the other three. Luke places the incident in Galilee; the others at Bethany, near Jerusalem. Luke specifies a sinful woman, while John says it was Mary, the sister of Martha. Simon in Luke's account is represented as a Pharisee, and wonders that Jesus let the woman touch him. In the other accounts Simon is a leper, to whom Christ's words given in Luke would not apply, nor would there be surprise at Mary's touching him. In Luke's account the motive is gratitude and love, while in the others it is a foresight of Christ's burial. The two incidents appear for these and other reasons to be different, and the three evangelists are practically in accord, while Luke gives an entirely different account relating to a different incident.

S. Y., Freeport, Ill. Were the days of creation each a revolution of the earth on the solar orbit? If so, what was the length of each? Did the animals of the fifth day perish before man was made on the sixth day?

If the day represented a revolution of the earth around the sun, it would necessarily be a year in length, unless the earth traveled at a different rate then from now. There is no statement as to the disappearance of the animals. We cannot add to the record which describes the creation of animals as having taken place on specified days. Of the Biblical account nothing more can be said than is stated there. There has been no supplementary account of details.

W. E. J., Lebanon, Tenn. 1. When was the Tehuantepec Railroad completed, by whom was it built, and what is its length? 2. Will it be a serious competitor with the Panama Canal?

A railroad across the Isthmus of Tehuantepec was completed by the Mexican Government in 1894, and recently large sums have been expended upon it in order to bring it up to the needs of a great traffic. The least width of the Isthmus from Coalzacoalcos to the head of the Sago Superior is 120 miles. This railroad will probably not greatly affect the traffic of the Panama Canal.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE
WASHINGTON

February 1, 1907.

Dear Doctor Klopsch:

The President has asked me to say to you that he is much interested in your work to raise funds for the sufferers by the present dreadful famine in China. He hopes that you will meet the same success that you have had in similar appeals to the humanity and liberality of our people.

As a contribution to the fund he has handed me his check for $100, which I enclose, together with a similar check of my own. With best wishes, I am,

Very sincerely yours,

The Late Henry Martyn Field

It was with a feeling of profound regre that the Christian world heard of th death last month, of Rev. Henry Martyn Field, minister, editor and author He belonged to the famous Field family o Massachusetts, his brothers being Davi Dudley Field, law reformer; Cyrus W Field, who laid the Atlantic cable, and Judge Stephen Field, who sat on the bench of the Supreme Court of the United State for thirty-four and a-half years. He wa born in Stockbridge, Mass., in 1822, and always considered it his home, though his literary and religious work took him fo years to other parts of the country and t Europe. He was in Ireland during the famine and in Paris during the Revolution of 1884.

After holding pastorates in St. Louis, and Springfield, Mass., he came to New York, in 1854, and became editor of the Evangelist, a position he held for forty-four years. He was a clergyman of the Presbyterian Church, but his friends and readers were numbered among the members of all denominations. He traveled much, and his published works on European and Asiatic countries are considered as standard, and make a long list. He wrote the lives of Cyrus and David Field, and it was his ambition to write some time the life of Judge Field. He was a man of quiet tastes, and made his fame purely on the merit of his literary work.

The Busy Life of a Missionary, and the Founding of a Model Mission Station in the African Wilderness

HEN David Livingstone, the great missionary and pioneer explorer in Africa, made his long journey from nti to Loanda, in Angola, Portuguese Africa, in 1858, his track through hen unknown territory ran back of the very spot e now stands the mission station of the Methodist opal Mission. This station is near to the remark- Pungo Andongo range of conglomerate rocks ibed by Livingstone. He recorded in his journal when passing through egion he was favorably ssed with the country the intelligence of the le. He also recorded elief that "the Church d would yet bear fruit g them."

r station, which is called e natives Quiongoa (or gua), is on an eminence y 3,000 feet above the in the midst of a valley mountains in view about niles away in every di- on. The aspect of the try differs greatly accord- o the time of year. Jan- is the pleasantest time, e interval between the and latter rains, when emperature is moderate agreeable, the atmo- re clear, the hills and ys fresh and green, and sunsets in the evening ns of glory. At other s it is intensely hot, or he morning and evening tively chilly; the vege- n may be rank and over- rn; or again, all the try-side brown and bare, ven black, where it has swept by grass fires, and the atmosphere full of ers and smoke. Strong, dry, dust-laden winds may ail without intermission nearly all day; or the y mist may settle over everything in the night and until nearly noon.

he missionaries here are entirely among the natives, live in small villages scattered all over the country, y of them in view from the station. There are no te people within a radius of fourteen miles, except Portuguese planter, a convict and rum distiller.

Twice a month mail comes from the outside world, six weeks old, brought by a native courier to the little town and government headquarters, fourteen miles away among the conglomerate rocks, where the missionaries then have to send to get their letters and papers.

Native Boys at Work in the Mission Printing House

Much of the time the mission station has been manned by two young men alone, who have gone a year at a time without seeing the face of a white woman, feeling keenly at times the loneliness and isolation and the trials incident to their work, the most disheartening by far being the occasional failure of character on the part of their converts. They are always busy from early morning till night in a bewildering and exacting variety of labors, unless when laid aside with the fever, which no one altogether escapes, and to which some succumb.

At night they go to sleep to the hooting of strange night birds, the howling of hyenas or jackals, or the near or distant din of tomtoms accompanying the weird wailing or singing of natives at a heathen-ish dance. As one approaches the mission station, he may distinguish among the buildings the chapel surmounted by the cross; the schoolhouse, with its benches, blackboard, maps, books and slates; the missionary residence, two-storied and surrounded by verandas; the storehouse; the printing office, where native boys are setting type and printing leaflets and tracts; and the workshop and and sawpit, where others may be busy sawing logs or working up material.

These buildings are all substantial, and have been built by the missionaries themselves, without skilled help. This has involved quarrying stone in the mountain, adobe making, mason work, hunting of hard insect-proof timber in distant and almost inaccessible places, camping out in the bush months at a time, felling, hauling with bullocks, sawing up the logs by hand, and training the natives as helpers — a process which makes the building of a station the toil of years.

Our work has developed an industrial school of boys, bound of their own free will to the mission by written contract for a term of years, to work for just their food and clothes, go to school and learn a trade, and later be furnished with such tools as they should need to follow the trade they had learned. Work of this kind commands a respect from the natives that teaching and preaching alone would not do; and the confidence that is shown when boys or their parents come, as they now do, and beg for entry into such a department, has been won only after a long period of suspicion, aloofness, and even reproach.

Our day school is held five days a week in the afternoon, and the teaching is in both the native Kimbundu

The Midian Exile

TEXT:—Exodus 2: 15: "But Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh, and dwelt in the land of Midian"

HUNGER and hardship prove torture to all men who endure them, yet they entail the greatest suffering when they assail men who have once dwelt in the palaces of luxury. It is harder to be a pauper after one has once been a silk-robed prince, than it is to be a pauper when one has always been accustomed to wear rags. Moses would not have felt the hot, blistering sands of the desert as he did, nor would his parched lips nor his blistered tongue have been so distressing, if his desert journey, when he was fleeing away from Egypt to the land of Midian, near to old Mount Sinai, had been taken by a man who had never been anything else but a Hebrew slave. Moses, it is true, had been born of a slave, but he had been accustomed to luxury through the adoption by which he became the son of Pharaoh's daughter. The finest garments crowded his wardrobe. The most costly viands were in his larder. The richest of palaces were his domicile. The most learned sages conversant with all Egyptian lore were his teachers. The softest of couches were his resting-places. All that wealth and love could give were lavished upon him as a child, a boy, and a man. Now, as a handsome prince, and as one of the keenest intellects of the world, as an epicurean, who looked upon the rarest luxuries of life as his necessities, we suddenly find him a hunted fugitive, fleeing from his foster-mother's home with a price upon his head. He is charged with the crime of murder. But worse than that, his crime is aggravated by the fact that the murdered man was an Egyptian, who was cruelly abusing one of the Hebrew slaves. In other words, Moses was hated as the champion of an alien race—that race a race of slaves. As an Egyptian prince, he had dared stand up and espouse the cause and the rights of the Hebrew slaves, who were the unpaid laborers of the kingdom of the Pharaohs.

A Period of Retirement

I want to dwell this morning on the blessings which came to Moses' life in his forty long years of exile in the land of the Midianites. I want to speak about the blessings which came to Moses in mid-life. The period he spent in Midian extended from the age of forty to fifty, and from fifty to sixty, and from sixty to seventy, and from seventy to eighty. These two score years of Moses' life were, in some respects, the most momentous of all Moses' career. Moses spent his first forty years as a beloved prince in Pharaoh's palaces. The second forty years he lived in the land of the Midianites. The third forty years of his life he spent in the wilderness with the Hebrews, leading them from the scene of Egyptian enslavement to the crystal gates of the Jordan. It is about the second epoch of Moses' life that I would speak to-day.

In the first place, God had a purpose in permitting Moses to be driven into exile. It was to teach him that God's thoughts are not as man's thoughts, nor God's ways as man's ways. The great Jehovah seemed to say to the future emancipator of the Hebrew race: "My son, I want to take you away from the Palaces of Memphis and the Temple of Karnak and all the repulsive, heathen worship of the Egyptians. I want you to be alone with me out in the desert sands. I want to talk with you and have you talk with me. I want you to learn about the God of Abraham and Isaac and Jacob.

A Time of Education

Was this not a very wise plan? Where in all the world was the abomination of heathen worship made more attractive than in old Egypt? When we stand amid the ruins of Memphis, we find there that the sacred deity was worshiped in the form of a bull. These bulls were allowed to live for twenty years. Then they were put to death, and their bodies embalmed like those of kings. Then, with great ceremony, their bodies were carried to magnificent tombs, which tombs thereafter were looked upon as sacred shrines. Herodotus, the Greek historian, tells us that during the reign of Rameses II., the funeral of one of the bulls cost over $50,000. When you estimate that a penny in olden times would hire a laborer for a whole day, that funeral cost in modern money at least one-half million of dollars. At Sakkara the tombs for these sacred bulls were cut out of the solid rock one-quarter of a mile long. The sarcophagi, or huge coffins, in which the embalmed bodies of these bulls were placed, were cut out of one monster stone thirteen feet long, seven feet wide and eleven feet high.

Then, what beautiful temples were erected for the worship of these Egyptian animals. Truly, like Paul standing on Mars' Hill, when we see these huge structures we can exclaim, "Ye men of old Egypt, I perceive that in all things ye are too superstitious!" Why, the "Great Hall of Pillars" at Karnak looks as though the pillars had been hewed out of the very centre of the earth and set up in long rows for the dome of the heavens to rest upon, so massive are they. Each one of those columns is covered with the most exquisite carvings. So infinite are these carvings that, like a prairie full of wild flowers, their individual beauties are lost in the multitude of the wonders. Do you wonder, amid the pernicious influences of such heathen worship, that God said to Moses, the adopted son of Pharaoh's daughter, "Come, my child, come to Midian lands. Come into the quietude of a desert exile. Come and learn of me and hear the duty required of thee." Now, my friends, just as Moses had his Midian exile to learn of God's thoughts and God's ways, we as God's children should have our Midian exiles.

Sympathy Learned by Suffering

God had another purpose in arranging the events which culminated in driving forth Moses from Pharaoh's palace. The adopted son of Pharaoh's daughter had to be taught by bitter experience what it was to suffer injustice, before he was fitted to be the emancipator of a Hebrew race groaning and suffering amid the tortures of Egyptian slavery. He had to lift to his lips the chalice of woe filled with his own scalding tears, and drink the cup of sorrow to the dregs, before he was fitted to wipe away the tears from the eyes of his fellow men. No man can truly sympathize with a sick man, unless he has first been sick himself. No man can truly sympathize with the poor, unless, like John Howard Payne, he has not a place to call his home. Or, unless in the winter night, he has gone to the rooms of a tenement where there was no fire in the cold stove because the coal-bin was empty. Or into a hut where he hears his little ones crying for something to eat, and he has not a five-cent piece to buy a loaf of bread to ease the gnawings of their hunger. Ah, yes, Moses in that Midian exile, by bitter experience, learned only too well the injustice which the Hebrew people in Egyptian slavery had to suffer! Let us study for a little while the bringing up of this marvelous boy of the East.

Life's Turning Point

He was developed in his early days as some of us were by our parents, as a hothouse plant. No rough, sharp wind was allowed to touch him. He breathed no bad, vitiated air. His palace bedroom overlooked the wonderful River Nile. There, during the long, hot months, he saw the princes and princesses lounging in their boats, being pulled along by the slaves. Life seemed to be made up for the most part of music and dancing and merrymaking. The palace grounds in which the lad Moses used to play were a dream of beauty. Because he was well clothed, all people were well clothed. Because he was kindly treated, all people if they behave themselves are kindly treated. But one day he was disillusioned.

He was walking again by the river Nile. Now, instead of being a child he was a man in middle life, or about forty years old. While he was walking along the river bank, he saw an Egyptian overseer begin to abuse one of the slaves. Moses was noted for his meekness, but he raised his staff and smote the Egyptian and killed him in his tracks. Then what happened? Moses ceased to be a prince. As a fugitive slave he was tracked from place to place. As a Hebrew fugitive, he had to flee death as a rabbit runs from the baying of the hounds. By bitter personal experience he learned only too well what the poor Hebrews had to suffer under the agonizing strokes of the Egyptian slave masters. My friends, did you ever stop to think that God has sent you bitter troubles in order to make you sympathize with those who are troubled in life? Did you ever stop to think that God has taken away your little child in order that you might become a Gospel emancipator for the sufferings of your fellow men? The lands of Midian to which you go are the sacred where man comes in contact with God, but also the sympathetic heart of man learns to throb in with the suffering hearts of his enslaved brothers sisters down in far-off Egypt.

Disciplined for Leadership

It is only when a man like Paul has been the of sinners that he knows how to lead others int Gospel peace. It is only when a woman has sto the casket of a dear husband that she is fully equ to carry a comforting message to the newly-wid heart. The story is told that many years ago Henry of England, in disguise, was arrested by the guards as a thief for prowling around his p grounds, and carried off to jail at Poultry-Com There he stayed all the night long in his damp shivering and hungry. No sooner was the king ated than he commanded that all the prisone Compter should in future have a fire and food to Thus is it with most of us. God locks us in j order that we may sympathize with the world's pr ers. He lays us upon beds of sickness in order to us to help the sick. He exiles us in far-off Midian in order that our hearts of love might beat in symp with the suffering hearts of our fellow men.

But there was still another reason why God Moses up in his Midian exile. It was to teach future emancipator of the Hebrew race the great sons of patience. No man is fit to be a true leade men unless he can keep his temper under control be willing to wait. "Patience is but lying-to," said Beecher, "and riding out the gale." But on the hardest tasks on earth is to be willing to lie-to do nothing. Thus God fitted Moses for his great lea ship over the Hebrews by teaching him the lesson patience down in far-off Midian lands. He m Moses just learn to wait. One year passes, then years, then five years, then ten years, then tw years, then thirty years, and then forty years. All time Moses was brooding over the injustices which being perpetrated upon his people. But not u score years had passed did God say to Moses, "My go to Egypt and I will be with thee. Go up an will make thee an emancipator for an enslaved ra Oh, how some of us are chafing at the fact that Go keeping us in Midian exiles of inactivity. We wan do something to aid our fellow men. But God is say to us as he spake to Moses: "My child! be pati Thou cans't never be a liberator of thy fellow men less thou dost first learn to govern thyself. Thou m abide here in far-off Midian until thou dost learn truth." Tell me, my friend, is not the greatest obst retarding thee from mighty usefulness the fact that have never learned to govern yourself, you have ne learned to wait when it is best to wait?

Delays not Denial

Buffon, the great French preacher, once said: "Ne think that God's delays are like God's denials. H on! Hold on! Hold on! Patience is geniu It is resting our faith on Christ. It is the divine fa which says: "Though all things may seem to go agai me for the time being, yet God is making all thi ultimately work together for good, and therefore can afford to wait, just to wait for his dear sa There is an infinite lot of Christian philosophy to learned in these quaint words of the Hoosier poet. T more I study them, the more God speaks and teac me the lessons of patience which he spake to Moses his Midian exile.

It ain't no use to grumble and complain,
It's just as cheap and easy to rejoice.
When God sorts out the weather and sends rain,
W'y rain's my choice.

In this existence dry and wet
Will overtake the best of men,
Some little skift o' clouds 'll shet
The sun off now and then;
There ain't no sense as I can see,
Immortals sich as you and me,
A-faultin' Nature's wise intents,
And lockin' horns with Providence.

But have most of us learned the Christian lessons patience? Like James Whitcomb Riley, can we thar God for the rain as well as the sunshine? When thin

The "Grand Old Man" of Foreign Missions

Rev. J. G. Paton Dead at the Age of Eighty-Two—
A Marvelous Career

READERS of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD throughout the world will grieve to learn of the death of the Rev. John Paton, D.D., the veteran missionary, who for many years enjoyed the distinction of having given a longer term of continuous service in a foreign field than any other missionary of his day and generation. Dr. Paton passed away at his home in Glenew, Melbourne, Australia, where he had lived at intervals in recent years while not actually at work among the mission stations he had established in the New Hebrides. His death was due to the infirmities of old age alone, for although, during a long lifetime of eighty-two years, he had been exposed to a thousand perils and dangers, and had come in contact with disease and suffering in many forms, he had been wonderfully preserved amid them all.

Dr. Paton, for many years past, has been a frequent contributor to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, and his letters concerning the progress of his beloved missions among the one-time cannibals of the South Pacific have been read in the pages of this journal with keen interest by hundreds of thousands. Many have stamped their approval of the work of this "grand old man of Foreign Missions" by voluntary contributions toward its support.

John Gibson Paton was born at Kirkmahoe, near Dumfries, Scotland, in 1824. After receiving an education at the Normal Seminary and University of Glasgow, he served for ten years as a city missionary in Glasgow, and in 1858 was appointed missionary to the New Hebrides islands in the South Pacific. There he had to contend with peculiar conditions. It was not the learned Hindoo, the astute Chinese, nor the Japanese, with the fixed traditions and beliefs of many centuries, with whom he had to deal. It was with a race of absolute savages, naked barbarians, murderers and cannibals; a race that delighted in deeds of darkness and blood.

It was known to be a work of personal danger, for already one of the most successful missionaries who ever preached to the heathen, the zealous and devoted John Williams, had been brutally murdered there, and stories of ghastly orgies had been brought by leaders who had visited the islands. But Paton was accustomed to hardship and danger.

"When we went there," Dr. Paton said in a speech in New York several years ago, "we found a people without civilization, without clothing, so debased that one almost despaired of their ever being able to receive the Gospel. We have now on that group of thirty islands three thousand converts. These people have family worship in their homes; they have built two large churches, which are filled to overflowing, and they have organized missionary societies to carry the Gospel to other islands. Wherever we have been able to place teachers the good effects are seen. We have the Bible translated and printed in twenty-two dialects that were unknown to the world when I entered the field. But the sacrifices were terrible. Five missionaries were murdered on the islands during the progress of the work. At one time I was the only missionary left. More than once a rifle has been pointed at me and the savage has had his finger on the trigger. Seizing the barrel I have turned it aside, and have prayed to God for protection. In every case my prayer was heard, though my life for a few moments hung by a hair. There are thousands of cannibals on those islands yet, but the work of God is going forward and victory is sure. We have only to look at our three hundred native helpers, many of whom were among the worst savages, but are now earnest, zealous teachers, to be convinced that there is no nature so savage that God's power can not change it."

The Late Dr. John G. Paton

In the course of the same address, Dr. Paton made an eloquent plea to civilized nations to refrain from sending intoxicating liquor to the people of the New Hebrides. He said that one missionary, whose life had been three times attempted, was so respected by the people that not one of them when sober would molest him, and many would go to his defense and risk their lives to protect him; but under the influence of liquor, the old savage brutality reasserted itself and his life was in constant peril. All the good that was being done was menaced by the cargoes of intoxicants which were brought to the islands and sold to the natives by merchants trading under the flags of Christian nations.

In reply to the assertion frequently made, that the inhabitants of the New Hebrides were so degraded that they had no conception of a God, and did not even worship idols, Dr. Paton once declared that, on the contrary, he found the islands full of idols. The people worshiped trees and stones, and any natural prodigy. They also had a deep veneration for their ancestors. In their burial places the trees were quaintly carved into grotesque likenesses of the deceased, and to these were paid religious honors.

A significant fact in connection with the work in the New Hebrides, is the part played by the children. Early in Dr. Paton's work, a child who had been left an orphan was brought to him to help his wife in her work. Mrs. Paton dressed her, and her appearance so impressed the other children, that they pleaded to be at the mission station too. Thus a number of children were gathered there, their confidence was won, and they were taught the truth. They loved the missionary and his wife, and when there were plots against his life, they revealed them. Dr. Paton was convinced that had it not been for the faithful affection of those children he would never have escaped the murderous schemes of the natives in those early days of trial.

Never did men encounter dangers with greater intrepidity, or undergo trial and hardship with more cheerfulness than the men who labored with Dr. Paton. The success has been marvelous. Erromanga, where John Williams was murdered, is now a Christian island, the whole population being under Christian influence, the churches well filled and the children in Christian schools. Island after island has been won for Christ, and a college for native teachers is now conducted, in which men and women, whose parents were cannibals, are being prepared for Christian service. It is a wonderful record of Gospel triumphs that have been won within the lifetime of one man.

go all right, then we are right. But when anything goes wrong, we have not learned the lessons of Gospel patience. Then we speak words which we ought not to speak, and do things which we regret all the days of our lives. Naturalists tell us that the mighty-winged eagles have sometimes been slain by the little humming birds. These smallest of birds, which you could crush in your hand, have been known to perch themselves upon the heads of the mighty kings of the air. There they have sat and pecked and pecked, until they have pecked into the brains of the eagles and tumbled their dead bodies down into the dust. Thus a quick temper, the inability to govern our anger in little things, have been known to absolutely nullify a man's influence for good. We are all right when everything is going all right. But we are all wrong when anything goes wrong. Thus God exiled Moses in Midian to teach him patience. Thus God is holding many of us in obscure positions until we learn to govern ourselves.

But again I learn that God sent Moses into his Midian exile to teach him the practicalities of life. Moses by his education was a sage, but Moses was a theorist. For many years he had been a cloud-dweller or a visionary dreamer. In all probability in the Temple of Karnak he had learned all the theories of government. But theory and fact do not always nest as twin-sisters in the same cradle. When Moses went down into the land of Midian he not only had to go to work, but he had to hire himself out to do the work of a common shepherd. Have you not heard how he helped the daughters of Reuel to water their flocks?

Some women grumble because so much of their time has to be spent in bending over the kitchen stove and in making the dresses for the children and in sweeping the floors and in making the beds. But remember that by these daily struggles of life God is teaching you that though he is willing to help you, yet he also expects you to help yourselves. Men, it seems to you that most of your lives have to be spent in the store. The butcher's bills and the baker's bills and the doctor's bills must be met. But remember God is developing you in this struggle for daily bread. He is saying to you: "Son, I have made thee after my own image. But thou must earn thy food by the sweat of thy brow. By the thorns and the weeds, I am making thee more and more to learn that the harvests come from me. I am God that giveth all, but it is by the seed-planting and the hoe thou dost bend the knee and worship at my shrine." Canst thou not thank God because Moses had to tend sheep in the land of Midian.

But I cannot close this sermon without driving home one solemn warning which should sink into every heart. After this long Midian exile, after Moses had led the children of Israel through the Red Sea, after he had given to the Hebrew people the Ten Commandments of Sinai, what did Moses do? He sinned, just as so many other men have sinned, when they have come into the temptations of their great lifework. You know the sad, sad story. Moses sinned down by the rock of Meribah, and God said to his great lawgiver: "Moses, because thou hast sinned, thou cans't not enter into the Promised Land." Oh, my friends, many of us have had our Midian exiles. Many of us are to-day in the full swing of our life's work. After God has fitted us for our task, shall we fail him? Will he refuse to let us enter the Promised Land at last because of our faithlessness? It was but for a moment, and under strong provocation, that Moses failed; but that moment excluded him from the triumph. Let us, too, watch and be vigilant, for God is strict with those who have been near him. We may miss our earthly rest, as Moses did, but may we never miss the heavenly haven to which he went when God buried his body, and whence he came to rejoice with our Lord in his triumph on the Mount of Transfiguration.

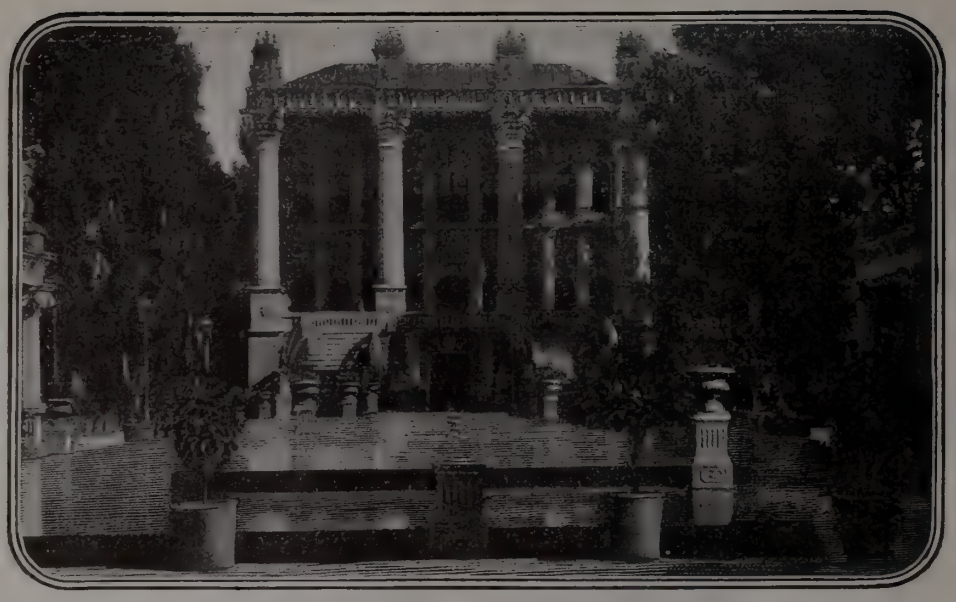
Palatial Home of a Wealthy Persian Family



A Persian Matron

VISITING TIME IN OLD SHIRAZ

A WOMAN with some influence in Persia may get an invitation to one of the al fresco moments of social life, known to Persian women as the "garden"-party of the orchards. Shiraz, in Southern Persia, five thousand feet above the sea, is the same world-old Shiraz to-day, the town built of dried mud, the town of the frowning, fortified gateway of the bazaars, of the narrow, dirty streets, and of the allurement of blue domes, minaret shafts and enameled kiosques. And it is still the Shiraz of the rose-bowers, of the fountains, of the nightingales, and of the gardens.

From the earliest beginning of spring till the middle of November, Persian women of the upper and middle classes enjoy themselves out of doors. There are miles of gardens around Shiraz, and around Ispahan in the North. As you glimpse for the first time one of these orchard-parties and the guests, you are amazed. The almond trees are in blossom. The great expanse of garden is white with narcissus and snowdrops. The ground is a deep carpet of clover. The plane trees cast shadows across groups of figures that look, however, like ghosts in first mourning. But their faces! for each lady has drawn aside her yashmak, and they are laughing their little hearts out at the professional female kessch-goo (story-teller). Troops of children join their musical little titterings to the mirth, and the servants are laughing too. The nightingales are singing on the branches of roses, in the trees of roses, in the hearts of roses, and it all seems a paradise of dreams. What a contrast to the waving, etherial, enchanted perspectives of color is the bulky, uncouth, waddling garment the Persian lady is wearing. You will soon see that the street attire is quite a different thing from the house dress. The feet have been thrust into two huge bags of some colored material—let us dignify it by the name of trousers. The lady is enveloped in a large blue sheet or mantle. The long yashmak, now drawn back, is perforated with two holes, or with a tiny network, for the eyes. It renders the beauty absolutely unrecognizable on the street, even by her husband. The masked effect is always the same, whether the garment be of satin or cotton.

Now, the "garden"-party is not as dull as the American woman might think. There is a lot of gossip going on. And there is music, played on a little lute called the tarr, which trills the songs of Saadi. The "dancing" is performed by female equilibrists, and consists in the absurd posturing so dear to the Oriental heart. While dancing, the females spin round, hands held high, and they snap their fingers like the report of a revolver. And, if you please, they make our old-fashioned nursery "cheese!" The full skirts permit of an astonishing "Stilton." Eating begins, continues and seems to never end in the orchard-party. It is of huge peaches and apricots (the finest apricots in the world are produced in Ispahan, and you can buy fourteen pounds for four cents). Honey-sweet pomegranates are served, and grapes—from the tiny, cloying Ascari to the Reesh-i-Baba (Old Man's Beard)—a grape that is two inches long. The Shah passant melon looks like a golden ostrich egg.

But the sweetmeats! and the cakes! The amount of sweets that a Persian lady can eat at a sitting is an alarming thing. Slave-girls serve sherbet of oranges, roses or grapes. The orchard-party is all a lyric to the senses, with not a smite of intellect across it. Watch the long train of ladies go ambling home on mules, in the crimson sunset, or pacing through the streets, with yashmaks tightly drawn. The coquettish Persian ladies, ambling home, lift the yashmak a trifle, but it may be the breeze!

Autumn ends the delights of orchard-parties. It is then that the "visiting" begins from one household to another. Now, the anderun (women's quarters) of a Persian household is absolutely distinct from the other quart of the house. It is accessible to only the "lord" of t household, to the children, to the doctor, and to ve old servants. If you have the honor of calling up the wife or wives of a gentleman of rank (for t Mohammedan may have legally four), you will proce with elaborate etiquette. The invitation to a dinner sent thus: "So-and-So sends her salaams to So-a So, and hopes you will eat dinner at her house at o half-hour after sunset." You will answer at on "Pleased to sit. I hope you are well." You will received in the salamlik. T exterior of a house gives y an idea of what awaits y within. The woman's quart are grouped around a cou open to the sky, where a fou tain plays, and where oran trees make the air a wonder fragrance. Behind the cou is a room raised a few inch from the ground. You go a few steps, a black slave-gi lifts the silken curtains, y slip off your shoes, you he a "Bismi'llah!" (in the nan of Allah), and you enter. Th doors and windows are of po ished wood, gay with gildi and colored glass. The fa famed Persian carpets a costly and beautiful in the subdued harmony of tint. Th walls are inlaid with tiny mi rors. The one great windo blazes with colored glass. An yonder, lolling on silken ma tresses and against mult colored silken cushions, is th lady you have come to visi Who would recognize the lad of the orchard-party? Her costume is the tumbun—simply a series of very short skirts exceedingly distended and held by a running string. The outer skirt is of vel vet, or silk or cashmere shawl, trimmed with gold lace and with a hem inches deep of jewels. It is considere elegant to wear ten little balloon skirts. The lady' face is beautiful, but it is adorned with rouge and paint and the eyebrows are darkened. There is a gentl mildness about her. Remember, she is only twelv years old, and a wife. You take your sea below the mattress. Then the lady of th house asks you, literally, to "come up higher." When you retire at the end of your call, yo must ask permission to do so. If the hostes wishes to show you marked attention, she will refuse your request.

Now, in this "visiting"—one of the amuse ments of the winter months—you will have a good time, according to Oriental ideas. I it be a dinner-party (of course, all of ladies), the dinner will be a delicious one. A very fine Persian tablecloth is spread on the ground, on which the dishes are placed. Squatted upon supple, silk-covered cushions, the Persian hostess and her guests enjoy the meal. The principal dish will be a lamb, roasted whole,

Miss Ruth's Valentine

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

UTH Lindsay was a painter of miniatures. In her girlhood she had studied under good teachers at me, and had been given the advantage several years abroad, where she had ken lessons from great masters. For a ile, after her return to America, suc- s had attended her efforts. There was assing wave of interest in miniatures, d hers for a short period commanded od prices from a certain fashionable set. ese things ebb and flow like the tide. ith had reached forty, which is not an vanced age, but which marks a transi- n period from youth, with shadows of ddle life creeping softly toward it, not reateningly, but lovingly, when one ppens to have health and strength and full purse. But Ruth Lindsay was fra- e. She had many days when she was d aside by the headaches that were a gacy from those who had gone before r, and, furthermore, her pocket-book was nerally thin, and the demands upon it creased with her birthdays. At present seemed as though very few people nted to pay for miniatures, photography ving reached a point of excellence and tistic beauty so eminent that the camera pplanted the brush.

Ruth and her father were alone in the rld. Her father was a splendid look- g old gentleman, of a constitution so bust that he never felt an ache or a in, and of a temperament so sensitive at it could not endure rough contacts in siness, or permit its owner to engage in ything practical. Mr. Lindsay supposed mself to be an author, and to pursue es of scholarly investigation. He spent, ke Mr. Casaubon in Middlemarch, hours nong his books, and every Monday and ery Wednesday, carefully dressed, and rrying a gold-headed cane, he emerged om the modest apartment which Ruth and e called home, that he might consult volmes of reference in a great library. On ose days it was his custom to lunch elegantly in a well-known restaurant, and e never dreamed that his daughter Ruth, ho supported him, usually fasted on ose days, doing her little best to make p for his extravagance. Whatever else ccurred, Mr. Lindsay was well dressed hen he went out. He was wont to say at it did not do for a man to look habby as he grew old. "Nobody notices ou, my dear," he would remark to Ruth, so long as you have the air of a gentleoman."

Fortunately for herself, Ruth Lindsay ad a buoyant spirit and was not easily epressed. She abhorred debt, and worked ard to keep the wolf from the door. atterly, she had painted menu cards, and ad illustrated with dainty pictures in the argin some holiday books, that were elected by a wealthy friend as gifts for a avorite granddaughter. She was brave nd cheery, and her blue eyes looked deiance at poverty. One day, however, she vas aware of a blur before her eyes, and he was frightened when the air around grew darkened by strange, black, feathery hapes that floated uneasily in the field of vision. The oculist she consulted prescribed glasses and rest. On the latter he nsisted, and rest was for Ruth the one mpossibility. What should she do?

On the eve of St. Valentine's Day, two gay little neighbors came flying up to her studio, their eyes shining, their dimples dancing, their cheeks rose-red with excitement. They were hurrying to the post-office to send their valentines, and they expected heaps of treasures in return when the morrow should come. "Oh, Miss Ruth," they said, "isn't Valentine's Day the greatest fun? Isn't it perfectly gorgeous? Don't you love it?"

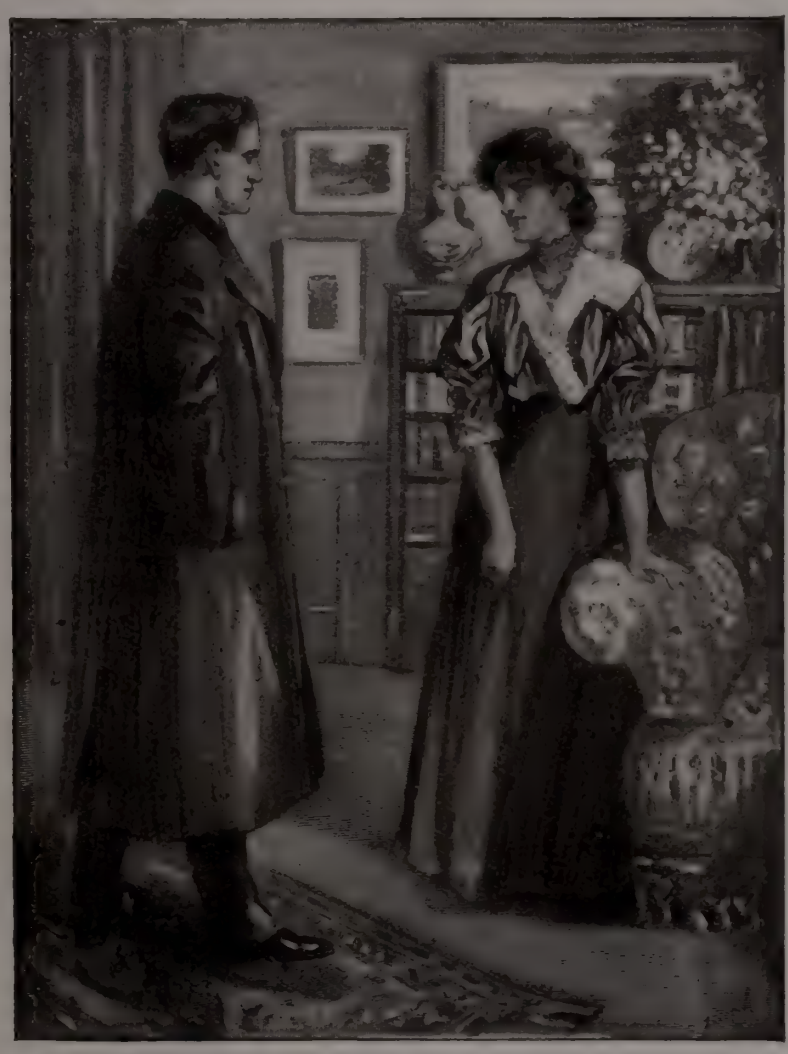
"Well," answered Ruth to the last question, "I did love it when I was sixteen, and I agree with you that life is full of fun and delight in the teens. It is ages, though, since anybody sent me a valentine, or I sent one to anybody. I remember," she went on, musingly, "that Duncan Stewart sent me a beautiful valentine the year I was twenty. It is strange that I have never heard from him since then. He went to India and engaged in trade, and, I suppose, he long ago forgot little Ruth Lindsay, who worked by his side in Paris."

"Was he an artist?" asked the girls, both speaking together. Mary and Jenny Keese were both very sentimental. Being twins, they were a good deal like roses growing on the same stem. They often thought the same thoughts, and dreamed the same dreams.

"Yes, my dears, he began life by wanting to be an artist, but he gave up in despair. He found that he could be a good copyist, and he was not satisfied with that, so when a fine chance came to go into a line where he could make money, he adopted it, and dropped his painting. We were great friends for a while, but life separates young people sometimes."

"We know," said Mary Keese, and Jenny echoed her; "we have read Jean Ingelow's poem, 'Divided,' that explains it. No wonder you are beautiful, Miss Ruth. You have had a romance. We are sure of it, and one day," exclaimed Jenny, eagerly, "your lover will come back, riding on a white horse, and he will ring your door-bell and bring you another valentine. Good-by, dear Miss Ruth, or we shall miss the post."

"Good-by, you sweet children," said Miss Ruth, "until to-morrow." And she added, "Should I meet Duncan Stewart on the street I would not know him, and, besides, dear father will be home soon, and I must make haste and prepare his supper."



"Ruth Lindsay," he said, "do you know me?"

"Mother says," confided Mary to Jenny, as they walked toward the post-office, "that Mr. Lindsay is a very selfish old man, and that he is killing Miss Ruth by inches. Isn't it a shame?"

"Yes, but then there is something rather grand about him, and he looks like one of the old nobles of France, or like an exiled prince, and, of course, children have to honor their parents. I don't see what else Miss Ruth can do except take care of her father. When his wonderful book is written and published, it will probably make a fortune for them both. That is what Miss Ruth expects."

"I doubt her expecting it," said the sister. "It is what her father dreams."

When Mr. Lindsay returned that evening, Ruth was shocked to see that some blight had fallen on his usual happy optimism. He seemed almost, for the first time, weary and old and discouraged. The truth was that an outspoken critic had that day pricked his balloon, by telling him a few plain facts. His vanity had suffered and he was sorely disturbed. A good deal out of temper, he scarcely tasted Ruth's dainty supper, and about eight o'clock went to his room, saying that he was tired and needed sleep.

Ruth settled herself beside the lamp and opened a book, but almost immediately closed its pages and turned down the light. Not for her were there to be any longer charmed evenings with the books that were as manna to her soul. She folded her hands and looked down at them, half despondingly. Those faithful, toiling hands! Were they to be crippled and hindered in their bread-winning because the eyes were giving out? Who would take care of her father if she became unable to earn money? As she sat thinking, silently, there came into her mind, from somewhere out of space, a sweet, uplifting thought of God's goodness. "Take no thought for the morrow: the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself."

In heavenly love abiding,
No change my heart shall fear;
And safe is such confiding,
For nothing changes here.

The storm may roar without me,
My heart may low be laid;
But God is round about me,
And can I be dismayed?

A low knock at the door aroused her from meditation, and she became aware that the knock had followed the buzz of the electric bell. She crossed the room into the little hall and opened the door. A gentleman stood there, hat in hand. "Ruth Lindsay," he said, "do you know me? May I come in? May I say 'Hello, Ruth,' as I used to?"

"Why," she faltered, hardly believing the evidence of her senses, "it is never Duncan Stewart! Come in? Of course. Are you back from the ends of the earth?"

They sat together late that evening, talking in low tones, and telling one another the story of twenty years. "I should have found you long ago," said the man, "if I had been free, but I did not strike luck at once, and I have been a wanderer, seeking my fortune in many lands. As long as my mother and sisters were poor, I could form no ties; but I have reached a place where I have been able to provide them against want, and now, on Valentine's Eve, I have been thrice fortunate to discover you. It happened in the queerest way, through two pretty little girls, whom I encountered in the post-office. I had discovered your address through the Endicotts, who showed me the beautiful books you had illustrated lately, but I did not know the quickest way to get here, and I was asking it, when those young girls stepped up, begged my pardon, and told me just how to go. Then, dear, my courage failed, and I wavered for two hours before I dared enter this domicile. Ruth, we were lovers once, were we not?"

"We were good friends, Duncan," replied Ruth, "hardly lovers;" and the man perceived that if he were to gain his valentine, it would by siege and not by assault. She must be courted.

"We may be friends still?" he inquired.

The Call to Service

WHILE the Western world, and especially our own land, is congratulating itself on a prolonged season of prosperity, we need only look across the seas, eastward or westward, to find the reverse of the picture. It can no longer be said, in these days, that one-half the human family does not know how the other half lives. But alas! what messages of sorrow and suffering the cable often conveys—stories of earthquake, pestilence, flood and famine. And when, as of late, these disasters have followed each other in such rapid succession they seem to suggest that the mighty forces of nature had allied themselves in implacable warfare against the race of men.

Never do human purposes and ambitions seem so paltry and insignificant as when our helplessness is made apparent by some great, overwhelming calamity. It is then that we begin to understand, as at no other time, that all men are brothers, knit together by the common bond of sympathy, which, transcending all diversities of race and language, expresses itself in kind and helpful deeds. This is the attitude of all generous souls toward the afflicted and the suffering. It is the attitude and feeling of Americans toward China to-day, where the worst famine known in forty years is now raging.

China's strongest appeal is that brought by the cable. Ten millions starving; multitudes homeless; hundreds of helpless children abandoned; others sold in the market like cattle, that their gaunt and famishing parents might have food. We dare not dwell on the hideous suggestion of cannibalism, of children's flesh sold and eaten in at least three of the famine districts; yet the evidence that the peasants have been driven to this fearful extremity seems to be conclusive.

To the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, who have "sowed beside many waters" at home and abroad, and whose gracious international charities have gone out to the ends of the earth, the appeal of China comes as a new call to service "In His Name." We invite them to join with us in sending to the Chinese peasants both food for the body and the Bread of Life for the darkened soul. Let every gift be sent with a prayer. Let it have a higher object than the fighting back of famine; let it be a gift consecrated to the advancement of Christ's kingdom in that heathen land, where we, as almoners for Jesus' sake, may give to these suffering people an object-lesson of practical Christian helpfulness.

Up to the present time, $11,000 have been forwarded for Chinese relief by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Root have each sent a generous contribution to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund, following in this respect the precedent of their distinguished predecessors in former relief campaigns, and lending the stamp of official approval to the movement. If all of our friends, who have done such splendid service in the past, were to unite once more, like a solid Pyrrhic phalanx, for this great campaign of benevolence, they could drive the hosts of famine out of the stricken homes of China, and win a new triumph for Christ and humanity.

Send in your offering, and send it quickly.

Our American Girls

SOMEBODY who has been singularly unfortunate in his associations, has quite lately commented unfavorably on the American girl of the hour. Watching her without sympathy and without comprehension, this cynic finds her much less interesting than her brother, and denounces her as flippant, shallow, silly, and altogether unsatisfactory. No generalization on American girlhood can be accepted as fair, the subject itself being too large and too many-sided to treat in a clever paragraph. But we know our daughters. They are known by the men and women who are their instructors in the schoolroom and in college halls. If they are past the age of childhood, and are making their own way in business life, they are, as a class, dignified, irreproachable, and discreet. The girls of to-day of this country, are what girls have always been—simple, sincere and womanly. Every rule has its exceptions, yet exceptions only prove rules.

The trouble is that people who do not get below the surface are apt to be deceived by superficial appearances. Young girls who have been standing on their feet behind counters, from the early morning, and who will have to begin the same torturing round of work early to-morrow, though they may be tired in every muscle, and their pallid faces show that harassing strain, yet on being released from business, they laugh and talk and say silly things to one another, in a spirit of reaction. Girls who are carefully sheltered from the world's rough wind, chaperoned when they go abroad, taught the accepted conventions and brought up in an atmosphere of refinement, do not transgress in this way. It is, however, a great mistake to set girls off by themselves in different classes, or label them as if they were specimens in a catalogue. All girls have points in common, and the working girl, the student, and the girl in society, each in her degree, may illustrate what is sweetest and noblest in character.

American girls are in no haste to marry. They are not indifferent to marriage, nor do they harden their hearts against love. Our custom has been to allow wide freedom of choice to our girls, and there is not in America such a monstrosity as the matrimonial market, allusions to which are so frequent in Old World literature. The managing mother who tries to marry off her daughters, one by one, to eligible suitors, is seldom encountered, and the girls are generally able to take care of their own affairs.

Salome

WHEN the "Passion Play," which the simple peasants of Ober Ammergau have produced for several generations—and which is a relic of the "mystery plays" of a former age—was about to be presented in New York, the good people of the metropolis protested en masse, and the spectacle was withdrawn. Their protest was based on the fact that it was sacriligious, and that it reduced to the low level of a mercenary show the death and crucifixion of Jesus. Its production here would have outraged the holiest feelings of all right-thinking men and women.

"Salome," the loathsome drama written by Oscar Wilde, whose career itself was a dark tragedy of sin, has met a fate similar to that of the "Passion Play." It has been repudiated by the common-sense, decent element of New York as unfit for presentation. Its author, with the instinct of a moral degenerate, seized upon the incidents attending the death of John the Baptist, and, distorting and perverting them to his own use, presented in the dance of the daughter of Herodias the execution of the Forerunner and the hideous gloating of Salome over the fulfilment of Herod's promise, a series of scenes so repulsive and loathsome that the conservative directors of the Metropolitan Opera House officially barred the drama from that building. It hardly needed the protests of the clergy or of private citizens to bring about this decision, although these were not wanting.

An effort may be made to produce the repudiated drama elsewhere, but the precedent of its rejection in New York will probably serve to put other communities on their guard against it.

A Notable Gift

WE have become somewhat accustomed to hearing of the endowment of institutions of learning and the establishment of libraries, but it has remained for Mr. William Pryor Letchworth to make a gift for the coming generations of Americans that is almost unique of its kind. Mr. Letchworth is one of the most noted of American philanthropists, and has made it his life-work to improve the condition of the poor and the children who are in the public charge. In the valley of Genesee he has developed an estate of over a thousand acres, called Glen Iris Park. There is in the park a great gorge, through which the river plunges over three falls, whose combined height is greater than Niagara. There are in the woods of the park more varieties of birds and flowers than can be found in one locality for hundreds of miles. It is a study ground for the geologist, the ornithologist and botanist. All the buildings are in keeping with the scenery, and among them is a library and a museum of great educational value. The latter has one of the finest collections in the world of relics of the North American Indians.

Grounds and museum have been as freely open to the public as if they owned them, and that all of the beautiful domain should some time be the property of the State, has long been the cherished dream of the possessor. A few weeks ago it was offered to the authorities, and was accepted by a special bill of the legislature.

It was a noble gift and worthy of the man, who is called by the Iroquois Indians Ha-wa-ye-s-tah "the man who always does the right thing." It is true that a hungry water-power company that wanted the water power of the wonderful triple falls are grievously disappointed, but the public can stand that. The government has been too busy to attend much to the preservation of the beauty-spots of the country. Either the places of interest have been wiped out or are threatened with destruction, as is Niagara. It would seem that the preservation must come from the efforts of private individuals, and to those with the means and the inclination Mr. Letchworth has given a noble incentive and example.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST E. L. HYDE, assisted by Prof. Hall, Gospel singer, is conducting services at Chester, Pa.

—EVANGELIST H. O. HOFSTEDT, of Brooklyn, N. Y., has begun a series of Gospel meetings at Haverhill, Mass.

—REV. PETRUS SANDBERG, a Swedish evangelist, is addressing large meetings at the Swedish Evangelical Mission, Chester, N. J.

—REV. JAMES M. GRAY and Prof. Towner are conducting large meetings at Kalamazoo, Mich., with remarkable spiritual results.

—EVANGELIST HERBERT C. HART and A. A. Mangan, singer, are laboring at Trenton, N. J., where much blessing is attending the ministrations.

—FIFTY PERSONS declared for the Christian life, at a great Gospel meeting held on the Steel Pier at Atlantic City, N. J., lately. Evangelist Stuart was the speaker.

—THE FRIENDS are growing in numbers. According to the latest statistics, there are 95,603 Quakers in the United States, besides 2,316 American members engaged in the foreign mission field.

—A REVIVAL is in progress in Shelbyville, Ind., where the Ker Brothers have been preaching to immense crowds in the First Baptist Church, the City Opera House, and the First M. E. Church.

—MR. E. E. BAYLISS, of the Moody Bible Institute, Chicago, writes: "I am accompanying Gipsy Smith in his entire series of meetings, his itinerary being: After Chicago, Galesburg, Ill.; Peoria, Ill.; Clinton, Ia.; Brooklyn, Atlanta, Philadelphia, and Providence.

—CLEVELAND, OHIO, is greatly stirred by the series of evangelistic meetings now under way conducted by Dr. Torrey. The armory is crowded nightly. In thirteen days' meetings 1,214 persons made public confession of Christ, the largest number being 888 on Sunday, January 29.

—THE WESLEY EVANGELISTS (J. H. Cannon, leader) have just completed an excellent revival work in the old Jane Street M. E. Church, New York City, Rev. C. W. McPherson, pastor. Many have publicly confessed Christ.

—A REMARKABLY SUCCESSFUL revival movement is under way in Troy, O. It is a simultaneous campaign and is under the direction of Evangelist W. E. Biederwolf, whose party consists of fourteen workers. About forty churches are united in the movement together with five Y. M. C. A's. The city is deeply stirred, and hundreds have confessed Christ.

—SOME PITHY SAYINGS of Mrs. Sophie, a woman evangelist, now laboring among the miners of Wilkesbarre, Pa., have reached us. Here are a few: "The Lord don't cast your sins behind your back one day and the next day cast them up to the front of your face, like some human beings." "The serpent is pretty wise. He fooled old Eve, and there are lots of Eve's and Adams in the world since." "When I was converted I know I was there; that's the most important part." "Religion is a thing of the head, and salvation's a thing of the heart."

—AFTER MORE THAN five years of temperance and evangelistic work in Great Britain, Rev. Dr. J. Q. A. Henry will soon return to this country to do evangelistic service. He will be accompanied by his singer, Mr. J. R. Hemminger. During Dr. Henry's stay in Great Britain he has conducted 150 missions in practically all the large towns and cities of the United Kingdom, has addressed more than 3,000,000 people, taken 135,000 total abstinence pledges. Nearly 30,000 people made an open confession of faith in Christ as Saviour.

Tropical Vegetation at the Base

The Snow-clad Peaks of the Ruwenzori Mountain Range

Duke of the Abruzzi

The Duke of the Abruzzi, the Conqueror of Ruwenzori, the Hitherto Unscaled African Range

h Africa's Snow-clad Hills

MOST intensely thrilling is the story told by the Duke of the Abruzzi of his mountain ascents in Central Africa. The famous Mountains of the M n have hitherto been enveloped in as much mystery though they were really in the moon. The Duke, wever, having won laurels in the Arctic by attaining highest latitude ever reached by man, which has only been surpassed by a few miles by Peary, attempted achievement deemed impossible—that of climbing the Ruwenzori range of mountains. These mountains, though ng close to the Equator, are covered with perpetual w. The natives having no idea what snow is, believe the brilliant peaks are coated with silver which the illumines at noon day.

he Duke set out from Naples with Lieut. Cagni, who mpanied him to the Arctic, and a small party. After urney of six thousand miles, they arrived at the foot he great range and hired guides and about two hun- l bearers to support them in the ascent. It began in e of last year. By the tenth of the month the Duke climbed his first peak, which he named Alexandra in or of the English Queen; the next day he climbed twin elevation, which he named Margherita after the en of Italy. Their height, as shown by the instru- ts, was respectively 16,744 and 16,810 feet above sea- l, and so by a long distance the highest points on the ican Continent. The Duke stayed thirty-five days ng the peaks, thirty-six of which he climbed. He d there birds and animals unknown to science, and derful plants which he was unable to classify. ppily he had excellent photographic appliances, which served the wonderful record.

f the dangers of the ascent the Duke modestly says little, though they were evidently very serious. re were places scaled so near the perpendicular that guide's feet knocked the cap off the Duke's head as followed. Narrow ledges where a step of a few es to right or left would have meant destruction, dizzy heights where it was dangerous to stand long ct. But the reward appeared to be well worth the and danger. "They left the region with regret, and y gazed long on the shining glaciers glistening in the , which had, through the centuries, fed the sources of majestic Nile, the river linked to history by so many ords of the past, and they bade farewell reluctantly the virgin summits which they had been the first to due." It is strange that it was left to an age which e call a physically degenerate age, to furnish explor- so daring as those that penetrate to the Arctic and t scale the towering peaks of the untrodden moun- s. We have a right to glory in the achievements of h men. Never was there a time when so much was own of the world, and we can but wish that our owledge of its Creator had grown in similar degree.

o, these are parts of his ways, but how little a portion is heard im (Job 26:14)

arried for Service

A strange reason was given for a marriage which took ce in a village near Utica, N.Y., recently. A member one of the families living there was stricken with diph- eria. Before the disease was correctly diagnosed and eventive measures taken, other members of the family re stricken. Residing with them was a young lady, o in the early stage of the malady had been active in rsing the child who was the first sufferer. She caught e disease, but by the time it developed other members of e household were prostrated, and it was difficult to find y one to nurse her. She was engaged to a young man o had some knowledge of medicine, and when he went see her, he perceived that she was in a critical state d needed more attention than could be given her. He termined to stay and nurse her himself, and to make atters easy he pleaded with the girl for an immediate arriage. She consented, and a justice of the peace was mmoned. To prevent his taking the infection, he was stationed outside an open window, from which he could see the girl lying in bed with her affianced beside her holding her hand. The marriage was quickly solemnized, and the young husband entered on his duties as nurse. Should she recover, how tender to both will be the memory of that ceremony. A wedding in a cathedral, with a bishop officiating, would not be so happy a memory. It is so that the church should remember her espousals with her Lord, who healed her and cleansed her.

As Christ loved the church and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it (Eph. 5: 25).

The Governor's Apology

Apparently the English Government has succeeded in bringing Governor Swettenham to a sense of his misconduct. The governor has formally and explicitly withdrawn his offensive letter to Admiral Davis, and it is reported that he has resigned his office. Of the latter item of news confirmation is lacking, but it is probably true. He may consider himself fortunate if he is permitted to resign, and so escape the ignominy of dismissal which he deserves. In the conservative press of England the friends of the governor are making lame attempts to justify his conduct, but the English public is too shrewd to pay attention to the palliations put forward of an act that covered him with everlasting disgrace. That a kindly and generous effort on the part of a friendly power to help him meet a sudden calamity, should have been rudely repulsed, indicates the spirit of one of those men who, in every age, have been an offense to all men of patriotism and sense. It is unfortunate for a country when families have so much influence, that they can force on the public service men who are utterly inadequate for the efficient discharge of the duties of office, and who are liable to do absolute mischief.

Man that is in honor and understandeth not, is like the beasts that perish (Ps. 49:20).

Hawaii's Volcano in Action

A message from Honolulu reports that the volcano of Mauna Loa is in a state of violent eruption. The light from the flames ascending from the crater is so intense that it is possible to read fine print by it at a distance of thirteen miles. The flow of lava from new craters which have been developed on the sides of the mountain is very destructive. The largest of these new craters is four thousand feet below the summit of the mountain, whence it proceeds in a southwesterly direction to the sea. One rushing stream of lava has severed all communication by land between Kau and Kona. It is twenty-five feet in depth. One stream that is flowing to the north is becoming wider. Many of the cones are spouting boulders. There have been continuous shocks of earthquake of sufficient intensity to throw down stone fences. The shocks are rotary, a movement hitherto unknown in the earth movements known on the island. No deaths have been reported. This appears to be a period of intense terrestrial disturbance, indicating that changes of considerable extent are taking place in the world's interior. Scientists are unable to explain them or tell us what they portend. Many people in the earthquake zones and in other regions are becoming disquieted, but the Christian may say with the Psalmist:

Therefore will not we fear, though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea; though the waters thereof roar and are troubled, though the mountains shake with the swelling thereof (Ps. 46: 2, 3).

Is Our Flag a Toy?

A curious dispute has arisen as to the use of the Stars and Stripes, which has recently been decided by the Board of United States Appraisers. A Japanese firm in Chicago sent to Japan ordering the production of some toys, which included some of our flags. The flags were made of silk and were not over an inch and one-half in length. The Collector of Customs at Chicago exacted duty on the flags at the rate of fifty per cent. ad valorem under the provision in the tariff for "manufactures of silk." The importers contended that the flags should be admitted at thirty-five per cent. as toys. In his decision the General Appraiser says: "We do not think that the American flag, however diminutive, is commercially, commonly, or nationally regarded as a plaything, and therefore we find that the flags in dispute are not toys." We are not surprised at the Japanese regarded the little emblems in that form as toys, and they will doubtless be used as such by the children for whom they may be bought. Still, there is reason in the appraiser's attitude. He or his father may have followed that flag at the risk of his life, and he may have known men who actually died to preserve it. It is not strange that he regards it as a sacred thing, which he will not suffer to be called a toy. We can but wish that all of us who have the same reverence for it were concerned to keep it from all stain and from national sin, which alone can degrade it.

Righteousness exalteth a nation: but sin is a reproach to any people (Prov. 14: 34).

To Prevent Gun-Deafness

A search is being made for some kind of protection for the ears, to be used in the navy. It was observed that the prisoners on Russian ships captured by the Japanese were in nearly all cases not only deaf, but dazed and helpless. The noise of the guns on Japanese ships was just as deafening, but the men were supplied before going into action with cotton-wool ear plugs, which protected their ear drums. The objection to these plugs is that the men could not hear orders when the plug was in their ears, which, of course, is a very serious drawback. Dr. Arthur H. Cheatle, a distinguished aural surgeon, now announces that he has discovered a material which will accomplish the dual purpose of preventing deafness and enabling a man to hear orders given. It is a mixture of animal wool and modelling clay, is easily worked into the ear and easily removed. Being plastic, it fits all the aural passages and, while it saves the shock of the blast, it allows the wearers to hear the words of a high-pitched human voice. This is a most extraordinary discovery, that will render a man deaf to one noise and capable of hearing another. Would that such a material could be found that would render a man deaf to temptation and the voice of evil, but alive to the voice of God.

Thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it (Isa. 30: 21).

Offers his Blood

A lady of eighteen years of age, who is a member of a prominent family in New York, is to be the subject of an operation having in it some of the elements of romance. She was taken ill some weeks ago with a heavy cold, which produced the well-known conditions favorable to an attack of typhoid. The disease ran its usual course, and it was hoped she was on the way to recovery when a relapse took place. Four physicians were hurriedly summoned in consultation, but they failed to improve the conditions. The patient grew worse, and appeared to be sinking, when the doctors decided to try a critical operation as a desperate resort. This was nothing less than the transfusion of blood from a strong and healthy person into the veins of the dying girl. A suitable subject was speedily found in a vigorous young man, who is a friend of the family. He willingly offered himself for the purpose, and as he is an athlete, with the strength of a young giant, his offer was gratefully accepted. The operation is to be performed immediately, and the doctors believe it will save the girl's life. There are few men who would give their blood to save the life of another, but this brave young man does not falter. Every one admires him, even those who hear unmoved of One who shed his blood to save them from eternal death.

Neither by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood he entered at once into the holy place, having obtained eternal redemption for us (Heb. 9: 12).

A MAGAZINE FOR THE BLIND

THE time seems to have arrived when the blind of this country are to have their needs recognized more fully. The work of State Associations, and of State Blind Commissions, such as have been appointed in Massachusetts, New York, and Delaware during the past two or three years, is doing much toward increasing opportunities for proper education, for physical, intellectual and technical training for the blind. Schools, industrial homes and associations are uniting to open new and wider fields for employment and self-support. Now a magazine has been established for them.

In the United States there are about seventy thousand blind persons, more than three-fourths of whom became blind after school age, when the State does not undertake to instruct them. Left alone in their darkness to begin life anew, they fret under their restrictions. They do not enjoy being dependent on others for support or entertainment.

Their reading has been restricted until recent years to the Bible and a comparatively small number of books, mostly of a religious nature. Circulating libraries for the blind carry volumes from one reader to another, but unfortunately the number of good books in these libraries is extremely limited. Moreover, but a small proportion of the blind know of the privilege these libraries offer.

Mrs. Ziegler, widow of the capitalist, has lately established a periodical, to be called the Mathilda Ziegler Magazine for the Blind, which is to be carried on wholly at the founder's expense and circulated, free of charge, to all reading blind people who may apply for it.

The magazine, although of high moral tone, will not in any sense be a religious publication, but will be conducted on lines so broad as to appeal to all possible readers of all denominations or sects. Each issue will include a high-class story, poetry, news of the day in a condensed form, a sheet of popular music, and letters from blind persons telling of successful achievements, which may encourage others. Prizes will be offered for contributions of merit by blind people.

"In making up such a periodical, special consideration has to be given to the nature of its subject matter," says Mr. Holmes, the editor. "Many beautiful songs and poems would to sightless readers prove valueless. Allusions to moonbeams, starlight, rainbows or clouds, while losing their significance, would serve to emphasize to the readers the sense of their affliction." Selections from humorous stories and those inculcating a happy philosophy for everyday living will be given preference. Nothing that is otherwise than cheerful, comforting, or stimulating will find place in its pages. The periodical is necessarily bulky. It will be twelve inches square, will contain fifty sheets, printed only on one side, and will weigh about one pound.

As there are two prevailing styles of type, each edition is to be printed in both types; that is, one-third of the edition will be printed in "Braille" and two-thirds in "New York Point."

The Braille is a system of dots or points, consisting of six points in two vertical lines of three points each, ⋮⋮ these dots, or a combination of more, make every letter of the a and also musical characters. Sixt different combinations are possible English Braille, somewhat similar Braille, is generally used in Europ

Practical Sympathy

Dear Editor:—I herewith enclose my check for the Famine Relief Fund, if one is being raised. I am not a subscriber to your paper, so am not informed as to what is being done. I have asked several daily newspapers for information on the subject, but have not been enlightened.

Recalling your services in former calamities, I send this, and enclose stamps for its return, if there is no such fund being raised in New York.

Thanking you in advance for your services in either case, I am always for the love of Christ and his kingdom,

Atlanta, Ga.

Glad to Send Them Help

Enclosed please find a check for $25.00, to be sent to China for the famine sufferers. One surely has cause to appreciate your kindness in helping others help these sufferers, as it would be hard for one person to send it to them were it not for your kindness. May God bless you in your great work for him and bless the small gift, it may do much good.

Yours for Christ and the Church,

HORRORS OF THE CHINESE FAMINE

Starving Multitudes in Five Provinces—Many Driven to Suicide—Children Sold and Eaten

LATEST reports from the famine-stricken provinces of China, received during the past week through official sources at Shanghai and from the missionaries in the field, reveal the fact that the famine is extending westward to the interior. It is no longer confined to the eastern seaboard provinces of Anhui, Chehkiang and Kiangsu but reaches northward to Shantung and westward far into Honan.

That the contributions of generous Americans, sent through THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, are already doing effective service in the famine districts, is gratefully acknowledged by officials and missionaries alike. As announced on another page of this issue, President Roosevelt and Secretary of State Root have each sent a contribution to the Fund.

Stories of appalling misery and suffering continue to come in from many quarters to the Shanghai Relief Committee. It is futile longer to attempt to hide the fact that hunger's death roll has already begun and that it threatens to be a large one. Deaths by suicide to escape the suffering, by starvation and by cannibalism, all figure in this dark category. Many are absolutely destitute, and in some of the districts children are being abandoned by hundreds.

Various plans are now under consideration for sending quick relief to the districts where the suffering is the keenest. It is not improbable that a fleet of junks, laden with food, may be sent southward from some port in Shantung, along the canal, while another relief ship may go up the Yangtse River from Shanghai. This movement, it is claimed, would throw relief stores more quickly into many of the affected localities than any other method of transportation.

Chairman E. S. Little, of the Executive Committee of the Central China Famine Fund, Shanghai, has forwarded a comprehensive report of famine conditions to President Roosevelt. He writes:

"The largest estimate states that the region more or less affected covers 50,000 square miles; a more conservative figure puts the area at 40,000 square miles, within which there are about thirty walled cities and market towns. The population, which is more or less affected by the total or partial failure of crops is estimated at something like 10,000,000. At the same time, it is not presumed that anything like this number will be actually starving or will require outside relief; nevertheless, it is certain a very large number will require regular relief continued for months if they are to be kept alive.

Missionary Distributors

"The responsibility for meeting the distress of a population of something like 10,000,000 until the month of May or June next year naturally rests with the Chinese Government and the Chinese people; but, owing to the magnitude of the task, if not the actual impossibility of the needs being met, and starvation being prevented by the help of the Chinese themselves, an appeal has been made in China and foreign countries generally for additional assistance. It is intended to help only those that are actually starving. The distribution of the money, or of foodstuffs furnished by the money, will, so far as contributions from abroad are concerned, be placed in the hands of European and American missionaries residing within the famine area, and probably other Chinese-speaking European and American civilians, thoroughly acquainted with the people, and willing to co-operate with the Chinese gentry in bringing relief to the starving without additional expense to the Committee.

"The Shanghai Committee is composed of Chinese, as well as foreigners, in order that individual Chinese may be stimulated to contribute, and that foreigners may have the benefit of the advice of men who have been engaged in charitable enterprises in China for many years. In this way it is hoped not only that the funds may be distributed in the best possible way, but that indirectly benefits may accrue by reviving feelings of harmony and mutual goodwill between China and foreign nations.

"It may be stated that the famine district is situated in the Northern parts of the provinces of Kiangsu and Anhui, with possibly a narrow fringe on the Eastern border of Honan and the Southern boundary of Shantung. The Yangtze region is not directly affected, except in so far as thousands of refugees from the famine district are coming South with the hope of finding subsistence and saving their lives.

"The assistance that will be rendered will be highly appreciated, not only by those who receive help, but by all classes of the Chinese. H. E. Tuan Fang, the Viceroy of the affected district, who is well known in Western countries, has already sent his message of thanks for the promise of succor.

"The cold weather is approaching, and hundreds of thousands of semi-starved people, with the barest quantity of cotton clothing, are crowded in wretched grass or mat-covered hovels and will be subject to fearful suffering."

Refugees Moving South in the Hunt for Food

Our Correspondent at the Front

Mr. Wm. T. Ellis, a correspondent of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD now traveling in China, and who has visited the Relief Committee, writes to us from Shanghai as follows:

"Dear Dr. Klopsch:—Providentially, I am here at the beginning of the most awful famine modern China has known. A million refugees are gathered about the cities north of here. Parents are destroying their children, or abandoning them. Of the ten million persons affected, myriads are actually starving to death.

"I shall go straight into the famine district, even though my plans are disarranged. The relief work must continue until June. The money will all be distributed by Americans and Europeans. The fullest co-operation of the Chinese officials is assured.

"This is a wheat and corn country, and not exclusively rice, so that flour and corn-meal may be acceptably sent. It would be a fine thing to bring a CHRISTIAN HERALD ship from Seattle here. THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is well known here because of past benefactions. But this is the greatest opportunity its readers have ever had. WM. T. ELLIS."

Sad Letters from Missionaries

Rev. B. C. Patterson writes from Suchien that one family was poisoned by the father, who was hopeless.

Missionaries J. B. Cochran, Samuel Codman, and D. B. S. Morris of the American Presbyterian Mission at Hwai Yuen, Anhui Province, write to Secretary McCrea at Chenkiang:

The flood lasted about forty days. The water inside the city of Hwai Yuen was waist-deep in many places, all the streets being flooded for several weeks and business being at a standstill. The entire country to the north and east was covered by a thin sheet of water, which effectually ruined all the crops. The flood extended through the entire northern and eastern portions of the magistracy and through a large section of Nan Hsu Cheo, while Ling Pi Hsien, Si Cheo and Wu Ho Hsien were almost completely submerged.

A considerable percentage of the population has already left for the South, to pass the winter in begging a precarious living. In one village alone, three hundred families have gone. In traveling overland from Nanking, hundreds of refugees from this region were seen. Scores were stricken with fever, many lying by the roadside too weak to walk. One heard constantly of the pitiful suffering the people were enduring.

One case was of a woman traveling with her baby a year old. Weakened by her long journey and lack of food, she fell an easy prey to the fever and died by the side of the road, clasping tightly her little child. For two days the little living child was left in its dead mother's arms. Who on that road, with hunger and fever driving them on, could stop to heed even the cry of a helpless baby?

In the entire region north of the Hwai, everything available is being sold to buy food. Farm animals are being disposed of at great sacrifice. The extremity of the distress is seen in the fact that children are being offered for sale, in some instances being peddled along the street.

The following are the ordinary prices of the necessities of life—the present prices, and also the prices that ruled during this month of the year of the great famine, eight years ago:

Rice	$8.00 per ton	$5.25
Flour	38 cash per catty	22 cash
Bean cake	24 cash per catty	8 cash

(16 "cash" are equal to 1½ cents American money.)

There is great reason to believe that during the two or three months before the wheat harvest large numbers will die of hunger.

Russia, Too, Has a Famine

By BARON UXKULL

IN addition to the other troubles which Russia has been obliged to undergo in recent years, she is now facing a serious famine in about twenty governments or provinces.

One cause of this famine is, first of all, the Russian peasant has no personal real estate. There is a socialistic order in so far as the land belongs to the whole community or village, and this land is redivided every year among the adult male population. Knowing that the piece of land which he is cultivating each year will be used the next year by another, the peasant, of course, does not make permanent improvements.

This order of things dates from the reign of the liberal Emperor Alexander II., who, though he gave personal liberty to the millions of Russian peasants, thought that he could not give property to individuals; that they would not be able to manage it themselves, and decided it would be wiser to give the land to the whole population or village. History has proved that this socialistic reform was a great mistake, and the government has been obliged to recognize that all the famines which have occurred in Russia were the fruit of this social order. Personal ownership of property is as necessary for the wellbeing of a state as personal liberty.

The other causes of the famine are: First, that in many places the crops did not flourish. There was no rain for months, and the sun burned all that had begun to grow. Secondly, there was the revolutionary trouble. The peasant hoped that the land of the large landowners would be divided among them; and, hoping for great pieces of land, they neglected to work on the acres distributed to them.

The people who have suffered most from the famine are those of the provinces —in the East, Saratow Samara, Simbirsk, Kazan, Ufa, Perm, Wjatka, Penza, Nishnii Nowgorod; and in the centre, Woronesh, Tambow, Orel, Kursk, Charkow, Tula, Kaluga, Kjazan, Wladimir; and Jekaterinoslaw in the South. The Governor understands the dreadful position of the peasantry, and he tries to help them. But, acting with the best of intentions, he encounters many difficulties.

In many cases Tartar fathers have been obliged to sell their daughters to a life of shame and misery, to gain in this way the money necessary to save the rest of the family from death by starvation.

God has preserved the United States from the horrors of a famine. Stopping here in New York, and eating American grape fruits and American oysters, I have sometimes remembered the poor Russian peasants, who are obliged to eat a famine bread, which consists half of oats and half of moss, dried and crushed and then baked together. Such a bread can fill, but it cannot nourish.

In the Government of Tambow crops could not grow at all, and there is also very little hay to supply the cattle. Rye flour and oats are very dear; each costs one rouble, thirty cop. (sixty-five cents) a "pud" (sixteen and one-third kilograms). Many peasants had rented land from the large proprietors. They did not earn anything, but were obliged to pay the rent of twelve roubles for each dessiatine (about one hectare). Almost all villages of this province have declared to the government that the population is suffering from hunger, and have asked to be supplied with a loan of corn, beginning with the first of October last, but the government has decided to help, beginning only with the first of December. In the provinces of Tambow and Pensa, there have been lists of the families made that are suffering from hunger. The lists have been done quickly and not conscientiously, so that many families are in the greatest misery, and do not receive help because they have not been put on the official lists.

The Governors are compelling the people to pay the taxes without delay, because the Revolutionists have decided that the taxes shall not be paid, and they have in many places threatened with death those who wish to obey. So the authorities very strongly demand that the taxes be paid. It is not that they have not pity for the miserable position of the peasants, but they think it their duty to show that the government and the authorities are still in power and have the right to collect the taxes. But is not that a dreadful contradiction? On one side the government tries to provide the peasant with food, and on the other side the government is obliged to take all, to show his authority. Much have the Russian people suffered in times past, and it seems that the cup of their suffering is not yet full.

Now, we must give justice to the central government; they try to do what they can, but there is always the difficulty of the executive officers; and I am obliged to repeat also that Russia needs the Gospel, because the Gospel is the only power on earth which can give us men with backbone, who would not do any injustice to please a superior.

We have many good laws in Russia, but we need good administrators to execute them. There have been conferences of governors, and the question has been discussed by what means the suffering population could be helped. After two weeks, the local administration began to distribute the grain to the suffering population, some supplies arrived too late, some supplies arrived not at all, and the government was obliged to buy a second time 3,814,000 "pud," and some other small parcels, to help supply the suffering. From Siberia the government bought oats, and for the first time they tried to introduce Turkish corn in Southern Russia as food for the population. It is not such an easy thing to help in Russia as it is in the eastern parts of the United States. In Russia the country is very thinly populated, and there are not so many railroads as there are here, and there are a number of small villages far off in the woods, where the people must drive a hundred or more miles before they can reach a town. It is very difficult to supply food and medicine to the sick ones, and when the spring comes there are many places over the streams where there are no bridges, and for some weeks commuication will be shut off by the breaking of the ice, and many villages will be utterly destitute.

It is a sad picture that we now see in Russia—discontent and misery and famine. But let us look away from this picture and see another time; let us believe that it will come, and let us pray that it will come; a time when the Russian people will have enough of the earthly bread, and a time when also the heavenly bread will be brought to them.

The scene shown on the cover of this issue of THE CHRISTAN HERALD is from an illustration in The London Illustrated News. It is a picture drawn from life of a child-market in the Russian provinces. The News says: "So severe is the pinch of famine in the Vologda district that the peasants are selling their children. The younger children are sold for household drudges; the fate of the elder is even less fortunate."

Such scenes have their duplicate in China, where children are being sold in the open market in several provinces. Still more deplorable is the news that in at least two districts, Sinchow and Paichow, children have been killed and eaten by the hunger-crazed population.

Your table linen has lost its lustre—do you know why?

Is it not because you have allowed your laundress to cleanse it with ordinary laundry soaps, which, being overstrong in alkali, "cut" the fabric and make linen look like cotton?

and in Portuguese. On certain weekday evenings there are prayer meetings. On Sunday, the mission bell calls to services in the chapel, when the little flock of believers, with other adherents of various sorts, gather for class meeting, to hear the Word read and preached and taught in the Sunday School, joining also in singing hymns to old familiar tunes, but the words all in the native tongue. Frequently there are baptisms of converts, at regular intervals the celebration of the Lord's Supper, and occasionally a wedding. Often a big palaver has to be thrashed out and settled. Visitation of the villages is also followed.

General View of the Mission Buildings

The translation of the New Testament into Kimbundu goes on here under the direction of the British and Foreign Bible Society. We have only three Gospels in print so far, but the rest will soon be completed, and to this branch of the work the writer is particularly devoting himself at the present time. We have hymn-books, catechisms, and other literature, part of which is printed at our own press here, including an illustrated Sunday School paper, tracts, etc. The Kimbundu is not a mean language at all, but one of the best of the Bantu family of tongues, strong, well-developed, regular in structure, soft and euphonious. Our printing plant represents an investment of $2,000, besides the building. All the heavy machinery had to be brought inland in pieces by native carriers, on their heads or by poles. Colporteurs go out from time to time, to near and distant villages and towns, selling Scriptures. In a little over two years over a million pages were thus circulated.

A native trader once called at our station asking for a Bible. He had searched in vain for one in the trading town where he had been, for he had heard that it was a book which told about God and the future life. The missionary was able to supply him with one in Portuguese, which he could read, so he gladly paid the price and carried off his prize. He carried and read the book, and what he there found was blessed to his salvation. This station is part of the missionary work of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Africa, and is under the administration of Bishop Hartzell. We are indebted to the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD for valuable help. We value also the prayers of God's people in its behalf.

stuffed with dates and pistachios, almonds and chestnuts. On its head a little lighted candle is fixed. You carve with your fingers, as there are no knives nor forks in Persia. Tiny chickens, doves, roasted partridges are handed on the spit itself to each guest. And then you plunge your thumb and forefinger into the bowl of rice (the pilaff), and dextrously construct little balls of rice, which you toss into your mouth. Persian hospitality is extravagant, and an unpalatable dish is never offered. Both at the dinner and at the afternoon call, the eternal kalyan (water-pipe) is served. The amber mouthpiece which the guest uses is often presented, as a souvenir, to the lady's friend. Then the lutis (men buffoons) appear in the court leading a lion. The ladies peep through the lattice and enjoy the antics of the beast. At the end of the dinner there must always be an explosion of fireworks in the court. But Persian fireworks have no color to them.

Merry social hours are enjoyed by Persian ladies meeting at the baths. The Persians are among the cleanest people in the world. As with the Romans, whole mornings and afternoons are spent at the baths. A few of the dwellings of the rich have a suite of baths, but generally it is in the public baths that the ladies congregate, at the "ladies' hour." One reason of their beauty is the constant care of the skin by bathing.

Shopping! A Persian woman at a bargain-counter! Certainly, but a young wife must never go to the bazaars till she has blessed her husband with children. It would be considered an awful scandal. When she goes shopping, she must always be accompanied by her child, or by her mother-in-law. The bazaars—long, narrow streets with shops on either side—are a maze of beauty as to color. Each trade has its separate bazaar. It is at the goldsmiths' bazaar that the ladies congregate, for here you may buy bracelets, bangles, jewels, pipe-heads. What a subdued buzz, whispering, chatting, dickering!

As the veiled women wend their way homeward in the dusk, the stranger-tourist's eye follows the bulky figures with interest and with irritation. These yashmaks conceal forever faces that have inspired the sad, starry songs of the Persia of the centuries.

The nightingale, their only vesper-bell,
Sings to the rose the day's farewell!

GEMS FROM NEW BOOKS

The South's Reconstruction Period*

JURISTS, lawyers and politicians of the South during the years immediately following the Civil War, found a most congenial hospitality on a certain large Virginia plantation, whose owner kept open house in true Southern fashion. The company frequently thus gathered, found an earnest listener in the little daughter of the house, who, at father's or brother's knee, drank in eagerly the discussions and stories.

Grown to mature womanhood, cherishing always the early acquired impressions of her beloved Southland, augmented by extensive correspondence, eventful diaries and the experiences of friends closely connected with the history of the South during the reconstruction period, the little girl of forty years ago has written an unusual and thoroughly comprehensive book upon post bellum life from a woman's viewpoint. That little girl who has lived to make this bold venture in the literary world, is Myrta Lockett Avary, a name well known to CHRISTIAN HERALD readers, both by her earlier book, A Southern Girl in '61, which won her fame, as well as by her many contributions to this journal, with which she was connected for several years.

In her new book, Dixie After the War, the author has successfully avoided sectional feeling and prejudice in her narrative of the events of those days "which tried men's souls." Readers will not fail to be interested in the incidents and narratives which she employs, and to be impressed by the spirit of fairness which is displayed in her vivid description of an extraordinary social and political period in our national life. Certainly the American is aided by a perusal of this volume to a better understanding of his country's past, and a clearer conception of the present as a natural evolution of that past. President Lincoln's arrival in Richmond, after its occupation by Federal troops, is thus described by Mrs. Avary:

"Abraham Lincoln came unheralded. No bells rang, no guns boomed in salute. He held no levee. There was no formal jubilee. He must have been heartless as Nero to have chosen that moment for a festival of triumph. He was not heartless." So a citizen of Richmond, who was a boy at the time, and out doors and everywhere, seeing everything, remembers the coming of Lincoln.

His coming was as simple, business-like, and unpretentious as the man himself. Anybody who happened to be in the neighborhood on the afternoon of April 4, might have seen a boat manned by ten or twelve sailors pull ashore at a landing above Rockett's, and a tall, lank man step forth.

A Northern newspaper man (who related this story of himself) recognizing that it was his business to make news as well as dispense it, saw some negroes at work near the landing where an officer was having debris removed, and other negroes idling. He said to this one and to that: "Do you know that 'man?" pointing to the tall, lank man who had just stepped ashore.

"Who is dat man, marster?"

"Call no man master. That man set you free. That is Abraham Lincoln. Now is your time to shout. Can't you sing, 'God bless you, Father Abraham!'"

That started the ball rolling. The news spread like wild-fire. Mercurial blacks, already excited to fever-heat, collected about Mr. Lincoln, impeding his progress, kneeling to him, hailing him as "Saviour!" and "My Jesus!" They sang, shouted, danced. One woman jumped up and down, shrieking: "I'm free! I'm free! I'm free till I'm fool!" Some went into the regular Voodoo ecstasy, leaping, whirling, stamping, until their clothes were half torn off. Mr. Lincoln made a speech, in which he said:

"My poor friends, you are free—free as air. But you must try to deserve this priceless boon. Let the world see that you merit it by your good works. Don't let your joy carry you into excesses. Obey God's commandments and thank him for giving you liberty, for to him you owe all things. There, now, let me pass on. I have little time here and much to do. I want to go to the Capitol. Let me pass on."

Mr. Davis's capture and imprisonment are narrated with unconscious pathos, and the numerous pen-pictures of valiant Confederates, beloved of their people, are painted by a lingering, loving hand. The author devotes a chapter to a graphic portraiture of the Southern ballot-box in those years when, "ready or unready, literate or illiterate, civilized or uncivilized," the franchise was given to four million negroes.

Other vivid chapters are those dealing with the subjects of "Crime Against Womanhood" and "Race Prejudice." Indeed, no salient feature of the time or territory is left unexploited, and, altogether, from the years of labor which the book has cost its author, has been evolved a work of great literay depth, breadth and variety. Its conclusion is a glowing epitome, full of promise for the South of to-day.

True to her past, the South is not living in it. A wonderful future is before her. She is richer than was the whole United States at the beginning of the War of Secession; in a quarter of a century her cotton production has doubled, her manufactures quadrupled. In one decade, her farm property increased in value twenty-six per cent., her manufacturing output forty-seven; her farm products nearly one hundred. Her railroad and banking interests give as strong indications of her vigorous new life. Immigrants from East and West and North and over seas are seeking homes within her borders. The South is no decadent land, but a land where "the trees are hung with gold," a land of new orchards and vineyards and market-gardens; of luscious berries and melons; of wheat and corn and tobacco and much cattle and poultry; of tea-gardens; and rice and sugar plantations and of fields white with cotton for the clothing of the nations. She is the land of balm and bloom, of bird-songs, of the warm hand and the open door.

On An Industrial Farm Home

ADERS of this journal are already familiar with the story of "The Industrial Gospel Farm," which ap- in these pages some time ago. It is ed by Rev. and Mrs. I. E. Kimball, moved their Home and Bible School ermont to Tappan, New York, thus making it more accessible to pro- inmates, but also putting them- ithin reach of the best market in t for country produce of every kind. m is intended primarily to serve as for men, who have learned from perience that "the wages of sin is l" men who have paused with their on the very brink of destruction, rough Rescue Missions or Christian s personally have been brought to and higher realization of life. To hen as these the Tappan farm, of 243 is indeed a haven of refuge; and its healthy outdoor rest and work ed do for their debilitated bodies, est superintendent and his wife do ir seeking souls. The only requisite mission which any man needs to whether he is just from the gates of n or rescued from the depths of a y "dive," are "a willingness to and an honest desire to understand ble."

Lumbering at the Tappan Industrial Home

ing of the precious hymns of promise, lenty of time for Bible study, fill the r morning and evening hours. The der of the time is given over to farm work, which has already pro- big results. The earth has yielded rease in vegetables for the family and fodder for the stock. Young cattle have been raised, and the products of a dairy, which sixteen cows sustain, find ready sale in near-by New York City. Fresh garden supplies are never too abundant to find customers; and during the winter the men on the place were spurred to unusual energy in cutting and loading upon cars the poplar trees which had been sold to a match factory, because the sum of money they brought just paid a bill which was almost due.

The weekly expenses are met by the dairy, but before the old farm can be brought to its full measure of usefulness the house must be repaired and a barn built. Some clothing has already been received from considerate friends, but the need always exists.

The recently reclaimed men—weak as infants in their power to stand alone—ignorant, too, as little children of the path upward, find in the Tappan Farm a place in which to renew their strength, to "put on the armor of righteousness," and to prepare to fill their places in the great world. Several such men have had permanent work secured for them upon farms; others, rescued from the city's sinks of iniquity, have gone back, "clothed and in their right minds," to good positions.

One man, too dazed upon his arrival to talk clearly, became thoroughly regenerated, and, visiting the farm and the true friends who had welcomed him there in his extremity, he said: "I haven't wanted a drink since that first morning when you all knelt to thank God for protecting me through my debauch, and bringing me to this quiet place to 'get right' with Him."

We bespeak from THE CHRISTIAN HERALD family their interest and their prayers for this eminently practical work of spiritual life-saving, with its consequent rehabilitation of the physical and moral man, who has been "down to the depths."

es," she answered; and she let her remain an instant in the grasp of rong, firm man's hand that held it and then raised it to his lips.

en he arose to go, Ruth said, as an afterthought: "Father will be that he did not see you. He was , and retired early."

hank God!" Duncan murmured his breath; but Ruth only heard y courteously: "I shall hope to be ted to your father to-morrow. I oming to-morrow, and to-morrow, o-morrow. You cannot keep me sweetheart, for I have returned to ur valentine."

was late that night before Ruth Lind- ept. "To-morrow, and to-morrow, o-morrow," she kept saying over and in a happy dream. She had not ed that all the years there had been n away in her heart a memory of allant youth who had been her de a score of years before. The t youth had disappeared. In his was a man of presence, a little with crisp curls turning gray, a e jaw, a firm chin, and eyes that looked the world in the face with fearless honesty. She liked this Duncan Stewart, and she knew he would win her. Indeed, she knew herself already half won. He, too, must have seen a change. Had she read his mind aright, she would have known that he thought the woman had more than fulfilled the beautiful promise of her girlhood.

Later on there was a wedding; and Mr. Lindsay, more a Chesterfield than ever, gave the bride away. Mary and Jenny were in the seventh heaven of delight, because they were bridesmaids to their dear Miss Ruth. When the days came that Mrs. Duncan Stewart lived in a grand house, with her father established on one floor of it, to his heart's content, pottering over his manuscript with the same perfervid anticipation, never finishing anything, but always proud and happy, when Duncan and his wife went to and fro at their will, and she saw again something of the great world, she was often able to send many lovely gifts to the romantic twins, who had, they were sure, guided her lover back to her on St. Valentine's Eve.

but you cannot tell which one

She is no longer a girl in years, but Pompeian Massage Cream has enabled her to retain her girlish freshness of complexion—her youthful curves of face and neck—her smooth, unwrinkled skin. It is only when sallowness, wrinkles, angles or flabbiness of flesh and double-chins come that a woman's appearance gives the world a chance to say that "she is past her prime." Pompeian Massage Cream, if used regularly for a few minutes each day, will keep time from writing its record upon your face.

Instead of the pathetically unsuccessful substitute for beauty given by cosmetics, by aiding nature in nature's own method, gives fresh, wholesome, natural beauty to face and neck. It frees the pores of skin-stifling accumulations, induces a healthy blood-circulation, softens the muscles and makes the flesh firm but mobile. It contains nothing that can promote hair-growth or cause injury to the most delicate skin. No imitation has the properties of the genuine, and many of the imitations are actually harmful. Remember the exact name and trade-mark.

Pompeian Massage Cream

Test it with Sample and Booklet, Sent Free

Simply fill in and mail us the coupon, and we will send you a liberal sample, together with our illustrated book on Facial Massage, an invaluable guide for the proper care of the skin.

We prefer you to buy of your dealer whenever possible, but do not accept a substitute for Pompeian under any circumstances. If your dealer does not keep it, we will send a 50-cent or $1.00 jar of the cream, postpaid on receipt of price.

God's Covenant with Abraham

International Sunday School Lesson for February 24,
*By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

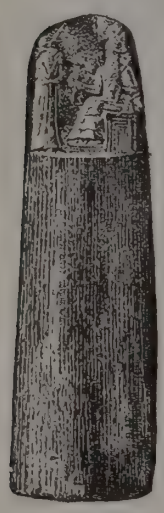
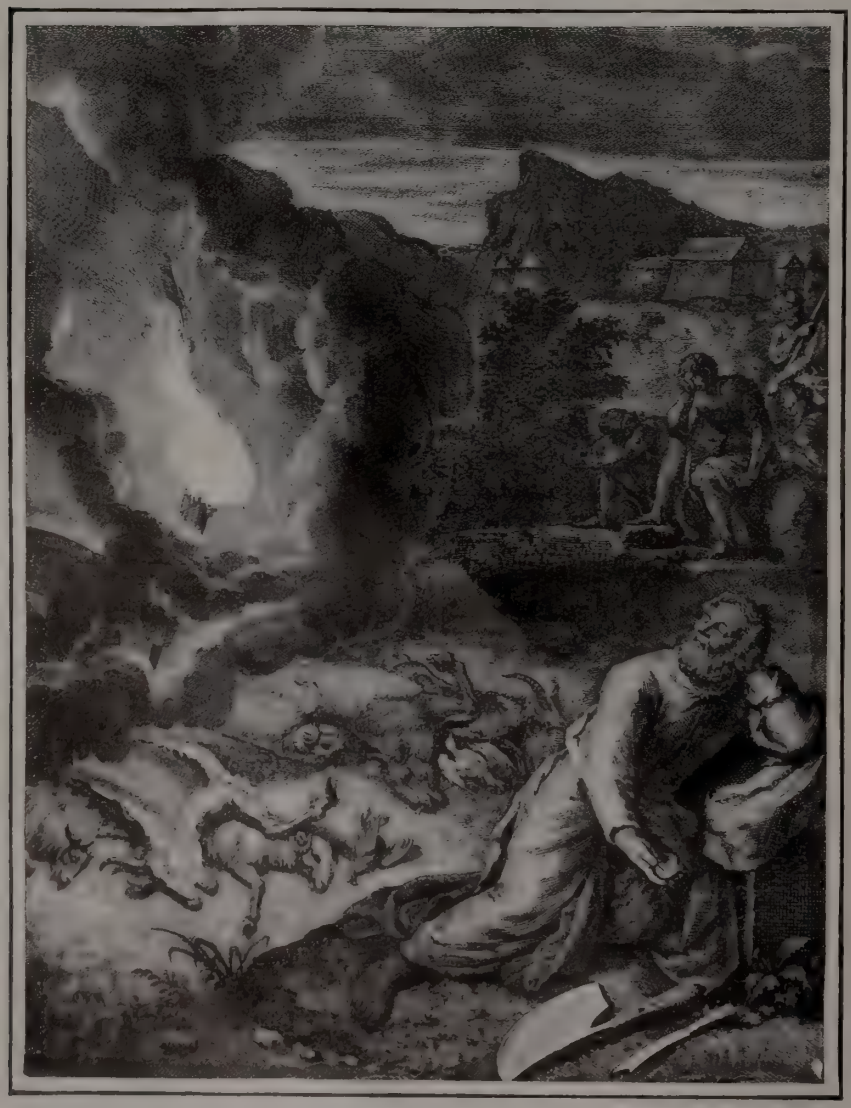
THE handwriting of God has even been seen in fire. So Belshazzar saw it; so the Israelites saw it when God was saying to them in the pillar of fire: "This is the way;" or he went before them, leading them toward the Land of Promise. There is a legend among the Jews that God wrote the Ten Commandments with fire on two great blocks of blue lapis lazuli. Here is an actual tablet of the age of Abraham, found in 1901, representing the King Hammurabi (Amraphel, Genesis 14: 1) receiving laws from his god. The foolishness and wickedness of Lot have been deeply impressed upon Abram, by the expedition he has just made to recover Lot and his family and his possessions from the heathen kings who had made a descent upon the city of Sodom.



Relic of Hammurabi



A Dutch Artist's Conception of the Scene of the Covenant

Abram's loneliness and disappointment are deepened, as he thinks many years have passed since God gave him the promise that he should be the father of a great nation, for as yet not even one son has been born to him. But Abram is not out of God's sight, and God sees that he needs assurance. And he graciously gives it to him in a form that is imparted night after night. God speaks to Abram, and bids him come out of his tent and look up toward the stars, and Abram sees the heaven written all over with them. God tells Abram to count them. There were more than he could count, for there were more than he could see. And God said to him, "The number of thy children shall be as the number of the stars." And Abram believed in God's promise, and his loneliness vanished.

The Covenant Ratified

There was still another matter in which Abram needed assurance from God. It was that he should have for his possession the Promised Land, for as yet he had to contend against the vile inhabitants whom he found there. Again, God wrote in fire for Abram. A smoking furnace and a burning lamp were the instruments which God used; a heifer, three years old, and a she goat and a ram were each cut in halves and laid in two piles; a turtle dove laid on one pile, and a young pigeon on the other, and a path between. These things God had told Abram to prepare. It was as if God would give a deed of final and perpetual gift to Abram for the land.

The ancient form of a deed was a duplicate writing, with a blank space between to be severed by an irregular cut or tear, the indentures thus made to be fitted into each other in case proof of ownership should be called for. The "deed" in this case had a special significance, as, instead of parchment, flesh and blood were used as typical of the sacrifices with which man could hold communion with God. Such a form of agreement between man and man was not uncommon at that time, but never was a

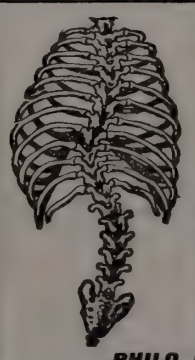
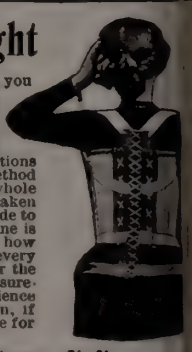
Getting What You Ask For!



Crooked Spines Made Straight



If you are suffering from any form of spinal trouble, you can be relieved in your own home without pain or discomfort. A wonderful anatomical appliance has been invented by a man who relieved himself of spinal curvature. Its results are marvelous. It is nature's own method. The scientific and medical world is amazed at the work being effected. Noted physicians in prominent medical institutions and in private practice are endorsing it. The Sheldon Method relieves the pressure at the affected parts of the spine, the whole spine is invigorated and strengthened, all soreness is taken out of the back, the cartilage between the vertebræ is made to expand, the contracted muscles are relaxed and the spine is straightened. There is bright hope for you, no matter how long you have suffered. We have strong testimonials from every State in the Union. The appliances are being sent all over the world. Each one is made to order from individual measurements and fits perfectly. There is positively no inconvenience in wearing. We let you use it 30 days, and then, if unsatisfactory, return it and get your money back. Write for our new book, giving full information and references.

d of property made in so impressive a before. The solemnity of it seemed ost to overpower Abram, but he was ssured by God that the land he had mised should become the inheritance of family, though a period should intervene n they would not be in actual possession
t. God promised Abram that it should be place of his sepulchre, a promise whose filment in his tomb at Hebron the ple of three great religions, Hebrew, hammedan and Christian, celebrate by rimages. Again Abram believed God, it was counted to him for righteousness.

The Central Fact

ull assurance of faith is the central fact this lesson. Let us see how Abram got and get it ourselves.

"Fear not, Abram; I am thy shield, and exceeding great reward." These words God were divine answers to unspoken rs of Abram, that had been prompted two events of the preceding chapter.
e tribal chiefs had conquered Sodom carried away Lot and his property as il. Abram might have said that Lot getting the fitting reward of risking soul for Sodom property. But unself-ly and courageously he marshaled his vants for a strategic night attack. After excitement of his brave battle and his erous renunciation were past, the re-ion that follows great efforts had come, it came to Elijah when he ran from ebel after his victory on Carmel; as it ne even to Christ after his baptism in wilderness temptation. Abram had ben to fear the revenge which his mighty s might take for a defeat he could not e put upon them with his scanty force ept by the strategy of a night attack.
that unspoken fear God said, "I am shield." Why should we fear any-ng with him looking at us?

Reaction After Victory

But Abram was also thinking, in tha r of nervous exhaustion, that perhaps he d been foolish to refuse altogether the h spoil that belonged to him, not only the rules of war, but also by the free er of the King of Sodom. To that fear d said, "I am thy exceeding great re-rd." When will men learn that the atest rewards we can win are not things, t friends—the esteem and affection of d and man. To get property at the t of self-respect and the respect of ers, is to win pennies at the cost of gold.
a Memorial Day service, in Boston, in theatre, Mrs. Julia Ward Howe's imrtal "Battle Hymn of the Republic" s sung by Myron W. Whitney. The max was reached when the last verse ne, and they could see the splendid ite head trembling, as her aged voice ned in as Whitney sang "In the glory the lilies Christ was born across the
"; and by the time he had reached the rds, "As he died to make men holy, let die to make men free," the whole vast dience was on its feet, sobbing and sing-
. What is a million dollars compared th such a reward in the world's loving eem won by a heartfelt service to lib-y! To win the respect even of the two rsons who know you best, God and your-f, by an honest and generous life, that more than any reward that sacrifices rsonal qualities for mere things.

"Number the stars; . . . so shall thy seed
." When God had spoken to the un-ken fears of Abram, he was encouraged tell God of yet another fear, namely, at God would forget his promise to give n children, and through them "make him great nation" (Gen. 12: 2).

One of the seven wonders of the Bible is d's tenderness to little faith. The Bible full of fear-nots as sweet as forget-mets. Preachers and teachers sometimes eak as if God would give no heed except great faith. But how gently Jesus always alt with little faith, which was the broken ed he would not break, the smoking flax f a lamp that should have shined) that would not quench. "If thou canst do ything," said the desperate parents of e demoniac boy to Jesus, "have compasn on us and help us." Jesus exclaimed:
f thou canst! All things are possible to him that believeth." And the father answered: "Lord, I believe: help thou mine unbelief." His faith was so small he must frankly call it "unbelief," and yet Jesus answered it and saved the boy. In the storm at sea Jesus said to his apostles, who were afraid, though the Saviour was beside them, "Why are ye fearful, ye of little faith? How is it ye have no faith?" And yet that feeble faith that could only cry, "Lord, save us; we perish," was answered. Let no one fear to pray because he only half believes it will be of any use. Let the honest doubter, like Abram, tell God his doubts frankly in order that God may give to him, as to Abram, full assurance of faith in place of the folly of fear.

The Fulfilment

Instead of resenting Abram's frank and honest doubt, God repeats his promise of a great posterity by pointing him to the stars: "So shall thy seed be," a promise more than fulfilled in the millions on millions of Jews that have lived, and in the millions on millions of Christians that Paul declares are yet more truly "the seed of Abraham," in that they are spiritual children of Christ, the Seed of Abram (Gal. 3:29).

The stars seemed to say to Abram—and let them nightly say to us:

> Fearest sometimes that thy Father
> Hath forgot?
> When the clouds around thee gather,
> Doubt him not;
> Always hath the daylight broken,
> Always hath he comfort spoken;
> Better hath he been for years,
> Than thy fears.

Since God made the stars forget-me-nots of his promises, let every vision of the sky recall his "exceeding great and precious promises" to us, that "shine as a light in a dark place." It is said there are thirty one thousand promises in the Bible. Most of these stars Abram could not see (Heb. 11:13). Because of these added promises and the long record of their manifold fulfilment down to our own day, we should be even stronger than he in faith and faithfulness. Are you tempest-tossed with doubts? "Look now toward heaven." Forget yourself in the promise that allures you to save others: "They that turn many to righteousness shall shine as the stars forever and ever." The best cure of doubt is doing good. It was Carlyle who said, out of his own struggles with doubt: "Let him who gropes painfully in darkness or uncertain light, and prays vehemently that the dawn may ripen into day, lay this precept well to heart: 'Do the duty which lies nearest to thee,' which thou knowest to be a duty; thy second duty will have already become clearer."

He believed in Jehovah; and he counted it to him for righteousness. Some men who boast of their practicality see no values except in deeds. But all effective doing must be founded on being. We must not be always doing; we must take time to be. And in order to be, we must believe. No man can ultimately be better than his aims and ideals and inmost preferences and beliefs. The thing God promised Abram was seemingly incredible, but the God who said it Abram knew could be relied on. Let us think less of the difficulties in the promises than of the truth and power of the Promiser.

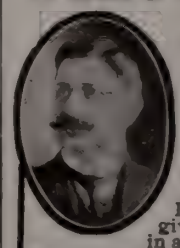
Where the Money Is IN Poultry



You have heard of the Big Profits in the Poultry Business. If you would know how they are made, send two dimes for a copy of my book "Eggs, Broilers and Roasters." It gives the cost of production in all branches of the poultry business. It gives the market quotations week by week, averaged for three years. It shows when a chick hatched any week in the year could be marketed as a broiler or as a roasting chicken, and the profit it would make. It also tells of the profits of egg production, and how best to secure them.

A copy of my Poultry Equipment Catalog will tell you all about my Model Incubators and Brooders. These machines are the greatest Hatchers and Artificial Mothers the world has seen. With these hatchers and rearers we raised over twenty thousand chickens the past season at the Model Farm—more than has ever been raised on any other farm in a season. We are raising 100,000 this season. Let me tell you about it.

If you want to make money with poultry I can help you. I can start you right. My Model Incubators and Brooders make an economical and efficient equipment. Their use, coupled with the instructions given in my literature precludes failure. Write me today.

Missions in the Islands*

WHEN the final story of foreign missions is written, the chapter on the work in the islands of the South Sea will be one of the most intensely interesting. It is so, not only because of the heroic daring of the missionaries, but because of the startling contrast in the condition of the islands, which has been effected in a comparatively short time. It is sometimes said of the missionary that he does harm in carrying religion and civilization to "innocent children of nature" who are happy and contented without them. People who talk in that way ought to learn what was the condition of the natives of Micronesia a hundred years ago. The first missionaries to those islands found that Captain Cook had not exaggerated when he described the horrors he witnessed. Crime and licentiousness held undisputed sway. The slaughter of bloody battles provided the people with materials for a loathsome feast; polygamy in its most revolting form prevailed and infanticide was common. Disgusting cruelties were perpetrated at the caprice of the chiefs, and horrible vices were practised. These sweet, "innocent children of nature" had become such creatures as we conceive the devil to be. Yet now in the islands that have been won by missionary labor, there is peace, order and a higher degree of morality than that of some of our own cities. If it could be proved that there is no life beyond the grave, there would be reason for rejoicing that Christianity had brought to those miserable islanders a happy and a cleaner life.

After a hundred years of teaching and preaching there are some islands in which the bulk of the inhabitants are Christians, and these have been sending evangelists to their neighbors to tell them what Christianity has done for them. Dr. Paton of the New Hebrides group has passed through innumerable dangers to die peacefully in his bed. Time and again the rifle has been leveled at him, and on one occasion he stood arguing with two savages while he held in each hand the muzzle of a weapon. Williams and Chalmers and others perished under the murderous clubs, but the work never halted. Now the captains of ships who formerly dared any peril of the ocean-storm rather than seek refuge on the islands, now know that they would be sure of kindness and hospitality if they need it, and point to the little native churches as the signs of the power that has effected the transformation.

Christ's Prayer for Us†

ON the eve of the great struggle of Christ's life, when he knew that the bitter cup which he begged might be taken from him was near his lips, when, as he realized, the humiliation, the mocking, the scourging and the crucifixion would come upon him within twenty-four hours, he prayed. We can understand how his soul must have yearned for communion with his Father. Is it not strange that in that solemn hour his thoughts should have been occupied with us—the Christians of the twentieth century? We had a share in his thoughts and prayers. He prayed for his disciples, and then he thought of others—"Not for these alone, but for them also who shall believe on me through their word." Looking down through the centuries, he saw us and prayed for us.

It was beautiful and pathetic, that concern and that prayer, when his soul was on the verge of an agonizing death. If we heard that some beloved friend, in a distant land surrounded by fierce enemies, had spared a moment to think of us and utter a prayer for us, how anxious we should be to know what that prayer was and to strive for its fulfilment. And this, too, was the prayer of one who knew what would be best for us, whose judgment and love we could trust. Every fibre of our nature would thrill at that tender memory.

Well, we know what it was that Jesus desired for us. It was unity and participation in his spirit. "That they may be one . . . I in them and thou in me." How strange it is that, knowing this, we bicker with one another, quarrel with one another, and go our own way, indifferent to the dictates of his spirit. It is difficult to believe that we love him, and yet are so heedless of his solemn prayer. It is not so much that we belong to different denominations, but that we lack the spirit of union that would bring us near to brothers of another name. It is that in every emergency, in every crisis, in every act of our lives, we decide for ourselves without regard for him—that we never ask "What would Jesus do"? No wonder that the world is not convinced of the power of Christianity. When that prayer is fulfilled and Christians love one another and seek Christ's spirit, then, as he said, "The world will know."

A Gospel Marvel in Africa

A missionary in Uganda, Mr. C. W. Hattersly, sends a remarkable story. It tells how the son of Bishop Hannington, who met a martyr's death twenty years ago, has recently had the joy of baptizing the son of his father's murderer. Mr. Hattersly says:

"Luba, the old chief in Busoga, who carried out King Mwanga's orders and acted as the murderer of Bishop Hannington, is still a leading chief in Busoga and still a heathen, although he occasionally attends church. Some months ago, Luba's son, together with several other sons of various chiefs in Busoga, came to live in the mission station. After a very short time there, friendly pressure was brought to bear on Luba, and he agreed to pay the fee and allow his son, whose name was Mubinyo ("very bad boy"), to be entered as a boarder in Mengo High School. During his fifteen months' residence there, Mubinyo has been prepared for his baptism and was on April 8 baptized by the Rev. J. Hannington, in Namirembo Cathedral.

"Mubi has taken the name of Timothy, and if one may judge of what he will be from present signs, the boy will prove a fitting holder of the name of the famous servant of Christ. Of the one hundred and three boys in this school, none shows greater promise than Timothy. Amiable, cleanly, painstaking, and clever, he is truly anxious to follow the Saviour."

Answered Prayers

M. M. M., Michigan. "God has proved to me that he hears and answers prayer."

Mrs. H. C. H., Iowa. "God has answered my prayer in converting my husband and sons to his service."

Reader, North Carolina. "I am sure He knows, and gives what is best to those who love and trust him. I have faith that God will continue to heed my prayers, as he has always done."

S. W. D., Maine. "I want to take this way of thankfully acknowledging answers to prayer. I can say that in fifty years' walk with God, I have always found him ready to help in every time of need."

M. E. F., New York. "I know that God does answer prayers of humble souls if we ask believing. He is my strength, physically and spiritually; I am devoutly thankful, and am encouraged to trust him with all my future."

C. S. A., Wyoming. "God has been answering my prayers for nearly fifty years, and sometimes in a wondrous manner. Recently my last child united with the Church, for which I praise God and rejoice. His promises are sure."

A True Believer, Virginia. "God has been more than merciful to me in answering my prayers, if I pray to him faithfully and work meanwhile. The answer to a recent petition has come in such a manner as to leave no doubt whatever that it is a direct answer to prayer."

Called Higher

Moses T. Jones, of Rewey, Wis., an old-time subscriber to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, is at rest for evermore.

Thomas R. Jackson died on November 22, 1906, in University Place, Neb., having just passed his seventy-ninth birthday. He was converted to Christ in 1860, and lived a consistent life until the end.

Francis Glass died at his home in Knightstown, Ind., November 21, 1906, in his eighty-fifth year. He united with the Presbyterian Church in 1853, and was a good Christian man, who had the respect of all who knew him.

Mrs. M. S. Deeter died on November 21, 1906, at Wingate, Ind., in her forty-fourth year. She was a true Christian and not afraid to die. She leaves both parents, her husband, son and daughter in bereavement.

Sallie, wife of James M. Bradford, died recently at her home near Tenth Legion, Va., aged sixty-four years. Mrs. Bradford was a devoted wife and mother, and beloved in her community for her many acts of charity.

Miss Melissa A. Smith died at her home in Lawsville, Pa., on June 23, 1906, passing away on her seventy-ninth birthday. She had been a successful teacher in her own county, and was a useful member and worker of the Presbyterian Church.

Father of the Faithful

By Mrs. M. Baxter

THERE is a difference between the covenant with Noah and the covenant with Abraham. Noah knew that if he had taken part with the judged world, he would have perished in the universal destruction. No such calamity threatened Abraham had he remained in his country and in his father's house. If he had remained there he might, like the rich man, have received in his lifetime his good things (Luke 15:25), but he deliberately chose God at any cost, at any risk, and making no condition whatsoever; he "went out, not knowing whither he went" (Heb. 11 : 8).

There was no intrinsic perfection in Abram; equally with Elijah, he was a man subject to like passions as we are (James 5 : 17), and he made a terrible mistake when he denied his wife in Egypt and in Gerar (Gen. 12 : 11-20; 20 : 2-11), and again in his taking Hagar, at Sarah's suggestion (chap. 16); but the bent of his life was to consider God before himself and all else. God had found in Abraham a heart which responded to his own, something which answered to him. Abraham believed God (Gen. 15 : 6). Therefore this father of them that believe, must pass through a severe school in the tests to which his faith should be put, in order that he might become a spiritual progenitor of a spiritual seed, and through his history, incorporated in the living, powerful Word of God, beget a race of men of faith. Thus we can understand how, after his acting on human lines, and yielding to the human pressure of Sarah his wife, in taking Hagar, to help God to fulfil his promise, thirteen years of silence must take place between him and his God, during which there is no mention of his building an altar, or of God speaking to him.

But God knew when this dignified token of his displeasure was enough, and, in his wondrous grace, he was first to break the silence. It was when Abram was ninety and nine years old that God appeared to him, and said unto him: "I am the Almighty God: walk before me, and be thou perfect. And I will make my covenant between me and thee, and will multiply thee exceedingly" (Gen. 17 : 1, 2). It was a reproof; why should Abraham have tried to help the Almighty? But it was also a guarantee of power for Abraham to fulfil his side of the covenant. In God's covenant with Noah, man had no more part than the animal creation; he was a simple recipient of blessing. With Abram it was otherwise.

By the very fact of God's Almightiness, revealed to him, God appealed to him to walk before him and be perfect. Enoch and Noah had walked with God, Abram was to walk before him as, later on, Elijah stood before the Lord God of Israel. Abram was to prove God's Almightiness in respect to his vocation of father, in which, first by denying his wife, and afterwards by taking Hagar, he had sinned just in failing to count on God's Almightiness. Oh, how wonderful it is that God does his mighty works just exactly in the place of man's failure! How we see that our weakness and failure—seen by God long before it is clear to us—is no hindrance to him! He only wants to have the ruin in his own hands, and then he can recreate. How could the fallible Abraham walk before God after he had so signally failed? Just by the very knowledge of his fallibility which would make him count on God's Almightiness. While he was loyal to God, and walked before him in full sight of his Almightiness, God would keep him in a perfect way.

Abram had learned something in those years of silence; he knew now how to be ashamed; he "fell on his face." God can talk with a man who lies upon his face ashamed before the Holy One.

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but as evidence of genuineness and good faith. Where an answer by mail is desired, ten cents in postage stamps must be forwarded by the writers, with full address.

A. N., New York. Who invented the Welsbach light?

It is the invention of Carl Auer von Welsbach, an Austrian. In Europe it is called the Auer light. The first one was produced about 1884.

Mrs. J. B., Ord, Neb. I have read your call for aid for China. I have $8.60 which I owe to God as a tenth on some stock I sold. Would I be doing my Father's will if I send this money to the relief of the famine sufferers?

An eminent religious writer has well said: "I can conceive of no way in which we can serve our Lord so acceptably as by ministering to his children." We certainly think you are serving God most directly by contributing your tithe to the starving people of China. "Deal thy bread to the hungry . . . then shall thy light break forth as the morning."

Mrs. T. M. Where was Madame Patti, the "Queen of Song," born and educated?

Madame Adelina Maria Clorinda Patti was born in Madrid, Spain, in 1843, of Italian parentage. Her early studies were largely pursued in New York State, and she sang in the city of New York at an early age.

M. J. C., Lafayette, N. Y. How was the mistake about the date of our Lord's birth made?

We have now no means of knowing how the mistake was made, and it is not important. All that we do know is that it was a mistake. We know that Herod, who slew the children in Christ's infancy, was not alive in the year one, and is proved by official records to have been dead about four years. Thus we are sure that the date fixed for Christ's birth is wrong. Besides this, the year of the taxing mentioned by Luke (2:2), is additional proof that Christ was born B.C. 5.

V. G. O., Port Byron, Me., writes apropos of a recent paragraph in the MAIL-BAG about dairying on Sunday:

Milk is a perishable commodity, and must be delivered to consumers as quickly as possible if it is to be fit to use. So far, Sunday work is imperative, and need disturb no man's conscience. In making cheese and butter, a portion of the work, sometimes more, sometimes less, can be postponed to another day. The Christian dairyman will do just as little Sunday work as possible without wasting his product. The man who cares nothing for the Sabbath will usually do as much work as he can on that day, whatever his occupation, even if he is idle the balance of the week. Where the business is conducted on a large scale, as in creameries and cheese factories, the question is more complex, as larger interests are involved, but the same rule holds. He who desires to honor the Sabbath will find a way to do so.

B. E. O., West Finley, Pa. 1. If Adam and Eve were the first people on earth where did Cain get his wife? 2. Does not the theory of Evolution rob the Bible record of creation of much of its beauty? 3. If, as we are told, the world is becoming worse, can Christianity be considered a success?

1. The question about Cain's wife is a familiar one. We answer it about once a year, though it is sent to us on an average about once a week. You will see, if you turn to Genesis, 5:4, that Adam lived more than nine hundred years, begetting sons and daughters. Do you not think some of them must in that long period have reached a marriageable age? Cain would not be restricted by the law against marriage with near relatives. 2. The trouble with Evolution is not so much that it robs the Biblical record of beauty, as that it denies its truth, which is a much more serious matter. 3. It depends on how you estimate success. If a man takes up an acre on the edge of the desert and plants it with wheat, which produces year after year a larger and still larger harvest, would you say it was not a success because of the increase of weeds in the surrounding desert? Christianity succeeds in what it sets out to do, by making better men of all who accept it. It cannot be said to fail in cases where it is not tried.

C. S., Frankfort, N. Y. Where did the Visigoths live before they settled in Spain?

They were the Western Goths, and came from Scandinavia. They settled in Moesia, in A. D. 376. They went into Gaul, now France, in 412, and two years later founded a kingdom in Spain. This was broken up by the Moors in 712.

D. T., Eldorado, O. How can a man say with a clear conscience that he is saved, when he has simply accepted Christ as his Saviour and has not yet obeyed the commandments?

Christ saves those who put their faith in him. As Paul told the jailer at Philippi (Acts 16:31), "Believe on the Lord Jesus and thou shalt be saved." He does not ask a man if he has kept the commandments before he saves him. He saves the sinner in his sin if he believes on him, and then begins to save him from his sin and to teach him what he must do.

N. A. W. H., Creswell, Ore. Why do some persons, in closing a prayer, use these words, "for Jesus' sake," when they should say, "we ask it in Jesus' name"?

The idea is virtually the same. It is only a different form of expression.

E. J. V., Morrisonville, N. Y. Were the sun, moon and stars made at the same period of time, as the Bible states?

We are not sure that the Bible makes that statement about the stars. It says, "He made the stars also," but is not explicit about the time. There are many scientific theories as to the age of the heavenly bodies, and even on the question of the age of our own earth scientists are not agreed. The Bible was not written for the purpose of teaching science, but to lead men to God. It does not speak of the creation in scientific terms, but refers vaguely to "the beginning" and is concerned only in emphasizing the fact that the whole universe had its origin in God. We presume, therefore, that when science declares the age of the universe, Christians will have no difficulty in accepting a sound theory.

C. M. F., Stafford, Conn. 1. How long has the Mardi Gras been celebrated in New Orleans? 2. Is it a religious festivity?

1. It has been observed, at broken intervals, for nearly three-quarters of a century, and continuously each year since the close of the Civil War. In 1827 the first grand street procession of masqueraders took place, a number of fashionable young creole gentlemen having just returned from finishing a Parisian education. 2. It was originally in Rome. The name itself—Mardi, Tuesday, and Gras, fat—signifying that on this day the pleasures of the flesh were to be laid aside in one last burst of revelry preceding the quiet of the Lenten season.

S. E. R., Collinsville, Ala. What is it to believe with the heart? If faith is a gift of God, must we not wait for it?

The belief of the heart is full confidence, as you believe in father and mother or your wife. It differs from the belief in a theory or a statement which you naturally desire to have proved to you before you believe it. It is as when you are ill and put your case in the hands of a physician, or when you need a friend and go to one in whom you have confidence. There is no need to wait for God to give you faith; he is ing to help you and give you faith a other graces. If you commit yourself servedly into Christ's hands, show you fidence in him, even if you have doub yourself, as did the man in the G (Mark 9:24), he will save you. He you, as he asked the blind men (M 9:28), "Believest thou that I am able this?" If you do believe this and yo him so honestly and give yourself to h fulfil his will, he will save you.

W. G. W., Manton, Mich. Who is governor Panama Canal Zone?

Hon. Charles E. Magoon.

Mrs. Emily M., Herkimer, N. Y. Which wa eldest son of Noah? I was told quite rec that Japheth was the eldest, whereas always taught he was the youngest.

Shem was the eldest, Japheth the se son, and Ham the third or youngest. Gen. 10: 21, and 9: 24. These pass would seem to be conclusive, although genealogies begin with Japheth's desc ants.

M. T. S., Danville, Ill. Is the rumor true, w has lately reached me, that the famous doggerel, "Old Grimes is dead," is fou upon fact?

Quite true. The "Old Grimes" ho has for many years been one of the la marks always pointed out to stranger the town of Hubbardston, Mass. It built in 1761 by the father of Ephr Grimes, about whom Albert Gordon Gre wrote the song. The fine old colo house was destroyed by fire only month.

Telling Fortunes in Constantinople

The women of Turkey are believers in "fate" and "luck." Ignorant and superstitious to the last degree, they are exceedingly fond of consulting the public oracles, known as "fortune tellers," who are to be found in every Turkish city. The latter pretend to tell the future by the use of beans, and should their forecast please the credulous customer, they are rewarded with a few piastres.

THE WORLD'S STRANGEST FESTIVAL

An Eye-Witness Describes the Hindu Women's Pilgrimage to the Shrine of Siddapah

Y a liberal estimate, not more than one-seventh of India's three hundred million people can read and write. The remaining six-sevenths ute benighted India, bound with the ains of caste and custom, ignorance uperstition. In March, 1905, I had the unique ence of attending a Hindu festival that had before been visited by a white man, so I was told, s it been visited by one since. The scenes were an astonishment even to one that had spent y-two years in India—ten as a child and twelve missionary. Through the influence of a Hindu , I was permitted to take the phohs of the women bathing and prost before the temple. They are the ones in existence, and have never been published.

he Cuddapah district of the Madras lency, South India, nestled among alkonda Hills, is a beautiful valley as Talakona, signifying "chief ," or "head valley"; for it is the valley of the western slope of the alay Hills, thus named from one of carnations of Vishnu, to whom the nown Tirupati Hill is dedicated. alakona Temple is a very small affair ardly deserves the appellation of e. It is the only building at the , and no one lives there the year . Near the temple is a good grove, tents can be pitched.

m the temple a picturesque path up nearly two miles to the main e of the Talakona Valley, namely vaterfall. The foliage is different that of the plains; bamboos grow fusion, and as one ascends towards all maidenhair and other beautiful are found. The approach to the s very beautiful. The water falls two hundred feet or more down a pitous ledge on to a platform of black rock, and then flows over making another smaller fall. The f the precipice, over which the water making the main fall, cannot be seen from below, he water has the appearance of springing right up f the top of the ledge.

ere is also an upper fall over a mile and a-half the main fall. This upper fall is small, and of no al interest, save for the superstitious belief in its cy as a "sin-cleansing fall." This is indeed its . "Papanashanam" (Sin-remover). The popular belief is that when a sincere pilgrim, who has fulfilled the letter of the Hindu ceremonial laws, stands under the fall to bathe, his sins will be washed away, and as the water runs off his or her body and on to the rocks, it will appear white like milk. This apparent transformation occurs at certain times of the day, and the explanation is simple, namely, that the water breaks up into little bubbles, or spray, and, catching the rays of the sun, appears whitish.

The Women Prostrate Before the Temple of Siddapah

Talakona and its falls are famous mainly as the scene of the annual festival, which is held at the time of the new moon, the latter part of February, or early in March. In 1905, when I visited the place, there were five or six thousand pilgrims there. The festival attracts many disconsolate wives who have been denied the blessing of children; for the bathing in the falls and the performing of various other ceremonial acts are believed to result in the bestowing of progeny. "Seddaswaraswamy" (or "Siddapah" for short) is the heathen deity worshipped at Tolakona, and it is his favor that childless women come far to seek. Crowds of pilgrims assemble the evening before the festival at the adjacent villages, and early next morning walk seven miles to the temple, adjoining which each family selects its camp. After a little rest, the thousands of all castes and creeds start for the two falls in a long, unbroken chain of humanity, shouting "Govindar! G-o-o-vindar!" (the name of a popular deity) as they climb upwards. The path is lined with importunate religious mendicants of all sorts and descriptions, ringing bells, blowing horns, clanging gongs, and imploring the people for charity.

As the pilgrims arrive at the first and main fall there is great excitement, and the din of combined shouts, exultations and repetitions of "Govindar!" can be heard a long distance. There is a scramble to get under the fall, and members of a family are often separated from one another, and shout at the top of their voices in order to get together again. As the pilgrims get under the fall, they clap their hands over their heads and become vociferous in calling upon "Govindar." Many take cocoanuts and break them at the foot of the fall as a libation, and others, after the bath, are decorated with their caste marks on their foreheads.

Women seeking for an answer to their prayer for the blessing of children must first bathe, fully clothed, in this main fall, and then climb another mile and a-half to the second fall, "Papanashanam"—the Sin-remover; then again bathe and return in their wet clothes to the temple, a walk of about three miles. They must then go to the stream close by, get into the water and thoroughly soak their clothes again, and walk in this dripping state direct to the temple, where they prostrate themselves, face downwards, on the ground, with outstretched hands, in which they hold the betel leaf, areca nuts, a plaintain and flowers of some sort. Here they must lie until they fall asleep. If they have a favorable dream, it is a sign that their prayers will be granted. If no such sign be given, they must go again to the

TEXT: MATTHEW 16: 24
"If any one will come after me, let him deny himself"

THIS expression indicates the stages of the "Way to Life." I would like, in appealing to your individual experience, to draw near with you to the wisdom from above, personified in Christ our leader, and to show you the connection of these stages. They are designed, the one to prepare for the other, in order to entirely accomplish our mission.

Christ said, "If any man will come after me." Now, note well, that the "come after" is to engage one's self in the magnificent evolution of the whole destiny of humanity, in which the two elements, human and divine, are indissolubly united. For such a journey, it is very evident that there are some precautions to take, a method to practice, some rules to follow. It has its laws. The greatest things and the most beautiful are always the most difficult to realize. We find ourselves here entering upon a work which, in one sense, is natural, since it conforms to our nature and to our high destiny, but which at the same time demands some effort, some vigilance, and the support of a great inspiration coming from on high.

The Yoke Christ Offers

Seeing us, understanding us and knowing that, for the most part, we are dissatisfied with our achievements, uncertain of our course, disillusioned, wandering and suffering, Christ says to us: "You can follow me; I do not make any false promises. The path is rough and the way difficult. You must undergo a personal discipline, which I call a yoke. I invite you to accept it voluntarily, and assure you it will lead to liberty, deliverance and the development of your whole nature. Do you wish to try it? Then deny yourselves."

Behold then the method indicated. We say at once that it is contrary to our judgment, and does not seem reasonable. Would it not seem much more logical that, in order to accomplish his destiny, a being should identify himself more and more with himself, and assert himself as much as possible? To deny self is it not to give up becoming that which the eternal will has wished us to be? I admit that there is a certain self-denial that is mischievous. There exists a suppression of self, of one's nature, of the powers which God has given us, which is injurious. There is a renunciation which would be moral suicide. It is often learned and practiced. That is not the denial of which Christ speaks. To deny one's self is only possible if one has commenced by being himself. In order to understand what Jesus said, it is necessary for us, then, at first to notice the stages of life and their significance.

Individuality Preserved

The first stage, important, full of preparatory labor, of wonderful persistence, consists in the development of our personality. The whole universe, if you consider it in its evolutionary work, appears to us as engaged in producing personal character such as we see it existing in men. Through inorganic life and the successive orders of animal life, through the mists of unconsciousness, a light slowly makes its way. The consciousness of self is born. Man, during all the first part of his existence, retracing as it were the natural and historic steps which have preceded him, awakes to his personality. This personality should be encouraged and promoted to render it as complete as possible. It would be an injury, a wrong, to repress it, to hinder it, to oppose the development of it. Such an attempt would be a crime against life and its very beginning.

There is in each human being the realization of a divine thought, and if you do not respect that individuality, and the qualities that he bears and the aspirations which are his, you suppress God's own work in a human being. You misuse, for example, your right as father or mother when you prevent a child from becoming himself. You misuse your power of government, your power over society, when you prevent citizens from being themselves and having their own individuality and their own free convictions. You misuse your authority in a church when you attempt to compel uniformity and to prevent people from having a personal individual faith and obedience to the spirit which speaks to them. We must never regard the assertion of human individuality as a species of crime and the first cause of rebellion and culpable errors. It is not this self—this personal individuality that Christ calls us to deny.

Our first duty is to develop that individuality, to strengthen it, to give it freedom to grow and to exert itself. There is no other way to equip it for resistance to oppression and tyranny. This is the true education which arms the knight, makes his body vigorous, cultivates his spirit, gives him weapons and a stout heart, and then says to him—go forth.

The Use of Fruit

If we try to estimate all that is necessary in order to produce a truly normal human being, well-balanced, sane and forceful, we shall better understand how intense is that affection which nature puts into our hearts for those whose education has been confided to us. It is by God's profound purpose and intention and by his provision that parents feel the intense love of their children. In this love, if it is true and conscious of itself, is found a real perception of that which is precious in our children.

Each individual is, then, the result of an immense labor; labor which is good, whose origin rises even to the will of God himself. The result of this labor should be respected, in respecting individuality, in guarding its rights, in aiding it to unfold.

But there is another consideration. We may compare personality to a precious fruit which has ripened upon a tree surrounded by every care, having received the ripening beams of the sun and has drunk the sweet dew and profited by human culture. When this fruit is developed, there is danger lest the fruit may perish without being of service. So when personality is formed, equipped, established, the great danger for it is that it perish without having served its purpose.

As with the fruit, everything having been done to contribute to its perfection and development, the period of full maturity has come. The influences that have been exerted have not been applied to the fruit for its own pleasure, its own augmentation. The nutrition it has derived from the sunlight, from the humidity of the soil, from all the sources that nature contains, was not expended for the gratification of the fruit. That it should remain on the tree a spectacle of beauty, fine and luscious, was not the purpose contemplated. It is necessary that it fulfil the purpose of fruit. It must give itself to be eaten.

So it is with human character. It is a question of employing itself. The time is past when it drew to itself, assimilated, transformed all in order to grow. Now that one has arrived at maturity, one should give himself like fruit. Woe to the fruit that rots upon the tree, reluctant to give its beauty and sweetness to satisfy its owner. That is not the way to fulfil its destiny. Behold here the second stage of life.

The Stage of Maturity

It is at this second stage that Christ addresses us and to this that his advice applies. The majority of men consider themselves precious fruit which should be preserved. They shut themselves up as in a case, and then they decay. They perish, just as surely as does the best fruit when it is jealously preserved in some secure hiding-place. That is the end of fruit which would not be consumed during the time when it still possessed its sweetness.

Do you understand now why Christ said: "He who will come after me, let him deny himself; he who will save his life shall lose it, and he who will lose his life for my life shall find it"?

The most beautiful end of fruit, which really saves it, is to cut it in pieces and offer it to little children, to the guests who have come to your home, to the friends who are seated at your table. When we see our guests relish it and find it good, when they assimilate it, and it enters into the circulation, then the fruit becomes all which it can become, and succeeds in repaying generously all the trouble expended upon it. And in thinking of the service that it renders, one can say that neither the warmth of the caressing sun, the rainfall upon it at different seasons of the year, nor the flower from which it sprang in the springtime and around which the bees roamed, have been useless. All things in their turn have performed their fun and the fruit itself, when it has ripened and been has perfectly met its end.

Now, this is what men are unwilling to admit. are fruits, and they do not wish to be eaten. wish to be preserved; they are afraid to give selves. They are wood, and they do not wish transformed into planks and beams, cut into pie build houses. They are oil, and do not wish to in a lamp, for that would cause them to be slow sumed in producing light. In that way men mis deceive themselves, and this error makes them lo which is the supreme misfortune.

Sacrifice the Way to Life

Nothing great is done in the world unless som be given, unless something be consumed. warmth of the sun, which engenders life upon t something is consumed, is sacrificed. Wherever ture is nourished, wherever a child grows, there is fice. One offers to it, and it takes; its life flo upon the mold of sacrifice, accumulated as moss mulates in layers on the soil. True, life is a succ of sacrifices, well conceived, wisely performed, building one upon another, forms the foundation which the city rises.

There is a way of considering personality as t of all, which is the destruction of all. It causes d to men. They wall themselves up in their perso they barricade themselves, they bury themselve see the result; they are condemned to witness a evils that they have been trying to avoid.

My brothers, look at yourselves and your life. A at the height of your youth and vigor, with b intelligence, material powers, possessions, and a other gifts that you have—and the poorest have s what should happen? If you are equipped lik knight of whom I have spoken, there remains onl thing to be done, it is to show yourself a man, to yourself generously, simply, without fear, and w reserve. Otherwise you will soon become a mis slave, fearing to grow old, to diminish. And yo diminish every day the more surely as you shrink being employed.

Manage yourselves well, as one would manage c in order that it may produce. Make of your ca ties, of your natural acquired powers, of your g sure capital, which life cannot take away. Use selves, realize yourselves. The only things tha truly possesses are those that one has given.

The Lost Life

This is what Christ meant to say to all such The self-preservers, inveterate misers, tremblers, fear thieves that rob; who fear the rust that cor who dread the brigands who come to carry off for youth and vigor—all those men who, having clear sight, are destined to see it grow dim and go out, having solid bones, are destined one day to see waver under them like porters who are no longer eq the burden; to all those men to whom slow and inevi destruction is a kind of prison-house, in which the before dying, and extinguish themselves before light is completely obscured; to all these slave Master says: "Leave your chains, your jail, and deplorable hovels and follow me. Learn true wis and find how, in giving it, one saves his life." L made to be given. The poorest life given shines an incomparable lustre, becoming a diamond from w scintillates love, kindness and unconquerable hope.

Look at the world and what goes on there. T we are all pupils, in a school where one makes no gress, because one does not listen to the Master. the Master gives some great and beautiful les Christ is in accord with the lilies of the field, wit birds of the air, the grass upon the hills, the w which descends and the vapor which rises, with all laws inscribed within the human conscience, as we upon the rocks of the mountains.

See how our life is made. In the morning we nurslings, that is to say aspirants. We gather life

COLUMBIA'S NEW CHAPEL

OLUMBIA UNIVERSITY, New York City, has just dedicated one of the most beautiful chapels in America as the centre of the religious life of the students. Stokes. The names of the donors of this gift, representing more than $260,000, had been kept secret until the day of dedication.

When the corner-stone of the chapel was laid in September, 1904, the Archbishop of Canterbury, who was present to conduct the service, called attention to the fact that the religious interests of the institution had been zealously guarded through the years of its history during the growth of the College and its developement into a University, and repeated the prayer made by the Rev. Dr. Samuel Johnson, first president of the institution, upon the laying of the corner-stone August 23, 1756:

"May God Almighty grant that this college thus happily founded, may ever be enriched with his blessing; that it may increase and flourish, and be carried on to its entire perfection, to the glory of his name, and the adornment of his true religion and good literature, and to the greatest advantage of the public weal, to all posterities forevermore."

The oldest academic exercise of this University is a religious exercise, and the first official word uttered at any exercise of Columbia was a word of prayer. Although associated by charter and endowment with the Episcopal Church, it has always generously allied itself with "all who profess and call themselves Christians"; and while conforming to the forms of service of one church, "is ready to welcome to its pulpit any accredited teacher of the Christian religion." A religious census of the University shows a dozen different denominations represented among the students, over two-thirds of the number enrolled as church members. Daily religious services are held at the University, at Barnard College, and at Teachers' College, and instruction is give by the chaplain on two mornings of each week.

Earl Hall, a large building west of the library, was given to Columbia to be a centre of religious and philanthropic activities, and the Young Men's Christian Association was designated to carry on such work. Bible courses and courses of instruction in settlement work are conducted under its auspices. Barnard, also, has a flourishing Young Woman's Christian Association actively associated with mission and settlement work.

Cherishes All His Premiums

Dear Dr. Klopsch: I thank you for your beautiful and instructive premium, "Greatest Wonders of the World," which makes a fine addition to my already fair-sized library bearing the imprint of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. The first premium I ever received was a piece of olive wood from the Mount of Olives, near Jerusalem, given by the late Dr. Talmage, who was then editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD. Since then I have been the recipient of many valued CHRISTIAN HERALD gifts. With the exception of the International Bible, received in 1894, and the Red Letter New Testament in 1900, it would be hard for me to decide which of them all were the better.

ides—we take, we receive, we store up. Our duty grow to develop. The joy of those who watch us es precisely from that which improves us. No one ask more of man at this stage of life.

ut soon, and already in this preliminary period, ch might be called the entrance-way of youth, man ns to discover that if he only breathes and thinks himself, he remains too long an overgrown and selfish ling. Consequently, he feels himself urged in order emain in the current and up to his age to become a e less personal. Then come the young friendships, young companionships, which often evoke true ction. Later love enters our hearts. A true love t the same time the greatest exaltation of our powers of our being, the gift of ourselves, the desire to for others, forgetfulness of ourselves for those whom love. The true formula of love is this, "It is sweeter ive than to receive." Those who have never tasted profundity of this wisdom, neither understand the lculable happiness which is the gift, the joyous gift, elf, nor have ever understood love.

The Mother's Crown

hen comes the time when we know motherhood and erhood. Are they not full of sacrifice, of the beauty villing service, of the magnificent gift of self? The her is beautiful above all in the world from the ndeur of her sacrifice; that is her crown, before ch the strongest men bow. She is beautiful, in spite er wrinkles and her white hair, with a beauty more hangeable than that of youth; she is beautiful to our s on account of this wonderful devotion, of which is the perpetual witness in every generation.

Then at last comes a time when one becomes grandher or grandmother. Personally one diminishes, one no longer as strong to struggle, to walk, to speak. e has undergone certain restrictions in life and is scious of smaller desires. But he has enlarged his l, if he is a true grandfather in the spirit of his mis- n and is master of his art. One lives in others; one es the children. While seeing the days lessening for nself, he salutes the dawn in others and is happier in ing the light of day rise from others, than unhappy see the evening close in upon his own life.

So that human life consists in spending itself to the t cent and then going away when the cash-box is empty, not only regretting nothing, but rejoicing that one has saved the box while giving all its contents.

In living thus, one is like a person whose boat is moored to the bank by very many cables. The cables little by little are detached, and the boat is freed, it sets out for the offing. That is the true life with the beautiful death, which is an entrance into a higher life.

Life in its Fulness

Here let us stir up our minds to understand the great lessons of the Gospel, these good lessons which are suitable for all, which are on the level of children and which reach higher than the most distant stars. There is a force which urges us to rise above personal life towards a superior life; there is a life which is higher than the individual life limited to a single being and to the interests of one alone; there is something in us, and it is precisely that which is the most wonderful, the most admirable in human life, which surpasses love of self and which consists in love of others. To love, even to the point of sacrifice, is to aspire to something which is more than ourselves; is to transform ourselves into something that is worth more than we are now. It is to understand the grandeur ot the spiritual life, of the invisible life, of the life of God himself; it is to attain in the midst of evident limitations and from the ruins of a life that you know and of which no one can avoid the cataclysms and defeats; it is to attain an understanding and realization of the way to life everlasting; it is to give up nothingness in order to attain to being; it is to renounce death in order to attain life.

The Gospel is the religion of life, the miracle which made the blind see and the dead live. Blind and dead we all are, from the beginning of life to the end, so far as we have not understood the great secret, which consists in maturing, in order to offer one's self to take a higher stand, even by the gift of self.

People have always had a perception of this grandeur in sacrifice and in the things which conquer death, because, in spite of the lower passions of men and their common evil tendencies, they still have profound admiration for heroes and martyrs. Those who have hurled themselves into the balance for people, for country or for the kingdom of God, have not only won the admiration of others, but have themselves realized something of the grandeur of the act.

Behold, my brothers, the very simple but sublime truths contained in Christ's message, "If any one will come after me, let him deny himself." If we inadequately understand life, we are troublesome companions for ourselves. We have never finished with ourselves, we have to begin anew each day. We resemble that overburdened camel which Christ, in his vigorous and popular style of speaking, has furnished us an ever eloquent comparison. Yes, we are loaded with ourselves and our possessions as with too cumbersome baggage. We are like some miserable beasts of burden, slaves of ourselves, of our appetites, of our tempers, of our petty fears, of our earthly passions. Christ says to us, "Cast all that aside and follow me." "Come, and I will show you liberty." "I will show you bright mornings and evenings full of hope." "I will lead you on to battles where one is happier than in the sleep of the lazy." "I will show you the poor who are rich and the struggles which bring happiness; finally, follow me, for I have the secret of happiness." "If you bear my yoke you will be comforted, you will find rest for your poor souls, crushed by the struggle after the impossible."

The Guiding Hand

Behold, my brothers, the lesson. It is necessary to repeat it often; it is necessary to try it through life; it is necessary to spell its alphabet as one learns the elements of the sciences and the arts; it is necessary to be a beginner, making at first very imperfect music, and realizing doubtful beauty. But the Master is there, calling, encouraging us! Oh! that lights the dark corners, lightens the dark shadows, the sadness of illness, the last pangs and even the tomb itself—the Master, he is harmony, he is sufficient.

In understanding his lessons, we can transform into pure gold the most mediocre matter. We shall transform our troubles, our weaknesses, our griefs, and even our tears, into riches for others, and we shall feel the power of God the more impressively through the poverty of this life.

Up! Let us gird up our loins and step by step follow him; him and his wonderful word of command, his instructions, whose modest writing began in characters traced upon the sand of our mortal shores, and whose end is an immense and luminous lamp lighting all the horizon of the sky.

A Humane Work Founded on Faith

By RIGHT REV. J. B. FUNSTEN
Bishop of Boise

IN the beautiful little city of Boise, which occupies an attractive site in one of the fertile valleys of Southwestern Idaho, is situated a church institution incorporated under the name of St. Luke's Hospital and Training School for Nurses, Limited.

Few institutions connected with the church have been able to accomplish more for the good of humanity. From the very beginning, five years ago, it has prospered and won for itself a far-reaching reputation in the intermountain country for thoroughness of work and the high order of accommodations, as well as the success which has accompanied its care of the sick. Its patients have come not only from Boise, but from the mining camps of the mountains, the lonely ranches and the distant towns. It is the only hospital of the kind, except Roman Catholic, within many hundred miles.

St. Luke's Hospital, Boise City, Idaho

The country is still new, and there are many home-seekers who, when sickness or accident overtakes them, find the hospital a great blessing. We might give in detail hundreds of cases showing the good that has been accomplished. A young man from New York came to this country on account of weak lungs, and worked at his profession until he broke down. His means were insufficient to secure proper care elsewhere, so he came to St. Luke's, living most of the two years that he stayed there in a tent. The Sunday before he died I baptized him. He was a lovable fellow, and appreciated all we did for him, often saying that he regretted he had no money to give to the hospital. Without doubt, his last days were made happy by what was done for him.

One of the diseases most general in this country is typhoid fever, but the success of the hospital has been phenomenal in nursing this disease. A few years ago a bright young man came out from Virginia, and was taken with the fever on his way out. He was carried to the hospital and lay for many weeks delirious, but by faithful nursing finally recovered. Another case was that of a wife of one of the clergymen, for whom we were able to care for several weeks, and who, after a severe surgical operation, recovered her health. A daughter of one of our clergymen was operated on for appendicitis, and was restored to health in a comparatively short time. Besides this we have been able to care for, also free of cost, ministers of other denominations, whose work was hard and salary small.

The citizens of Boise have given, in the matter of equipment since it was started five years ago, about $7,000, and to its credit it may be said that it has always paid its own running expenses, besides giving hundreds of dollars in charity work. It has also been blessed with liberal gifts from time to time, the largest of which was the cost of the Nurses' Home, known as the Mary Douglass Barnham Home, the gift of a New York woman. Another was a thank-offering for a blessing of recovery. Others, equally beautiful, have been received and appreciated.

We are now erecting a $20,000 wing to this hospital, which is justified by its history and outlook. While it is a period of anxiety to build, nevertheless we also know that without faith it is impossible to please God or to accomplish any good for humanity.

The history of the beginning of this venture of faith should be an encouragement to all workers under difficult conditions. Five years ago we had no hospital. The need, however, seemed great. While I was hesitating in the matter one of the city physicians, in a casual conversation, told me of the great need of such an institution. Shortly after, two of our workers became very solicitous to see this work begun, one of them subscribing out of her limited means such generous amounts as to encourage me to buy a piece of land having on it a small cottage.

I was fortunate in securing an excellent superinte and head nurse, Miss Lillian Long, a graduate Good Samaritan Hospital in Portland, Ore. A year the work prospered, and it became necessa erect a large building in the rear of our former C Hospital, at the cost of $25,000. This building we patronized so well, that we felt it wise to provi outside home for a Nurses' Training School. This tion was afterwards paid for, as above stated, by a York church woman. The cottage was furnished repainted, at a cost of about $1,000, by St. I Hospital Guild, an organization of Boise ladies. Training School has proved a valuable adjunct.

Last summer it became necessary again to er the plant, and this time we are building more sub tially than ever. Our capacity will be more doubled, and I trust that all necessity will be ren for further enlargement for a long time to come. new building is 40 x 96, three stories high, and com simplicity and substantiality. While it was a ve of faith to start on this building, the need was appar We felt it was God's work, and he would not le suffer; for while we do not know always whence from whom the help will come, we can trust h knowing all that is really needed will be given.

stream, immerse themselves and walk dripping to the temple and again prostrate themselves before the god of stone and wait for his answer in a dream.

By eleven o'clock of the first day of the festival, there were some twenty women lying motionless around the temple. For hours, in the fierce broiling sun, they lie, watched over by their husbands, or some relatives, who occasionally sprinkle them with water to prevent their bodies from being blistered by the sun. Toward evening the numbers around the temple increase, and the poor, benighted creatures lie around the temple in rows, four and five deep, within the inner court, while women of the low castes lie in rows outside of this court. Some lie before the god a few hours and then get up and leave, while others stay for a long period. Nearly a hundred women lay prostrate in their wet clothes, covered only with a sheet, throughout the entire night. At 5.30 in the early morning there were still ninety women lying around the temple. It was quite cold, for the place is over 2,000 feet above the sea-level—so cold that the thousands of pilgrims camped about in the woods were unable to sleep after 4 A.M. They arose, lighted fires, and sat around them to warm themselves. Some of the prostrate women were quivering with the cold.

From early morning to noon of the second day, the temple was surrounded with prostrate women. These victims of heathen superstition must fast two days during the ceremonial.

The closing ceremonies were of unusual interest. About noon of the second day, all the women who had continued prostrate before the temple, rise and go outside the small walled enclosure around the temple. This year there were some two hundred or more women who had fulfilled the arduous requirements. They huddled together, the clothes and hair of some still wet. Within the enclosure were the priests and half a dozen young men, called "Siddappahvandlu" (i. e. servants of Siddapah), the deity of the temple. These young men were armed with light bamboos, with which they cleared the enclosure of the people who persisted in coming within. Soon, with a shout, they ran out of the enclosure, preceded by many drums and large brass trumpets, that produced an unearthly din.

The procession moved down to the stream, where the young men bathed. They then returned to the temple, before which they stood with clasped hands, while they were smeared with sacred ashes by one of the priests. This done, the chief of the priests called upon the god Siddappah to come down and possess one of the young men. He raised his hand towards the heavens, then gestured toward the one chosen to be possessed with the deity. Some incantations were uttered, but the words were drowned by the unceasing beating of a dozen drums and the piping of as many pipes.

Each time the chief priest gestured from the heavens toward the young man, the latter twisted and turned. He jumped wildly while his fellows seized him; but soon he broke away and ran out of the enclosure, followed by the others, amid the shouts of the thousands of onlookers. Preceded by the "drum corps," these servants of Siddappah circled twice around the two hundred women, on whose account these ceremonies were being performed. As they danced, they were showered with flowers and parched rice, and when the deity-possessed young man was specially energetic and writhed a jumped most vigorously, he was greeted with clapp of hands and many shouts. For nearly an hour th "Siddappahvandlu" danced, and their fortitude a energy were remarkable, to say the least.

Then the priests within the enclosure brought gr pots of rice, and distributed it in small handfuls on lit pieces of plantain leaf. These were placed around improvised "Swami," or god, that was directly in fr of the temple door. The "Siddappahvandlu" who h danced, distributed this rice to the women who w patiently waiting outside. Then one of the priests sto before the temple, chanted some selections dedicati the food to the god Siddappah, and asking his bl sing upon it. Sugar and clarified butter were plac on top of the rice, and the women ate this strange ce monial repast. These ceremonies were completed 3:30 P.M., when the thousands of people scattered their way back to their villages.

The attendance at the peculiar festival at Talako made me sorrowful and sick at heart. It was all childish, so barbarous, so pitifully superstitious. dozen evangelists were with me and we preached her there and everywhere to the great crowds, who listen attentively and never showed the slightest opposition our work.

With heavy hearts, we wended our way homewar impressed as never before with a new realization of t tremendous hold which Hinduism and superstition sti have upon India, and of the herculean task yet remai ing for the Christian Church to make intelligentl known to the hundreds of thousands of non-Christia in India the blessings and liberty and joy of the Gosp of Peace. PET STOCK-RAISING FOR WOMEN

By KATE V. SAINT-MAUR

The First of a Series of Articles on Home Topics, Specially Written for this Journal by the Well-Known Author of "A Self-Supporting Home," and Other Successful Works

ITHER run in conjunction with chicken farming or as an independent business, pet stock-raising, if properly conducted, is a most profitable and interesting occupation for women who are fortunate enough to have sufficient ground space for such an undertaking. My own drifting into the business was quite accidental and happened in this wise: The second spring we were on the farm, just before the advent of Easter, being in the city, I stopped to look at the antics of some puppies in a bird-store window. My attention was arrested by hearing the owner and a customer discussing the difficulty of getting a number of little white chicks. Acting on the impulse of the moment, I announced to the astonished men that I had lots of the tiny fluff. Whereupon they amazed me in equal measure by saying: "Well, madam, if you can positively let us have one hundred pure white chickens, not over a week old, by to-morrow afternoon at the very latest, we will gladly give you twenty dollars for them." As I had taken three hundred downy little chicks out of the incubators at the poultry farm only three days before, the offer was instantly accepted, and was promptly and satisfactorily filled.

The owner of the bird-store then kindly explained to me what I had not known before, that at Easter the demand for little chicks in particular, also for baby ducklings, tiny white rabbits, puppies, and pretty kittens, always far exceeded the supply. Among our household pets at that time there was a Maltese mother puss and a white bunny, both with families old enough to leave home without suffering from lack of maternal care, so, acting at once upon the storekeeper's advice, three kittens at a dollar each, and three rabbits at fifty cents each, were added to the original order for the one hundred little chicks. From that time onward, pet stock-raising has been established and a remarkably well-paying branch of the farm business. Mice, canaries, cavies and squirrels, are the cheapest and most easily cared-for stock to start with, and will soon bring in sufficient cash required to add to the business more expensive animals, such as Persian cats or pomeranians, ruby spaniels, or any other kind of small dogs which happen to be in the fashion.

A Young Pair of Bunnies

The raising of mice may not be on first thought a welcome proposition to many persons, but in point of fact women seem to be getting over their dislike to them. The little chap is becoming en vogue, society women in London having started the fad. The Hon. Mrs. Grineston and Miss Angela Cockburn Dickinson, nieces of Lord Londsborough, are most enthusiastic about the diminutive pets. Mrs. Mouse has a family about once a month, and a most interesting household it is—a well-paying one, too, for even the common white variety are always in demand, while those showing chocolate, buff, Maltese or Dutch marking will bring from fifty cents to two dollars each, according to the depth of color, correctness of marking, etc.

CANARIES

Canaries are dear, fascinating little creatures to keep, and require no special conditions for raising which cannot be successfully accomplished in a limited space. The most fastidious woman cannot object to caring for a few families, even in a city home. One male and two females will start a profitable flock. The male bird should be selected for his voice, regardless of his color or shape. The two other birds, on the contrary, must be selected for those very qualifications. The male should be darker and deeper in color than the female. In fact, male birds, with green on their wings and head, mated with pale females, produce the best-colored young ones. Never allow two top-knot birds to pair, for, oddly enough, the progeny will usually have bald or deformed heads. A breeding cage with separate compartments costs at least $4, but a very good one can be made at home for $1, by once more resorting to the empty grocery box. For the present purposes select one three feet long, fifteen inches deep, and two feet wide. Buy a piece of sheet zinc three feet two inches long, seventeen inches wide, to make the tray for the floor; nine feet of galvanized wire cloth, two feet wide. The ordinary cage water and seed cups are the best, so add them to the purchase list. Place a female in each compartment of the cage, where they will become friendly. Keep the singer in his own cage and in another room when you first get them.

For three weeks, in addition to the regular feed, give the three breeding birds a small dish of mash every morning, made of hard-boiled egg chopped fine, stale bread-crumbs, hulled oats coarsely ground—equal parts of each—just moistened with scalded milk. If you grind green bone for the poultry, omit the chopped egg three times a week and substitute about half a thimbleful of bone for each bird, or very little finely-chopped, lean beef. On the fourteenth day, the singer should have his cage brought into the room where the others are, and hung just above them. On the sixteenth day place the singer's cage on a level with the breeding cage for a day or so; then open the doors of the cages and place them close together. He will soon begin to seem perfectly at home.

BUILDING THE NEST

Material for the nest must be supplied to the cage, and may consist of horsehair, bits of raw cotton, a little soft hay, and any light material. Special care is necessary during the incubating period, for the eggs of these little songsters are exceedingly fragile, and a loud noise to which they are unaccustomed, even the slamming of a door, will sometimes addle them. Too bright a light is also annoying, so a piece of green baize pinned around the corner of the cage, will give a sense of seclusion which will keep the bird tranquil and happy. Allow nothing to worry or trouble them while sitting.

Fourteen days after the first egg is laid, the young appear. The tiny creatures are a great disappointment to those who see them for the first time. Chicks and ducklings are lovely from the time they emerge from the shell; but a young canary is featherless, blind, and has the longest neck imaginable. In a short time, however, it becomes a golden ball of down and its early unattractiveness is forgotten in admiration.

Continue the mash food, but after the little ones are hatched, feed night and morning. Add rape seed, which has been boiled for a few minutes, and then rinsed through cold water. The nestlings' eyes open about the ninth day. After the thirteenth day they will begin feeding themselves in the most independent manner. When the brood is a month old remove them to another cage. They will then begin to lose their first crop of feathers, and must be carefully protected from draughts, lest they take cold. At the end of this first moulting period, you can tell how the young will develop, both for shape and song.

Graceful and Cunning

Blenheim Puppies

The mother bird will usually begin to build a second nest when the babies in the first are about fourteen days old, sometimes keeping up this double family from February to June; so that with good birds you can calculate on having eight broods from the two females, with an average of sixteen male birds. If the trainer—that is to say the bird who teaches the young ones to sing—is a good songster, the males should bring two dollars apiece when sixteen weeks old.

The young females can, with a little patience, be trained and taught tricks, which will make them worth as much or more than their brothers, who have only voice to recommend them; but if the females' education is ignored, they are not worth more than fifty cents apiece, unless kept to breeding age. Cages must be kept scrupulously clean, with plenty of sand on the floor. Accustom the birds to having a bath dish put in for a time every morning. Should the feet look soiled, or nails too long, take the bird firmly, but gently in your hand, and hold the feet in warm soap and water, to remove all dirt and soften the nails, the extreme points of which can be cut with a pair of sharp, fine scissors. Take care not to go above or too near the end—the end of the nerve that can be seen running through the upper part of the nail; for if you do, it will be painful to the bird, as cutting into the quick of your finger-nail would be. If you are a real bird-lover, and have time and patience, you can accustom a flock to your presence until they will let you go among them in a flying-room and handle them at your pleasure; for they are naturally most affectionate, gentle little creatures, as full of playfulness as a kitten. A solitary songster will feel neglect and loneliness to a pitiable degree, but will respond to petting as readily as a child. A canary from the general stock of a bird-store is timid and reserved at first, but will soon establish friendly relations between himself and his owner.

"Betty Barker," a Pet Pussy

WHITE RABBITS AS PETS

If you live in the country, white or fancy rabbits will add considerably to the income. Bunny is one of the most prolific of animals, and has a family of six or seven every fifty days. Even when sold to a wholesale dealer, they will bring twenty-five cents each all the year round, except at Easter,

China's Calamity

ALL indications now justify the conclusion that the famine in China's populous seaboard provinces is the most serious calamity the world has known, since the new century opened. The Viceroy of Kiangsu, in the very heart of the suffering, has officially proclaimed it to be "ten times worse than any famine known in the last forty years."

Fifteen millions of human beings in five provinces are affected. Of these eight millions have lost most of their property, including buildings and food supplies. All live stock has been either sold or eaten. Four millions are absolutely destitute. Nine cities are at the present moment surrounded by famine camps, containing an aggregate of eight hundred thousand starving refugees, who have been compelled to abandon their own wrecked and desolated homes. Hundreds of parents have sold their little children for food, and in at least three districts, the last frightful resort of hunger has been reached —cannibalism. We spare our readers the ghastly details.

Meanwhile, the struggle is being bravely made to keep the sufferers alive; but the available means scarcely suffices to give each a small dole of millet, rice or gruel —barely enough to sustain the flickering flame of life.

This is the tremendous problem which confronts the Missionary Relief Committee at Chinkiang and the Civic Relief Committee at Shanghai. Although the government, the municipalities and individuals have all given most liberally to assist the sufferers, the famine is so widespread, the need so great, and the resources so inadequate, that appeal is made to the whole civilized world to rally to their aid in fighting back the famine which threatens to destroy hundreds of thousands of helpless peasants. Unless aid comes speedily, China's famine will go into history as unparalleled in modern times for its appalling mortality.

THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has once more been chosen as the channel of America's benevolence. Its proprietor has already advanced $36,000, all of which will go through missionary hands for the purchase of food, and the President and Secretary of State have officially aproved the popular choice by contributing to our Relief Fund. We invite every reader, no matter what his or her station in life may be, to unite with us in this Christlike work of rescue, and to send in a mite to help save China. The Fund is now open. Send in your own name with your gift and ask your friends to subscribe. On page 161 of this issue is a subscription form for the convenience of all who wish to canvass among their friends and acquaintances for this worthy cause. Three Cents a day will keep a famine sufferer alive. One Dollar will support a sufferer a whole month. Five Dollars will provide food for a whole family for thirty days.

Remember that the saving of one life now, may be the means of bringing a precious soul to Christ. Send your gift in His name, and get a share of the blessing.

Railroad Casualties

ONE of the most disquieting reports issued in recent times is that of the Interstate Commerce Commission. It records the startling fact that catastrophes on the railroads, which are called by courtesy accidents, are alarmingly increasing. The report covers a period of three months, ending September 30 last. It appears that in that quarter of a year the number of persons killed was 267, an increase over the previous three months of seventy-two. The number of casualties to passengers and employees during the same period was 19,850, an increase of 2,913 over the preceding quarter. If the growth in these disasters continues at the same rate, the figures will soon be like those we read in war time.

It is appalling to think that so many lives should be lost, whether the cause be mismanagement or culpable disregard of precautions. It is time that some stronger measure of control of the railroad corporations was exerted. The directors, who keep their employees at work so many hours that their faculties are dulled by fatigue, are guilty of a large share of the blame when a disaster occurs. It may increase the dividends to get all that is possible out of an engineer or a switchman, and, of course, there is always a tendency to keep down expenses; but there are limits which it is dangerous to pass. The railroad corporations appear to be unacquainted with that fact, or indifferent to it. They should be taught it by the strong hand of the law.

We boast of the freedom of our country; but that very freedom demands the exercise of control. The railroad companies possess valuable franchises and privileges entailing duties, and the government, in the interest of the citizens, should see that those duties are performed. It should not be necessary for the employees to strike in order to bring the working hours within reasonable limitations; nor should economy in the maintenance of equipment be carried to a point at which safety is menaced. We perfectly understand the menace of centralization, but we submit that either the central government or the individual States should act to compel the corporations to cease risking the lives of the people. Some control there must be. Long enough have the companies been allowed to conduct their affairs according to their own ideas, and to answer any protest with a profane malediction on the public.

The Nation's Hero

WASHINGTON'S BIRTHDAY has, in recent years, become of almost equal importance in the minds of the American people with the Fourth of July, although celebrated in a quieter manner. It was celebrated during his lifetime, it is true, but the interest in the Twenty-second of February has been growing, until it is generally observed throughout the country. With the passage of time we have got the perspective of history, and find, as we look down the long line of great historic characters that have shared in the making and developing of our nation, that at the beginning there is the heroic figure, for which all the other men of his day, though fine in character and of distinguished attainments, form but a background.

In this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD are published two famous pictures of Washington, and an article on the darkest and brightest moments in his career. An old story as regards time, maybe, but always new and of interest to patriotic Americans, believing as they do that,

'Twas he that fixed upon eternal base,
The freedom, peace, and glory of his race.

Congress and the Children

ALTHOUGH the Committee on Judiciary of the House of Representatives has reported adversely on the constitutional power of Congress to legislate on Child Labor, this decision is not to be regarded as in any sense a triumph for the advocates of juvenile industrial slavery. From the beginning of the present agitation, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD has held that it was the duty of the States themselves to enact adequate laws for the protection of their children. We must leave to abler constitutional authorities the solution of the question whether, in the event of the States failing to afford such protection, their neglect would justify the Federal Government in throwing its paternal arm around the children on the "higher ground" that the Commonwealth's failure has imperiled their rights, as Americans, to the enjoyment of those conditions that conduce to progress, comfort and general welfare.

It was probably natural, when the Child Labor reformers pleaded for Congressional action, that the Judiciary Committee should take the same ground which has lately been taken in cases where the proposed legislation would appreciably add to the powers of the Federal Government. Whenever "vested rights," or custom and privilege of ancient standing, no matter how iniquitous and unsuited to modern needs and conditions, are assailed, the cry of "centralization" is raised, often without reason or justice, for the purpose of defeating the reform.

In the present instance, this same cry of "centralization" is being utilized to befog the issue now before the country, which is: How are the little white slaves—the million of American children of tender age now wearing out their lives in factories and on coal breakers—to be secured in those priviliges that are the rightful inheritance of every American child? Dwarfed and stunted, surrounded by a host of influences that are conducive to disease and premature decay, their minds neglected quite as much as their bodies, it is a sad picture these poor little hapless petitioners present, knoc at the doors of Congress. Is there no champion to up their cause? Are all our legislators so bound up weightier interests, and so intent on the protectio "vested rights," that they cannot even consider the of the children?

When the gifted pen of Elizabeth Barrett Brown taking the child labor evil in England as a theme, to the world her famous Cry of the Children, a far-re ing reform followed shortly after. Our own land n a similar awakening. When the people are fully aro to this great question, Congress may then discover s way by which the Federal arm can reach down in jus and pity to save the little white slaves of the looms coal breakers.

Carting the Snow from New York's Streets to the Rivers

A Scene in Lower Broadway, New York, During the Recent Storm

New York's Snow Mantle

IGHT years have passed since New York has had so heavy a snowstorm as that which began on February 4th and continued through the following y. It would be reckoned a light storm in Eastern and rthwestern States, which are accustomed to much avier falls than the eleven inches under which New rk groaned. But the citizens here are unused to such erity of climate, and found the storm heavy enough. avel of all kinds was interrupted. Trains on the ele- ted railroads crawled along, using the forked "shoes," hich, slowly and with difficulty, cleared the third rail as ey went. Even the subway was impeded, for the snow nd easy entrance through the ventilators, which were t in to relieve the heated atmosphere in the summer. ere were drifts, too, on the stairways that made the ent difficult and descent dangerous. The surface cars ght have managed well with the help of the big sweep- g machines, if they had not been blocked by stalled gons which lined the streets. The horses suffered verely. Dozens of them, struggling to draw their loads, eir feet slipping on the ice, fell dead on the street. ur fell dead from exhaustion in three blocks, and ny were so strained and hurt that they were merci- lly killed by the agents of the animals' society. The reet Department sent three thousand men and one ousand wagons to clear Broadway, and gladly accepted the help they could obtain from outsiders. It is timated that the cost of the snow fall to the city will fully $350,000, and even that sum did not insure the o hundred miles of streets being anywhere near eared. The whole country appears to have suffered. North Dakota the temperature fell to thirty degrees low zero; Nebraska reported ten below and very avy snow; and even in Nashville, Tenn., the streets re coated with ice, and people were shivering before e blasts of sleet and snow. With all our boasted lvance of civilization, we are still at the mercy of the rm and the wintry visitations of frost and snow.

He saith to the snow, Be thou on the earth; he sealeth up the nd of every man that all men may know his work (Job 37 : 6, 7).

Child's Missive

The Post Office Department wrestled recently with a oblem involved in a child's letter. The child is only x years old and has evidently been brought up to be- ve in the divine power and the efficacy of prayer. It as written in a large, round hand, and had clearly taxed e writer's untrained fingers. It stated that her mamma as ill, and gave her full name and street and city ad- ess. It was addressed to "the dear God in Heaven," d besought him to make her mamma better. The pro- ic clerks in the post office returned the letter stamped Insufficiently addressed." True, they could not deliver , but one hopes there was someone near the child who uld tell her that her petition reached Him to whom e wrote. Her faith was evident, and we know that e prayer of faith is always heard.

Thou, Lord, hast not forsaken them that seek thee. . . . He rgetteth not the cry of the humble (Psa. 9 : 10, 12).

A Long Suit for a Toy

The verdict of a jury in the Common Pleas Court of hiladelphia, Pa., recently has ended for the time liti- ation which has been in the courts for eight years. It ppears that in a sale by auction of the effects of a de- eased lady in Philadelphia, a toy cabinet, curiously arved, and suitable for containing the wardrobe of a hild's doll, was included by mistake. The deceased lady ho formerly owned it, had given it to her daughter, ho is now married and living in California, and it should ave been sent to her at her mother's death instead of eing sold. The California lady ascertained who had urchased the cabinet and made overtures for the recov- ery of it. She explained that the intrinsic value of the article was small, but it was valuable to her as the gift of her dead mother. The purchaser, however, had given the cabinet to her children, who were reluctant to give it up. She finally rejected an offer of a sum much larger than she had paid for it, and then suit was begun for its possession. After a struggle lasting eight years, in which learned counsel were engaged on each side, the cabinet has been awarded to the California lady, who thus regains her dead mother's gift. That the one lady should struggle to possess and the other should struggle to retain an article of so little intrinsic value, spending many times its worth in the contest, is an illustration of the pertinacity of many of our pursuits. Men strive earnestly for objects which are not worth the struggle. To Him who knew eternal values, all the prizes of the world appeared in this light.

Therefore take no thought, saying, What shall we eat? or, What shall we drink? or, Wherewithal shall we be clothed? . . . But seek ye first the kingdom of God (Matt. 6: 31, 33).

Cancer Germs Found

Seven years of patient study and experiment in the State Cancer Laboratory at Buffalo, N. Y., have led to a discovery that Prof. Gary N. Calkins hopes may solve the mystery of this terrible disease. The institution in which the experiments have been carried on is a well-equipped building erected at the cost of Mrs. Gratwick, of Buffalo, and is supported by an appropriation from the Legislature of New York. The doctors did not believe in any of the theories indicating that cancer proceeded from an embryo or from cell-inclusions. They were convinced that it was caused by a parasite. This theory was confirmed, when it was found that healthy animals confined in unsterilized cages in which similiar animals affected with the disease had been placed, developed the disease. Other animals put in sterilized cages were not affected. Convinced by this fact, that the disease was caused by a parasite, search was made for an organism existing in cancer cells and nowhere else. After a long series of experiments such an organism has been found. It is a minute organism, whether animal or plant cannot yet be stated. It is of spiral shape, belonging to the species of bacteria which students know as Spirochæta. A method of destroying it has also been discovered, which is still more important. The experiments are being continued, and while it is yet too early to claim success, the doctors are hopeful that at last they are on the track of a solution. How many sufferers there must be the world over, who hope and pray that these investigators may succeed, so that they may be delivered from a dreadful death. How eagerly will the remedy be sought and applied; yet the malady of sin, the baneful effect of which continues throughout eternity, often goes unhealed while the sure remedy is within the reach of all.

Madison Square and the Flatiron Building After the Storm

Is there no balm in Gilead? Is there no physician there? Why then is not the health of the daughter of my people recovered (Jer. 8: 22)?

A Quaint Relic

A stranger in New York, passing up Fifth Avenue on Sunday morning, is surprised to hear among the musical chimes of the bells of the various churches the discordant sound of a tinkle of an old bell, somewhat out of tune. In some antiquated mountain village such a sound would pass without remark, but among the harmonies of the new and sweet chimes of the church bells in New York's richest neighborhood the contrast is very marked. It is not explained when its location is found, for the bell is in the belfry of a church in which a rich and aristocratic congregation worships. But the church belongs to the Reformad Dutch denomination, and the old bell is a relic of a church in Holland, and nearly two hundred years ago sounded its summons to the ancient burghers to come to worship. They have long been dead, but the old bell is still at the old business, sounding its feeble tinkle calling the faithful to church. So it is with the Gospel itself. To one generation after another, the call is made to leave the world and its pursuits on the Lord's Day, and seek help and guidance from God:

Unto you, O men, I call: and my voice is to the sons of man. . . . Wisdom is better than rubies; and all the things that may be desired are not to be compared to it (Prov. 8 : 4, 11).

Smugglers Detected

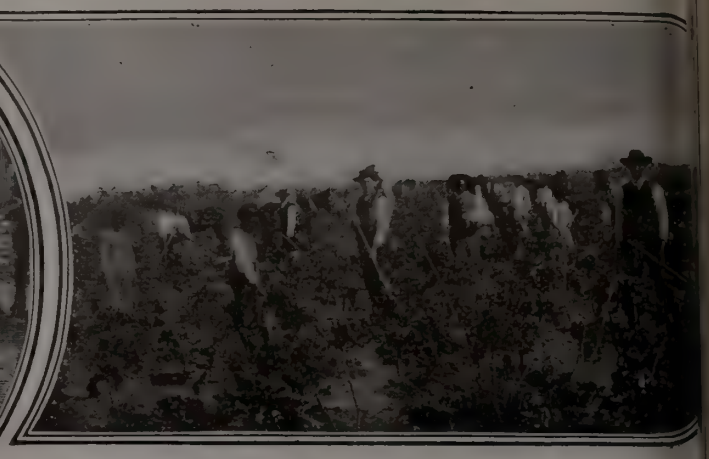
The French Government recently ordered an experiment in the Custom House in the detection of smugglers. Certain employees, familiar with the tricks smugglers employ to pass dutiable articles free through the Custom House, were instructed to conceal such articles on their persons. They were then passed rapidly before an X-ray apparatus. In forty-five minutes one hundred and sixty-seven persons passed before the light, and every article they carried was detected. Watches were discovered sewed in the lining of one man's coat. In the hem of a woman's skirt were found the rings put there to test the system. A tiny jeweled locket was revealed hidden in a young man's mouth, underneath his tongue, while under the coils of a woman's hair the X-ray showed quite plainly several watch-chains and a bracelet. Another "smuggler" carried several card-cases spread out flat against his feet. Right through his shoes and stockings the X-ray penetrated, and the clasps on the card-cases stood out distinct and clear to the eye of the examiner. Another man who had kid gloves hidden on his person, was detected by the buttons. A few years ago such a penetrating light would have been regarded as an impossibility. Smugglers may have indulged the belief that they would always be able to secrete dutiable articles so adroitly that they could not be found by the most lynx-eyed examiner. They could have had no conception that there was in existence a light like this which, when discovered and applied, would render their devices futile. How vain, then, is the hope that it will be possible for any man to hide his secret sins so completely as to deceive Him who has all the resources of the universe at his disposal.

There shall in no wise enter into it [the heavenly city] anything unclean, or he that maketh an abomination and a lie (Rev. 21 : 27, R.V.).

MAYESVILLE'S INDUSTRIAL COLLEGI

A Lesson in Cooking at Mayesville Institute

Boys Learning Bricklaying



Mayesville Students Working on the Institute Farm

REPORTS of progress at the Institute at Mayesville, S. C., are of the most encouraging character. The humble effort of Emma Wilson and the corps of colored teachers to help the young people of their own race, are being thoroughly appreciated and are producing excellent results. The handful of children Miss Wilson gathered around her a few years ago in the old church, has grown to a large educational institute, with almost the dignity of a college, and is doing a valuable and extensive work. Friends of the movement who have been South recently, report a well-organized, orderly, efficient work, growing in usefulness and in the respect of all the people of both races. The applications for admission made by young men and women, as well as by the parents of children, prove that the colored race in the South understands that in this institution an honest and earnest effort is being made to give them a thorough equipment for useful service. They appreciate it the more because the managers and teachers are of their own race, and understand their need as well as their difficulties. It has the sympathy of the whites too, because they see in it an honest and intelligent effort of the colored race to help itself.

This session opened with five hundred and twenty children and young people crowded in the group of buildings on the Mayesville section. Of these, a hundred and five are boarders, and the remainder day pupils. This large increase of students is due to the fact that the industrial branches have been put under the charge of efficient and accomplished teachers, some of whom graduated from Hampton and others from Tuskegee. The boy, looking forward to a life of drudgery in the fields, with no prospect but that of penury during his years of work and dependence in old age, is stirred by the opportunity of learning to become a clever carpenter or blacksmith or shoemaker or bricklayer. The girl hears with delight that she can learn how to make her own dresses or qualify for a cook. Such a prospect alone has brought a host of applicants for admission, while the original purpose of the school, of giving a sound English education, is kept well to the fore.

Each year has witnessed an increased attendance. Even this year, which has been singularly unpropitious in the farming districts of South Carolina, and especially of Sumter County, owing to the floods and storms and the ravages of the Army-worm, the people in greater numbers have by severe economy contrived to raise the small fees necessary for entering their children in the school. The sacrifices are not of the parents alone. One boy, whose parents are unable to pay for his board, walks eight miles morning and night to attend the school. How many of our white children would make that journey every day in order to obtain an education? We sometimes say that the negro lacks perseverance and ambition, but the charge is disproved by the records of the children in this Mayesville Institute, many of whom trudge morning and night over distances almost as long as does this boy.

This intense desire to learn often places the managers in a dilemma. They allowed a number of youths to earn their board and tuition by doing a certain specified quota of work on the school farm. They did the work diligently and faithfully, but the arrangement was talked of in the neighborhood, and has brought applications from far and near for a similar bargain. Bright boys have tramped long distances in the hope of being taken on, offering their services in return for an education. It is painful to refuse them, to tell them that there is no possibility of employing more boys, and to see them turn away crestfallen. Some kind friends in New England and New York have given scholarships, which have been highly appreciated. They have relieved the managers of embarrassment, and have enabled them to accept pupils who must otherwise have been rejected. Several intelligent, bright boys and girls have been received on these terms. The scholarship is only thirty-five dollars, and for this small sum the Institute provides board and teaching for the school year. No less than fifty of such scholarships could be filled in a week if they were provided. It would be difficult to mention any way in which thirty-five dollars would do so much good.

An illustration of the appeals that are made to the Institute occurred at the beginning of this year. The widow of a Baptist minister came to the Institute with this story: She has three children, whom she loves devotedly. Her husband taught them the rudiments, and when he was dying he confided them to his weeping wife, exacting from her a promise that she would spare no pains or effort to have the children educated. Her first thought after he had been laid in the grave was how to fulfil her promi She obtained occasional work and sav every cent that could be put aside. S brought the little hoard to Mayesvi with the children. The total would bare suffice to provide books and stationer She showed the children to Miss Wils and asked her if they were not girls th would pay for educating. Indeed, th looked so, but the Institute treasury w absolutely empty. Miss Wilson dread the effect of telling the poor widow th they must be rejected, she was so wea and so desperately in earnest. Final they were taken for three months, wit the promise that the first scholarships th were given should be reserved for then The widow departed, declaring she woul pray night and day that some generou friends in the North might be moved t give three scholarships.

Another incident was that of a twelv year-old girl, whose father had promise her a year in the Institute. The girl se to work to help raise funds. She picke cotton all that season, and at the end wa the proud possessor of one dollar. He disappointment may be imagined whe her father told her it was impossible t furnish the money. His crop had bee swept away in the storm, and it woul require all he could do to provide foo for the family. She set out with her own dollar, and walked six miles to tell Mis Wilson the story. She absolutely refused to take "No" for an answer, flung herself on the ground and pleaded hysterically for a chance. She, too, is received in faith. Even with the treasury empty, these devoted teachers are not cast down, so often has God sent help in time of need.

THESE BEGAN LIFE'S STRUGGLE YOUNG

To the Editor of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:

DEAR SIR: Your paper is a welcome visitor in my house. My mother, when she was alive, looked forward to the day it should be delivered, and not only derived great pleasure from reading it, but lent it to others, believing that she was contributing to their enjoyment. The courageous stand you have always taken for what you believed was right, and the great help you procured for the suffering people of India and Japan, cannot be spoken of without giving you great praise.

A few weeks ago I read with much interest your article on child labor, and cannot quite agree with the impression it, no doubt, has left on the minds of many people. I wish some one of your writers would send you an article showing how much the world is indebted to those who have had to struggle for a living at an earlier age than fourteen years, and what the world has suffered from those who have not been obliged to work until they were eighteen to twenty-two years of age. Would Andrew Carnegie be the man he is to-day had he not gone to work early in life? Would we to-day be enjoying the inventions of Thomas A. Edison had he waited until he was eighteen years of age? The beautiful Wedgewood china and the great success of the pottery are attributable to one who started working at the age of ten years and six months. My own father did his first work in the line he afterwards followed at eleven years of age, though he went to school for a time later. The superintendent of our mills commenced to work at twelve years of age, and has been working ever since. Thousands of illustrations could be mentioned. I left school at fourteen years of age. The good Lord has preserved my health to such an extent that, though I was so sickly when a young child that my parents had doubt regarding my being raised to maturity, I have not from sickness, excepting in 1893, lost one day from work for thirty-three years. I think that indicates that work does not always hurt young people.

Now, for a moment, let us look on the other side. Will you mention the name of any merchant in New York who has originated a business, who did not go to work early in life? You can name many who have had fairly good success in continuing a business started by others; and in the professions, it is quite necessary that an education should extend beyond the age of sixteen years.

We are suffering from the young people who roam the streets destroying property. The cost of the window glass broken by them in one year in New York is estimated at $50,000. In your Bowery missions, I am informed, twenty-five per cent. of the "bums" and "ne'er-do-wells" are those who were not put to work before the age of eighteen years, and consequently have not attained industrious habits. There has been an epidemic of burglaries and street robberies this winter in New York, and seventy-five per cent. of those who have been arrested in consequence have been from seventeen to twenty-four years of age. Had they been put to work at the age of the breaker boy in the mines of Pennsylvania they would have learned industrious habits.

Your article on child labor gives encouragement to those who would forbid the employment of young people who desire to earn a living. What can be a greater crime than to prevent a young person from earning a living? It should be classed with the one Herod committed when he destroyed the young children.

Referring again to the conditions in the Southern cotton mills, I wish to state that I have seen some very attractive school buildings which have been erected in the mill villages at the expense of the mill owners. Some of stone or brick, and others of wood, in the modern style of architecture. I believe none of the mill villages are without them. From one to three churches are also a feature in these communities, the Baptist denomination being in the majority, the Methodist and Presbyterian following. In a number of cases there are library buildings. It is not for the want of proper educational facilities, that some of the young people are sent to the factories at an age we will all admit is too young. The percentage is much less than many people suppose.

All Eager to Help Stricken China

$25,000 MORE CABLED BY THE CHRISTIAN HERALD FOR PROMPT RELIEF WORK — A CASE THAT CALLS FOR WORLD-WIDE CHARITY

RELY has the cause of a stricken people touched the American heart so deeply as that of China, where fifteen millions of a peasant population ow waging a desperate battle with the worst ne that has visited that country in forty years.

already told in these columns, two great relief ittees—one of Chinese, Europeans and Americans anghai, and another exclusively of missionaries at kiang—are already at work, sending food into the cts where the greatest suffering prevails. These nittees, however, have been unable, up to the present to do more than relieve the nearby suffering, g to the lack of funds. Every day brings evidence the famine is far more extensive than was at first sed. It now has in its grasp five provinces, lous and, in more fortunate times, fairly prosper- but multitudes of whose peasantry within the last nonths have been reduced to ruin by the complete uction of crops and property by great floods. In- , so desperate is the situatson in some parts of an, Kiangsu and Anhui that suicides, the selling of ren, and, in a few districts, even cannibalism are rted as among the dark tragedies of the famine.

aders of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, responding to its al, are once more assembling themselves as a Relief ade for the purpose of sending succor, in Jesus' , to the afflicted people of a foreign land. Many ters are reaching us, which show that the great heart hristian America is stirred in behalf of the famishing ese. But the King's business requires haste, and would urge all who wish to have a share in this life- ng and soul-winning campaign to act quickly. Presi- Roosevelt and Secretary of State Root have sent ributions to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD Fund, and the ident has expressed the hope that the movement will al widely to the humanity and liberality of the rican people.

eplying to Secretary Root's letter (which we pub- d last week), Dr. Klopsch, after expressing thanks he generous contributions of the President and Mr. to the China Relief Fund, wrote:

In view of the extremely acute state of suffering in afflicted provinces, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will ance the sum of $25,000, which the Missionary Relief mittee reported will tide a million imperiled lives the present month. We will immediately set to k to raise a much larger sum thly hereafter, until and including , when the crops most probably greatly relieve the situation.

As we understand from Chairman le's report to President Roosevelt, money will be distributed by the sionary Committee on the field. erefore enclose herewith certified k for $25,000, in accordance with above, to the order of the Ameri- National Red Cross, to be cabled them to China."

p to the present time, the propri- of this journal has forwarded to na, in advance of contributions and iew of the urgent need, four remit- ces, viz.: one of $1,000 to the sionary Committee at Chinkiang, of $5,000 each to the Shanghai and kiang Committees, and last week a rth remittance of $25,000, to be ap- tioned equally between the Shang- and Chinkiang Committees. It is inctly stated in the report of Chair- Little, of the Shanghai Committee, President Roosevelt that the actual ribution of relief, so far as foreign tributions are concerned, will be he hands of the missionaries residing in the famine a. This gives guarantee that the contributions re- ved and forwarded through this journal to these pective Committees will reach the mark, and that ry dollar and every dime will be the means of placing giving food in the hands of some poor starving inese family.

On the list of members of the Shanghai Committee many distinguished names. The President is Lu- i-Hwan, the Imperial Chinese Commissioner of eaties. On the Executive Committee, associated with h Chinese officials and foreign merchants, are Dr. lbert Reid, President of the American Association of ina, and Rev. Dr. J. R. Hykes, of the American Bible Society; while the General Committee has Rev. Dr. Geo. P. Fitch, Presbyterian Mission; Mr. H. de Gray, of the China and Japan Trading Co., and W. T. Boyd, United States Acting Consul-General. The Missionary Committee at Chinkiang includes in its Executive Board: Revs. W. C. Longden, chairman; A. Sydenstricker, J. E. Williams, M. J. Walker, and T. F.

M'Crea, corresponding secretary and treasurer, Chinkiang; and as a General Committee, Revs. M. B. Grier, Hsuchoufu; G. P. Bostick, Pohchou; J. B. Woods, Tsingkiangpu; L. W. Pierce, Yangchow; B. C. Patterson, Suchien; S. Cochran, Hwaiyuen; J. B. Trindle, Yangchow. These two official organizations are co-operating harmoniously, and the general government is placing all needed facilities at their disposal.

News from the famine districts shows that the distress, notwithstanding all humanitarian efforts, is spreading. At Tsingkiangpu thousands of refugees are camping in little huts outside the city walls, and are receiving a meagre daily dole of rice from the officials. In Kiangpeh, great masses of hapless people are facing starvation, and this within a few hundred miles of Shanghai. Hundreds and possibly thousands will die off; "but what are they among so many millions?" the officials remark, with the quiet fatalism that is characteristic of heathenism. Roving bands of marauders, driven to crime by sheer want, roam the country.

Grain Crops in the Submerged Fields Near Wuhu

Among the problems before the Relief Committees, that of the most expeditious method of reaching the distant points of suffering with supplies is easily the foremost. Food in large quantities is now being purchased in Shanghai and forwarded to the interior. It is not improbable that a fleet of food-laden vessels may be sent along the entire length of the Grand Canal—some six hundred miles—to afford relief to the dwellers along its banks, who have suffered greatly in loss of crops and property by the floods. Should the canal be frozen, this plan would be impracticable, however. Thousands of bags of rice have already been sent up the canal, but if the weather should be severe, they may never reach their destination. Medical supplies are also greatly needed, as much sickness is following in the wake of the prolonged famine. Great quantities of clothing, too, are required to meet the necessities of the sufferers during the winter months. All these matters are being daily considered by the Relief Committee at Shanghai. Doctors are going out from that city and also from Nanking and Chinkiang, and the missionaries, too, are sending medical men to aid the sick. Soup and gruel kitchens are multiplying in all the afflicted provinces, but with all that has been and is being done, the bitter truth remains that only the fringe of the suffering has been touched up to the present time.

Another vexing problem is the disposition of the famine refugees. Nine cities, viz., Tsingkiangpu, Husian, Yangchow, Yaowan, Hsuchou, Suchien, Ihsien, Chinkiang and Nanking, report an aggregate of 800,000 refugees, who have gathered there to escape death from hunger at home. All of these are on the verge of starvation, and must perish unless governmental or private charity intervenes. Assuming that the total of the destitute in all five provinces is only 4,000,000, it would require $20,000 daily. When it is understood that this tremendous burden will probably extend over several months, the gigantic character of the task which now confronts China and the charitable world can be more readily grasped.

In Suchien, for many week past, twenty per cent. of the people have lived on gruel. All the cattle have been sent to Shantung to be sold, and all the donkeys, sheep, hogs and even dogs have been eaten. In Tsingkiangpu, all the flour and bean shops are closed, no foodstuffs being available.

Hundreds of letters are now reaching THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office by every mail, containing contributions for the famine-stricken Chinese. In many of these the writers accompany their gifts with a sincere prayer for the success of the fund.

Little Rosie R., Stoughton, Wis., sends a dollar, the gift of a Children's Meeting, held every Monday night, where the little ones resolved "to help poor, starving children of China."

E. L. H., South Hill, Va., enclosing a gift, writes: "I think everybody who reads THE CHRISTIAN HERALD ought to give something, for His sake."

"China's suffering," writes F. McC., Ithaca, Mich., "ought to remind the Christian people of this land of the countless blessings which we enjoy daily."

Pastor F. J. Gray, First Presbyterian Church, Clintonville, Pa., forwards $27, "raised by the Christian people of Clintonville for the famine sufferers of China."

Nine Christian women of New Bedford, Pa., send, per Miss Emma R., a joint gift of $8.25 to help China.

"I have wanted to make a thank-offering to God for his goodness to me," writes Mrs. M. A. T., Chester, Mass., "and when I read of so many suffering for food in China, I decided to send it there."

C. E. S., Stephenson, Va., writes: "I fully expected THE CHRISTIAN HERALD to be foremost in this good work. May your efforts be greatly blessed, and many thousands thereby saved from the fearful death of starvation."

Acknowledgment of contributions will be found on another page. All who wish to help this cause should send their contributions addressed to the China Famine Fund, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 91-115 Bible House, New York City.

THE GREATNESS OF WASHINGTON

NO narrative of Washington's career from childhood, including, though it may, his early surveying expeditions in the wilderness, his diplotic missions, his campaigns in the ench war—even his elevation to the esidential chair—can hold significance posterity unless it covers with painsing detail the manner in which the mmander-in-Chief of the Continental my ordered his life throughout the luous trials and vicissitudes of the evolution.

Nowhere in the history of that decade ich beheld the birth of the Nation, is ere a period which contains a clearer velation of the man, George Washingn, than that which includes the winter Valley Forge in 1777-8. With Philalphia in the hands of the British, and nter setting in with unusual severity, thing remained but to leave the open ld and establish the troops, in great ed of rest after long and hard service, winter quarters. Cold and hungry, heered by recent triumphs, their cloth-g worn and scanty, and a lack of shoes great that their dreary march might ve been traced by bloody footprints on e snow and ice, Washington and his my at last reached Valley Forge, on the est side of the Schuylkill River, twenty iles from Philadelphia.

The brilliant victories of the Revolution ere not such an evidence of bravery and rtitude on the part of the patriots, as e indomitable courage with which they re the sufferings of the winter in the lley.

This unswerving fidelity of the chamions of the Revolution, is the strongest stimony to the power of their comander to breath his own spirit of paence and perseverance into his soldiers. He was harassed by the knowledge of a abal which was organized against him; he condition of his half-starved, half-aked army was made even more distressg by a meddlesome and parsimonious Congress. Through all this Washington's haracter impressed itself upon his folowers. His confident serenity sustained is officers, and kept the life and soul of he army together.

In those dark hours of testing he proved onclusively that glory formed no part of is aspirations, by writing to his friend Patrick Henry, then Governor of Virginia, "If the cause is advanced, indifferent t is to men—where or in what quarter it happens."

Bitter enemies in Congress and zealous rivals in the army, still further delayed he faulty commissariat, and, for his oldiers' sake, Washington's policy of forbearance changed to vigorous protest. A committee of five, appointed by Congress, soon reached Valley Forge, and quickly reported the great privation and mortality they found.

In February, the desperately needed reforms began to operate, and the burden was lifted which General Washington had borne with unflinching confidence in his army's allegiance, but with unspeakable pain at the hardships he was forced to witness.

The story is told that, upon one occasion, a farmer in the neighborhood of the desolate camp at Valley Forge, observed the commanding general dismount from his horse and disappear within an adjacent grove. Drawing nearer, the awed farmer-patriot beheld Washington kneeling upon the frozen snow, his hat removed, and his face lifted in the reverent attitude of prayer. It is easy to trace the unfaltering patience and determination with which the great man upheld the shivering, starving soldiers who loved him, to his own reliance upon the source of all strength and wisdom.

The Washington Home at Mount Vernon

As Valley Forge was the most anxious period of Washington's career, that following the surrender of Yorktown, and including his triumphful entry into New York, may properly be called one of the happiest.

On the twenty-first of November, 1783, Sir Guy Carleton began to draw in the outposts that had been established about the city. First, those who held King's Bridge and McGowan's Pass, both scenes of desperate skirmishes, shouldered their muskets and, facing south, took up their march for New York and the water front. As the rearguard left, they could see, marching into their intrenchments, men in brown and buff and blue—the men against whom they had fought for eight long years. The Americans clustered about the bare flagstaff, and in a few moments a ball of bunting was drawn up that broke out into the blue-starred field and the red, white and blue. Far away on the eastern end of Long Island, the red columns marched westward and gathered in toward the village of Brooklyn. Over on the Jersey shore, the English commander hauled down St. George's Cross from the ramparts of the fort at Paulus Hook, a place made memorable by the daring exploits of gallant "Light Horse" Harry Lee. The Grenadiers embarked in rowboats, and pulled across the upper arm of New York Bay to the rendezvous.

In the afternoon of the twenty-fifth, the City of New York saw the last of the scarlet-coated troops that had held the place so long. The people lining the sides of the streets and looking from the windows, felt that they were looking on the closing scene of the great drama of the Revolution. Down Broadway came the English soldiers, the air filled with the beat of their drums and the shriek of fifes; line after line of scarlet and gold, showy white cross-belts and gaitered legs; grenadiers with high bearskin hats; light infantry, and Hessians with fiercely waxed moustaches. Soon all were gone, embarking at the foot of Broadway in cutters that took them to the fleet that swung at their anchors in the bay.

As the last drum-beat died away of the retreating army of Sir Guy Carleton, the faces of the people on the streets turned northward to catch the first glimpse of that army for whose coming they had waited, hoped and prayed.

Washington and Clinton had taken post at Harlem, and found there sturdy General Knox with his troops from West Point. The troops moved from Harlem Heights to the upper part of the city at the Bowery. When the word came that Carlton's men were embarking, the advance guard took up their march down the Bowery, then a "fair green lane," to Chatham, Queen and Wall Streets. First went the light infantry, then a section of artillery, followed by the men of the second Massachusetts infantry. At the corner of Broadway and Rector Streets the advance guard halted, and waited the coming of Washington.

Soon a fanfare of trumpets announced the coming of the general. The troop of Westchester cavalry rode in advance, sweeping the street from curb to curb. Then, riding his war-horse as if he were the Cid himself, came Washington. As the crowd caught sight, for the first time, of the heroic figure with the firm, calm face, there was a momentary hush, then a deafening cheer broke from them that the oarsmen on the English cutters in the harbor stopped to listen. The face of Washington was calm in the midst of victory and rejoicing, as it had been during the dark hours at Valley Forge, but through it shone the joy of work well done, and that had come to his face when the enemy had laid down their arms at Yorktown. The staff that followed him, was composed of officers who had made names for themselves in many hard-fought battles, and whose names, in many instances, were to stand among the foremost in the early days of the Republic. Among them were Clinton, the Marquis de Lafayette and Alexander Hamilton.

A lady who witnessed the scene, has left us her impressions as they came to her in the enthusiasm and excitement of that afternoon. "We had been accustomed for a long time," she said, "to military display in all the finish and finery of garrison life; the troops just leaving us were as if equipped for show, and with their scarlet uniforms and burnished arms made a brilliant display. The troops that marched in, on the contrary, were ill clad and weatherbeaten; but then they were our troops, and as I looked at them, and thought upon all they had done and suffered for us, my heart and eyes were full, and I admired and gloried in them the more."

The Regal Endowment of Speech

SILENCE is golden. Is it? Well, it depends on circumstances. There are times when silence is anything but golden. Times when a good cause is in danger and needs a brave, outspoken defense; times when an absent friend is villified; times when a half-truth does more harm than a whole lie. Tennyson said, "A lie that is half the truth is ever the worst of lies." And he never uttered a truer word.

When we refrain from speech through malice or cowardice or rudeness or simple indifference, we have no right to appropriate to ourselves the slightest credit. On the other hand, silence is golden when we are tempted to talk unkindly of friends or neighbors; to impute low motives to people who are doing what seems to them best, or to relate anecdotes of private history that were better left untold. Many times in life there come wounds and heartburnings, through the overflow of speech that should have been restrained. Undoubtedly, we may sometimes have good reason to be angry, and exasperation and friction may arise even in the guarded enclosure of the family.

Silence is golden, when it is the result of mental discipline, good manners and unselfish charity. It is base counterfeit when it is the refuge of a skulking deserter from a good cause, or of a mean enemy who strikes from ambush. There is a sort of silence that may say a great deal. Emphasized by looks, by a glance or a setting of the lips, indicative of depths of knowledge held resolutely in check, such silence may defame far more than could the utmost license in speech.

The old time-honored feeling that the dead are sacred, that their faults and foibles rest with them in the grave, is founded upon one of the noblest qualities in our nature. None are so helplesss as the dead. They cannot lift a weapon for themselves, or stop by glance or act any aspersion that may be made against them. The dead and the absent should alike have the benefit not only of the doubt, but of the widest and most beneficent charity.

When we think of it we must admit that it is not always easy to say precisely what we mean, so that others may understand it. The endowment of speech is the regal investiture by which man differs from the lower creation. St. James has put on record for all time his opinion of the mischief that may be done by the tongue. If talk is to be unkind, meddlesome or indiscreet, it would better give place to silence.

Robert Louis Stevenson sums up the matter successfully in this oft-quoted stanza:

> There is so much good in the worst of us,
> And so much bad in the best of us,
> That it hardly behooves any of us,
> To talk about the rest of us.

As with every other topic, the shield has two sides. We are to determine for ourselves when it is best to speak and when it is wise to be silent.

Admiral Sigsbee on China's Famine

THE LOTUS CLUB, NEW YORK, February 8.

Dear Dr. Klopsch: Just a word to say that the fine work that you are now doing for the famine-stricken Chinese reminds me of our first acquaintanceship at Havana, following the loss of the old Maine, when you were doing similar work. May I give you my hearty congratulations and good wishes? Sincerely yours,

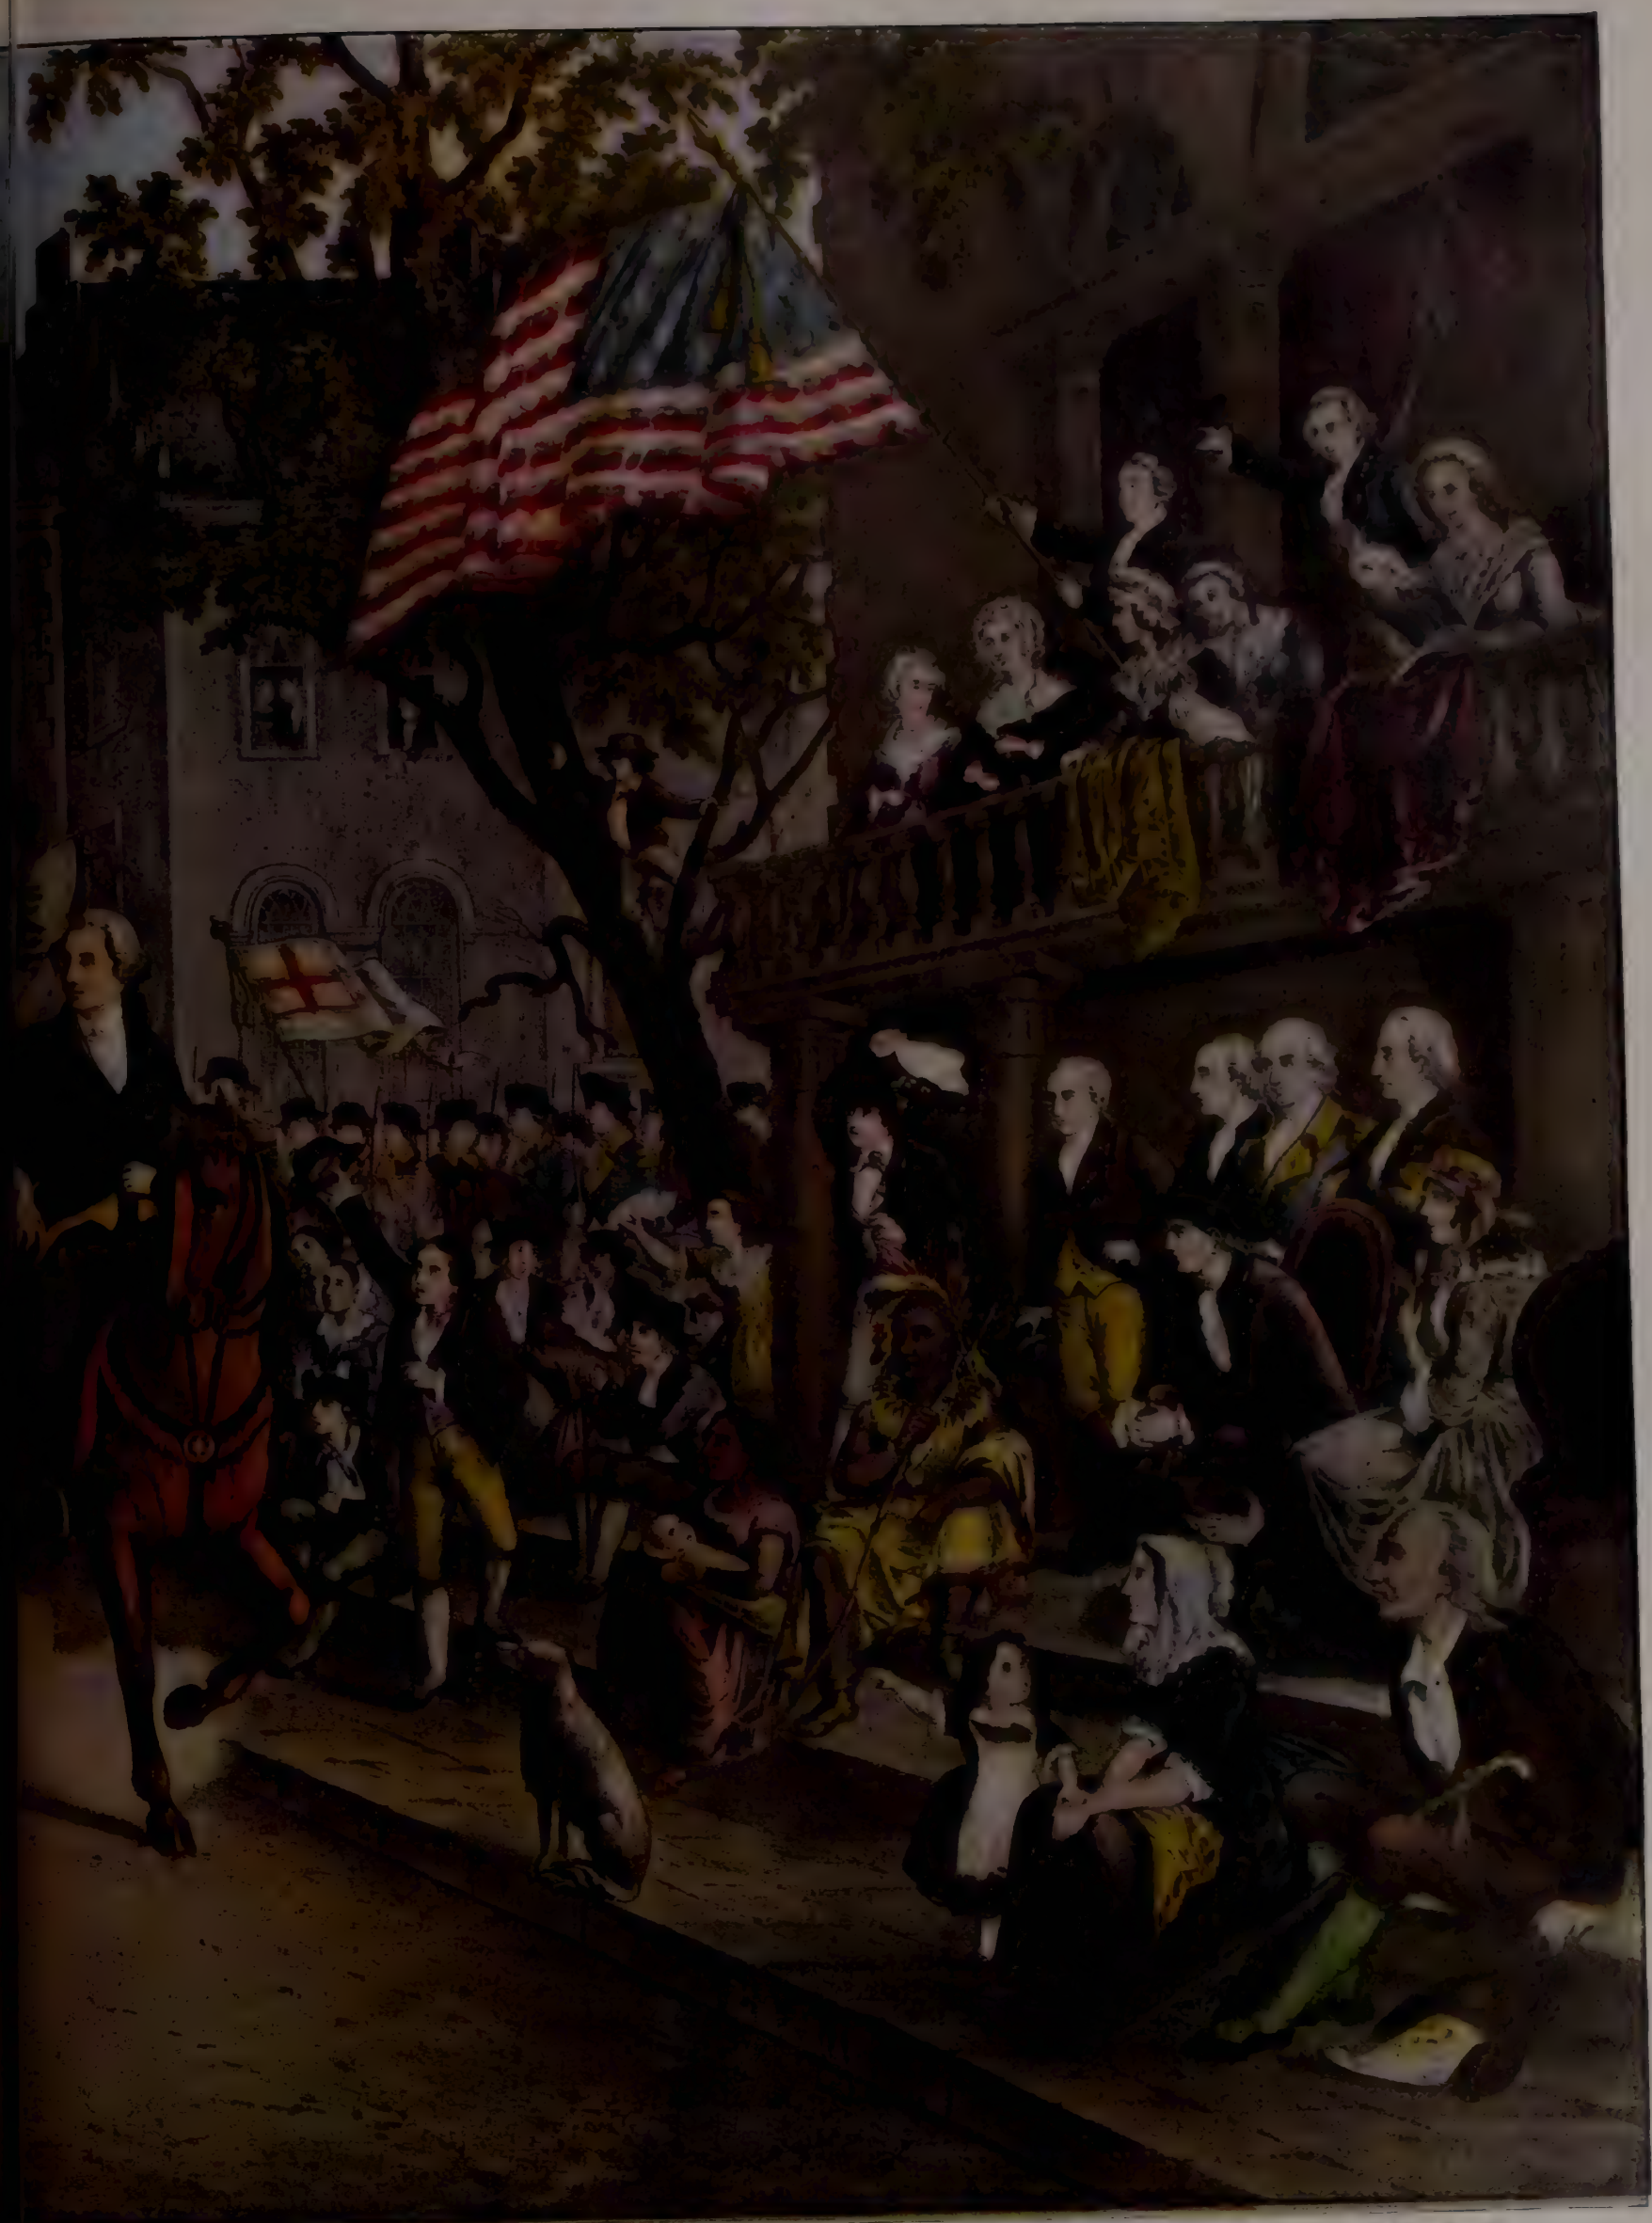
Rear-Admiral (Retired), U. S. Navy.

WASHINGTON'S TRIUMPHAL ENTRY NEW



NEW YORK CITY, NOVEMBER 25, 1783

"OF SUCH IS THE KINGDOM"

By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON

SCENE I.

Rosy Calvaire

IT is the year of our Lord 1906. At the top of a four-story building, called a candy-box factory, in a room which swarms with other small girls like her, Rosy Calvaire, age in the flesh nine years, in the spirit God knows how old, stands in front of a box-making machine turning in the edges of gaudy-colored papers, decorated with holly leaves, bright gilt angels, and miniature evergreen trees.

The child moves her fingers through the same short arc with incredible rapidity, skilfully avoiding the scissors-like feed of the machine, which loves little girls' fingers as a special delicacy at holiday time. Back and forth go the paste-covered little fingers, as they have been going since half-past seven that morning.

There is a heavy, sickening odor of sour paste in the air of the room. It is so thick that it would not surprise you at all if, on looking through a microscope, you could see this atmosphere hanging in folds, like sheets of mist, from the dirty ceiling. The whole building shakes under the children's feet, and at different intervals high piles of the light boxes topple over under the jar caused by the swaying of the tables. The foreman swears each time this happens, and sharply reprimands the girl in charge of the boxes, whose business it is to carry huge piles of them over to the crating department.

It is Sunday forenoon in the year of our Lord 1906, and the happy holiday time is only two weeks distant. Rosy Calvaire, standing at the box-making machine, has no time to look out of the dirty window back of the machine, but she has a child's recollection that out there across those city roofs, covered with black snow, there is a great stone church tower. Rosy has never been inside of a church, except once, when her mother carried her in to the cathedral for baptism; but she knows that high up in the tower there are some wonderful chimes, and she has heard them in the dark, early morning as she ran through the streets for fear of being late at the factory.

It is eleven o'clock. Only one hour to lunch. For three hours and a-half Rosy has been turning in the edges of the gorgeous-colored paper covers to the boxes. First, are dozens of holly wreaths. Then the pile of papers changes to the gilt angels blowing glad trumpets, and singing "glory to God in the highest." Then the pile changes again to holiday trees, all lighted with red, white, green and yellow wax candles. The dark, dingy, forbidding room at the top of the factory glows strangely with these piles and piles of dainty candy boxes, as the little girls carry them, in toppling pyramids, over to the crates, where men are packing them away and boxing them up for shipment; for the firm of Grab & Grind have sent in a rush order which must be filled in anticipation of Grab & Grind's great bargain sale of holiday candy boxes at twenty-five cents, filled with the most delicious chocolate creams, each one of which (this is not in the advertisement) represents a broken-hearted little child; for is it not a fact that nearly all chocolate creams are dipped, one at a time, by the worn fingers of some little girl, at the price of half a cent a pound and five cents an hour for overtime?

Suddenly, into the midst of the rumble and jar of the machinery, a child's scream is heard, as if someone had opened the door at the top of the paste-covered stairs and flung in something human among the machinery. Rosy's machine comes to a thudding stop. All the little girls look up with white, strained faces, and for a moment it is very still. The foreman and one or two of the men in the crating-room run over to a machine next Rosy's. A little girl lies on the floor screaming and holding her bleeding fingers up to her thin breast.

"'Phone for the ambulance!" said the foreman, roughly

"What do you want to be so careless for?" the foreman speaks roughly. "'Phone for the ambulance. Take her over to St. Mary's."

Rosy sees in a dulled, blurred vision the limp form carried out. She hears someone say, "Three fingers." Then, before the machines start up again, through the broken windows there floats the chime from the Cathedral,

> O little town of Bethlehem,
> How still we see thee lie.

Rosy does not know the words or the tune, but the chime-ringer at St. Mary's is practicing on the tune this Sunday morning in anticipation of Christmas only two weeks away, and—

"Here, get to work? What are you doing?" The foreman roughly twists Rosy's shoulder. Her machine has started up again, and, with a frightened look at the foreman, Rosy turns to her machine to find three boxes with the covers not turned in and broken against the retaining edge of the shelf.

"An hour's overtime for you!" the foreman says sharply. Rosy offers no word of excuse, she sheds no tear. Her heart hates the foreman as much as a nine-year-old heart can hate; but Rosy would scorn to cry, yes, even if she should be so careless as to lose three fingers in the scissors feed, and all that troubles Rosy is that she must work overtime without pay, and her mother needs her at home so badly this Sunday, because baby Angelo was so sick when Rosy left home in the morning. And the mother is sick, too. At noon the box factory whistle blows and the machines stop; half an hour for lunch. Rosy finds a seat on an old box. O, how good it is to sit down. Her legs are trembling and her hand shakes. She wipes her fingers on her dress front, which is smeared with dirty paste. A small girl, not much bigger than Rosy, comes staggering past with a basket of bread. It is a cheap variety of baker's bread, small, rounded stale loaves cut t two. Rosy takes one of these ends bread and gnaws at it. This is her lun and there is nothing else, so she eat all. She is thirsty and her head ach but she is afraid of the foreman, as w as hates him, and does not dare ask h to let her go to the crating-room to ge drink. In a few minutes the machi will start up, and then it is steady wo until nine. Nine? Ten o'clock for h and no pay for overtime! How she ha the foreman! How Rosy wishes his fing were cut off in the scissors feed! Or tongue! Yes, his tongue. That wou be even better than his fingers.

The door at the head of the slimy sta opens and a dirty-faced boy looks in the room cautiously. He enters abrupt steers his way through the room, with o eye on the sharp-faced foreman, until reaches Rosy. Then he stops in front of h and says enigmatically, "Better cut a run." Rosy rises with a frightened loo

"What is it, cully?"

"De baby kid has got de convulsion Yer mudder axed me to come an' tell yous Aw! cum off! Wots dat to youse!" T boy has caught the eye of the forema who starts after him. But the boy dodg behind a pile of boxes, deftly kicks ov another pile in front of the swearing for man, and makes good his retreat dow the pasty stairs with a parting yell derision.

That low, familiar hum of the startin machinery nerves Rosy. She springs u and confronts the foreman.

"O, Mr. Mort, let me go home! Bab Angelo—"

"Get to work!" says the foreman, he rises from the place where he ha fallen among the boxes.

Instinctively Rosy springs back to he old place in front of her machine as starts shoving the ends of the candy bo pieces down the shelf. For if she doe not keep up with the stream of boxes th the mouth of the machine is constantl spitting out at her, the ends will ge jammed against the shelf mould, and— and the box will be damaged—and tha will mean overtime. From half-pas twelve (for in rush-order time lunch i only half an hour) to nine at night. Th people are coming out of church now, go ing home to warm houses and big dinners Mr. Grab and his colleague, Mr. Grind who both own shares in the candy bo factory, are discussing holiday profits a they come out of the cathedral, whil the chimes up in the tower ring out th tune: "Joy to the world, the Lord i come. Let earth receive her King."

China's Pitiful Appeal for Bread

Fifteen Millions of Men, Women and Children at the Point of Starvation

A Staggering Calamity

Millions at Death's Door

Unless America, the land of unparalleled prosperity, speedily sends relief to the starving millions of China, the most frightful tragedy of the twentieth century will be enacted, and millions of helpless human beings will perish for the want of a crust of bread.

Save us, or we Perish!

The calamity that has befallen these peaceful, industrious people is not of their own creation. Rain fell, as in the days of Noah, for forty days without a break; the waters overflowed a hundred miles to the east and a hundred miles to the west, a hundred miles to the north and a hundred miles to the south, submerging farms, destroying crops, uprooting houses, and leaving despair, destruction and starvation in their track.

Killing the Aged and the Children

Thus forty thousand square miles were compelled to stand the unusual strain, and fifteen millions of people became impoverished. So intense is the suffering now that parents kill their children by throwing them in the rivers, or administering poison, and after this desperate act take their own lives.

The aged people are being drowned to prevent their death by the agonies of starvation. Everywhere throughout the length and breadth of the afflicted district people are dying in the fields, on the roads, and in the streets, literally falling in their tracks a prey to the cruel and relentless monster.

Boys Sell at $2.00; Girls at $3.00

One of the most pitiful phases is the uncontrolable grief of parents, who, in sheer desperation, sell their children for a mere pittance, and then, when they realize what they have done, like Rachel of old, refuse to be comforted, pleading with the purchaser for the restoration of their children, offering themselves to undergo servitude that their darlings might be set at liberty. Actual cases are known in which girls have been sold for three dollars and boys for two dollars, Mexican, which means half that amount in American money.

Little Children Moaning for Food

Rev. Dr. T. F. McCrea, Treasurer of the Missionary Relief Committee, writes:

Leaves and coarse mill feed, ordinarily given only to hogs, now sell for as much as good food usually costs. Trade is paralyzed. People are homeless, listless, hopeless. Furniture and clothing—what little was saved from the cruel flood—are sacrificed and the poverty-stricken parents hear the hungry children cry and moan in the night, while they themselves crouch helplessly on a damp mat in some remote corner.

I think of that day when Christ fed the hungry five thousand, and I wonder if Christ's people will follow in His footsteps, and have compassion on these hungry thousands in China, who must perish with cold and hunger unless we help them.

Your cablegram received last night. We are greatly rejoiced that THE CHRISTIAN HERALD is at work for us in the homeland. This inspires hope.

Shall These Little Lambs Perish?

Dr. J. Sumner Stone, the well-known pastor of a Methodist church in New York City, and now traveling in China, writes THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as follows:

Fifteen million people are already in the grasp of famine. Seven millions are now helpless. They are living on a gruel made of beans and sweet potato leaves. Even this will soon be gone. Already the people are drowning or giving opium to their aged relatives and their children, and selling their little girls into nameless slavery. I love children too much to see them exposed to hunger or shame without crying loudly to their friends to come to their help. It is not the will of our heavenly Father that one of these little ones should perish.

The Worst Famine in 40 Years

The Viceroy of one of the afflicted provinces states that the famine is "ten times worse than any known in the last forty years." He tells of a family consisting of husband, wife and two children. The mother went foraging for food, and during her absence the father threw the children into the river and drowned them. On her return the mother asked for her children, and was told that the father could not bear too see them gradually starving to death, and as there was no chance of feeding them, he made away with them. The mother, greatly distressed, flung herself into the river, following her children. The head of the family, in utter despair at the loss of his all, took his life also. The whole family thus perished.

A Noble And Consistent Record

Christian America has never yet turned a deaf ear to the pitiful cry of agonizing despair. The whole world bears eloquent witness to her generous and prompt responsiveness to every worthy appeal, and in this calamity, greater than any yet witnessed in the twentieth century, she will unquestionably prove herself worthy the noble record of the past, and share in generous measure the abundance wherewith she has been so bountifully blessed.

Help Them to Help Others

Missionaries now working in China have been so affected by the scenes of heartrending suffering which they have been compelled to witness that, though their hearts are breaking, their tears refuse to flow.

They themselves have given all they had and all they could borrow, and now they are daily inditing pathetic communications, and sending them broadcast, with the fervent prayer that God would move the hearts of their more fortunate brothers and sisters in distant lands to contribute largely in this hour of China's direst need, and thus help them to help those who are looking to them for salvation from impending death.

Human Flesh Actually Sold for Food

A correspondent of the Echo says:

In two districts, Sinchow and Paichow, starving and desperate people are eating their children, all the plants, grasses and roots having been exhausted. This correspondent adds that there have been many cases of cannibalism. Human flesh was actually being sold for food, although the ghoulish traffic was conducted secretly.

Alive In Her Dead Mother's Arms

A correspondent of the Shanghai Mercury, after visiting the famine districts, writes:

Your correspondent saw the famine here in '98, and it was awful. He has often said since that he hoped he would never have to see another, but all agree that it is going to be worse this time than it was then. Many here are sick from what they are eating, and the color of the skin is already darkening and is quite noticeable.

A woman was traveling with her baby girl a year old. Weakened by her long journey and lack of food, she fell an easy prey to the fever and died by the side of the road, clasping tightly her little child. For two days the little living child was left in its dead mother's arms. Who on that road, with hunger and fever driving them on could stop to heed even the cry of a helpless baby?

Let Us Help Them Quickly

And shall they look in vain? Shall they be disappointed? Shall we lead them to believe that our religion is mere profession? Shall we shut up the bowels of our compassion and tell them that American money and American grain are for Americans only—that religion is one thing and charity quite another? Or shall we open our hearts our hands, out purses and our granaries, and in the name of our Master whom we serve, bid them share with us the bounties of our Heavenly Father's goodness?

They Are Looking This Way

For many years these godly men and women have pointed the people to the Saviour, and countless thousands have accepted him and have been baptized in the Faith. Indeed, the cause of Christ is making wondrous progress among the [illegible] population of China, and now that disaster [illegible] befallen them and death is threatening t[illegible] what wonder that they are hoping for help [illegible] this country whence hail the missionaries, [illegible] have told them again and again the beau[illegible] story of one Jesus who went about doing g[illegible] who fed the multitudes, and whose followe[illegible] this prosperous country are walking in the [illegible] steps of their Master, daily testing their live[illegible] the standard he established, and ever as[illegible] themselves, What would Jesus do?

The Continent of Our Saviour's Bi[illegible]

This pathetic cry for bread comes fr[illegible] the continent of Asia, concerning wh[illegible] the late Dr. Talmage said:

Egypt gave to us its monuments, Rome gav[illegible] us its law, Germany gave to us its philosophy, [illegible] Asia gave to us its Christ. His mother an Asia[illegible] the mountains that looked down upon h[illegible] Asiatic; the lakes on whose pebbly banks [illegible] rested and on whose chopped waves he walk[illegible] Asiatic; the apostles whom he first commission[illegible] Asiatic; the audiences he whelmed with [illegible] illustrations drawn from blooming lilies and [illegible] crystals, and great rainfalls, and bellowing t[illegible] pests, and hypocrites' long faces, and croak[illegible] ravens—all those audiences Asiatic. Christ dur[illegible] his earthly stay was but once outside of Asia.

Let One and All Join Hands

Let every community be represented. Let eve[illegible] Church, Sunday School, Home and Foreign M[illegible] sion Society do its share. Let Sunday Sch[illegible] Officers, Teachers and Scholars vie with ea[illegible] other in hastening to the rescue of this unfort[illegible] nate people. This is one of the greatest opp[illegible] tunities to do good in the Master's name. [illegible] are His almoners. He gave up all for us, and no[illegible] through these starving ones he claims a share [illegible] what he has entrusted to our care. Are we u[illegible] just stewards? God forbid!

WASHINGTON

February 1, 1907.

Dear Doctor Klopsch:

The President has asked me to say to you that he is much interested in your work to raise funds for the sufferers by the present dreadful famine in China. He hopes that you will meet with the same success that you have had in similar appeals to the humanity and liberality of our people.

As a contribution to the fund he has handed me his check for $100, which I enclose, together with a similar check of my own. With best wishes. I am,

Very sincerely yours,
ELIHU ROOT.

Dr. Louis Klopsch,
The Christian Herald, New York City.

Help or they Perish

We urge upon every reader to join this life-saving crew and to throw out to these starving people the life-line, before it is too late. Pray that God's people everywhere may realize the importance and urgency of the case and may willingly and cheerfully give, even as God has prospered them.

Young People's Societies, Epworth Leagues, Christian Endeavorers, work earnestly; for the night of death threatens to enshroud a continent. You can give the clouds a silver lining and you will do it. This is the King's business. It requires haste. Every day's delay may prove fatal. Let us then be up and doing. He that sitteth in the heavens watches. His eye is upon us. What we do let us do it as unto Him, and he that seeth in secret and rewardeth openly will bless us with an everlasting blessing.

The Daughters of the King

There are in every community godly women, sympathetic and kind: consecrated women, who long to do good, as they have opportunity, and to aid the poor, the suffering and the distressed. We look confidently to them for aid at this time. They can work, they can speak, they can plead, pray and give, May God call them to this mission and graciously prosper the work of their hearts and their hands.

Every contribution for the relief of the great Famine in China will be promptly acknowledged in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Lot asks he may be allowed to go to , a little city nearby, to which ngels consent. 9. Lot and his ly having gone out of Sodom, the rains fire and brimstone upon it, and city and people are destroyed. Lot his family reach Zoar in safety.

The Problem of the City

1920 B.C., when Abraham was called, a small fraction of the people lived in s. It was a world of shepherds. In A.D. a majority of the people of the ed States, as of most other countries, live in cities. It will be a bad ruler will then come to power if we do convert the city before its coronation. ady it is the supreme problem for the iot and the Christian alike, whether Devil or Christ is to rule the cities that soon rule the world.

his lesson suggests three ways that om might have been saved, and so three ways by which the worst city of to-day may be saved: (1) By persistent prayer; (2) by Christian citizenship; (3) by one good man saving another.

Persistently pray for the city. So long as Abraham prayed, Sodom was saved. As when Moses' hands were held up in persistent prayer by Aaron and Hur, victory over Amalek was intensified, but the enemy's complete rout was prevented by their yielding to weariness and allowing his hands to fall, so the fires that waited to attack Sodom were driven back again and again while Abraham prayed, and only came on the city after his faith and persistency gave out, when God had said he would not destroy Sodom if ten righteous men could be found in it, and the ten could not be found. Perhaps God would have saved it if Abraham had persisted in prayer, though none but Lot could be found with whom God could work for that city's redemption, especially as Abraham's prayers might have been Lot's mighty re-enforcement, like the prayers of John Knox for Scotland, had Abraham prayed unceasingly, "Give me a saved Sodom or I die."

In this case it was the country praying for the city, and why should not every moral church and every moral home persist in earnest prayer for our wicked cities? Abraham, indeed, had a relative in the wicked city to prompt his prayers, but how many country homes have the same reason to pray! The sins of young men in the city mean parental heartbreaks on the farm. Rural churches have a great concern in city missions, and should be glad to have home missionary efforts devoted largely to these crowded centres.

Let the country help the city also by sending, as in the past, praying youth, fortified by their own and their parents' prayers, to re-enforce the moral and religious forces in the city. Every family altar and family pew neglected in the country, means increased moral peril in the city, whose strong men—strong physically and morally—have hitherto been the developed boys that came in from the farms.

Lord Cairns, who was both a great and a busy man, declared shortly before his death: "If I have accomplished anything in the world, I attribute it to the fact that the first hour of every day of my life for years has been given to communion with God in secret prayer and the study of his Word." He was often detained till a late hour by his parliamentary duties, but he rose at the usual hour just the same for his Bible study and prayer. On one occasion he attended a Cabinet meeting under Lord Beaconsfield, at which matters of grave national importance were discussed about which his colleagues were much agitated. Calmly and deliberately Lord Cairns made suggestions, which helped to simplify the difficult business, upon which another Cabinet Minister said to him: "Earl Cairns, how is it you are so calm?" He answered: "I have talked this thing over with God." Another of his colleagues exclaimed: "Earl Cairns, do you pray over everything?" He replied: "Why, certainly; do you suppose I come to a Cabinet meeting without first having talked it over with God?"

Possibly you have heard of the "Plimsoll Line." It is a mark recorded on a vessel above the water-line, and it is unlawful to load any ship so that this mark is below water. The "Plimsoll Line" was established through Mr. Samuel Plimsoll. Anticipating that his bill would be strongly opposed, he prayed earnestly that it might become law. When the day came for him to address the House of Commons, a few friends met by arrangement in one of the adjoining rooms and prayed that God would guide the assembled members to a right decision. Mr. Plimsoll was naturally timid, but ere he entered the debating chamber there flashed through his mind these words: "I Am hath sent me unto you." He wrote these words on paper, and went forth to speak. The House of Commons passed the bill, and it is in operation to-day.

Famous Prying Men

When a boy is sneered at for praying, he may well remember that the great men of history have been praying men: Abraham, Moses, Samuel, Isaiah, Daniel, Paul, Luther, Washington, Lincoln, Gladstone, Browning, and many more. It would be foolish to be ashamed to be one of those who talk with the King of Kings "as a man talketh with his friend." Abraham was called "the friend of God" We, too, can share his friendship by prayer.

Let Abraham praying for Sodom remind us that we should pray with faith and hope for even chiefs of sinners, to whom Paul says: "the Gospel is the power of God unto salvation."

At the opening of a mission chapel in one of the small cities of China, a man entered early and sat down in front of the missionary. "I am so glad you have come to preach in our small town," he exclaimed. "Yours is excellent doctrine." "May I ask where you have heard the doctrine, sir? Have you read our sacred books?" "No, I have never heard a word, or read anything about it. I have seen it." "How so?" "There was a man in our neighborhood, a pirate, a violent, quarrelsome man, and the terror of the place. Now he is changed, he is a new man." "And how do you account for that?" "This doctrine took hold of him, and the pirate has become an orderly citizen, and the quarrelsome man, gentle, kind and honest. Yes, sir, I have seen it, and I am glad you have come here to preach the doctrine."

Christian Citizenship Needed

We need men and prayers to save a city. Let us not forget that if there had been ten aggressively righteous men in Sodom, the city would have been saved—partly by their active Christian citizenship.

In Ecclesiastes (10: 14, 15), we hear of "a little city," that is, a village, saved by "one poor man," whose name is known only in heaven. "There was a little city, and few men within it; and there came a king against it, and beseiged it. Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city; yet no man remembered that same poor man." What mattered it that he was not appreciated by his fellow citizens? Why should not that story be repeated in every village, where there are foes to fight, that one fearless, earnest man could put to rout?

The Story of a Transplanted Church*

"THAT church has actually grown to be what all churches should be, the Body of Christ—his mouth, his feet, his loving hands, ministering in his stead and in his name to all his children. And thus the Transplanted Church has become, through God's grace and his people's obedience, the Church Transformed."

Just how this modern miracle took place—just how the Tuxedo Avenue Church, from an edifice of stone and mortar, became a marvelous temple of the living God, is told in the form of a parable, by a man whose book will be used for the advancement of Christ's kingdom. Every reader who turns to its first page with the preparation of a soul sincerely desiring to learn how to serve the Master, will read on with swelling heart and gathering tears, as he feels the truth shining clear and white, freed from the ghastly, mummy-like wrappings in which she is too often enshrouded among the so-called "fashionable" churches of the present day.

A wealthy Christian gentlewoman conceives the plan of moving the "Grace Evangelical Church" from Tuxedo Avenue to Water Street in a night. Calling in the services of a clever architect and contractor, the seemingly impossible is accomplished, and the deed is done. When the Sabbath morning church-bells ring, and the perfectly appointed equipages begin to sweep down the avenue, the great structure is gone, traced finally by its distracted congregation to the slums, where it is already occupied by a singing multitude of shirt-sleeved, bare-headed, ragged men and loud-voiced women. In unspeakable astonishment and confusion, the rich and the poor sit down together, while the old deacon, true saint of God, seeks out the bewildered pastor in his study, and leads him forth to face such a congregation as never before had gathered within those walls. "Silks and rags were neighbors. Millionaires and beggars sat in the same pew." And before this motley throng it was given the exclusive young Doctor of Philosophy to be used as the mouthpiece of Christ himself. His lips were touched with the sacred fire, and he sent home to the depths of every human comprehension in the vast audience a realization of the true brotherhood of man of which they had never dreamed before.

"Yes, we are all God's people. 'God hath made of one blood all nations of men.' 'Of one blood,' and that is his own blood. God has opened his own veins, and poured out his own life into your being and mine, alike in Africa and China and Italy, equally in the palace and the hovel. We should be near to one another if we were brothers and sisters. How much nearer are we, now that through our bodies courses the one blood of him who made brothers and sisters, who established brotherhood and sisterhood!

"Oh, the great truth of the Fatherhood of God! I never knew it till this mysterious moment. If there is any man, anywhere, to whom you would feel more closely akin if he were the son with you of your earthly father, then you do not realize the divine Fatherhood."

The story—or shall we call it an inspiration?—goes on to picture the new birth of that church and its people, to describe the manner of its "going forth, as all churches will some day go forth, to the place where the need is, where the work and the blessedness are." Bit by bit, it accomplishes its glorious regeneration, and, "in place of the old formalism and selfish exclusiveness, is a spirit of radiant self-giving."

The story has already run as a serial. Ministers have read it to their people, and have written its author of the effect upon their lives and upon their churches. It has been translated into Japanese, and will soon be produced in the Bohemian language. It is a distinct influence for the growth of the Christ-spirit.

Day on the Road, or Crossing the Plains in 1865, was first printed many years ago as a serial, by Mrs. Sarah Raymond Herndon, who, as Miss Raymond, lived the experiences of which she afterwards wrote. The book, in journal form, is distinctly refreshing. It is like a whiff of the prairie breezes to the "dwellers in cities" who read it, and is a clear-cut 'picture of the days of pioneer life in Montana and the "Great West." As the reader turns the last page, it is with a sigh of regret that the day of the "prairie-schooner" is forever past. Pp. 270. Burr Printing House, New York.

The Mohammedan World of To-day is in reality a verbatim report of the first missionary conference on behalf of the Mohammedan world, held at Cairo, April 4 to 9, 1906. The papers delivered at that Conference are given in toto, and the reader gains through their perusal a comprehensive insight hitherto unknown, in connection with Islam in Egypt, West Africa, Arabia, Turkey, North India, Persia and many other of its strongholds. The illustrations form a suitable and explanatory accompaniment to the text. Pp. 302. Price $1.50. Fleming H. Revell Company, New York.

The Italian in America is written in collaboration by Eliot Lord, A.M., who furnishes statistics of the U. S. Tenth Census; John J. D. Trenor, chairman of Immigration Committee in 1904, and Samuel J. Barrows, secretary of New York's Prison Association. The design of the book is to present clearly the contribution of Italy to American development and citizenship. The authors believe that true American policy should be to exclude what is essentially bad, from whatsoever source it comes, and to welcome what is good and helpful, even if yet imperfectly developed. B. F. Buck & Co., New York, publishers. Pp. 268.

Beulah Marie Dix has again increased the debt owed her by the reading public for her former stories, by writing the charming and exciting romance of Merrylips. The dedication of the book, "To every little girl who has wished for an hour to be a little boy," gives an inkling of what is to follow. The story is laid in the days of the great civil war in England, when King and Parliament strove for the supremacy. Roundheads and cavaliers fill every chapter with excitement and make the career of the youthful heroine one of thrilling interest, as the fortunes of war place her in the power, first of one side and then in that of the other. To give a resume of the plot here would deprive the reader of half his pleasure. He should follow the adventures of the little lady and Rupert for himself. The stirring description of the siege of Monksland alone is worth the price of the book. Cloth, 307 pages. Illustrated by Frank T. Merrill. Price $1.50. Macmillan & Co.

A Faithful Librarian Honored

In recognition of his services as Librarian of the Baptist Church Sunday School, at North Orange, N. J., Alonzo L. Keys was lately presented with a valuable set of books, in fifteen volumes, entitled Beacon Lights of History. The presentation was made by Mr. Sidney M. Colgate, the Superintendent. During the thirty years he has been librarian, Mr. Keys has been absent but seven times, and since July 21, 1895, when he attended the Convention of Young People's unions in Baltimore, he has not been away from a single session. Mr. Keys, in a few brief and appropriate remarks, expressed his thanks for the gift and his appreciation of the spirit which prompted it.

A Popular ELGIN

Every watch movement bearing the name ELGIN is the best movement of its kind made.

There are varying grades of ELGIN movements—the values of which are fixed by the number of jewels and the quality of materials used in construction.

The movement which meets the great demand for a popular-priced watch is the famous G. WHEELER movement, a name almost as great as ELGIN itself.

This movement can now be had in the popular sizes, for men's and boys' use, and in the models so much desired. Ask your dealer.

JETT'S CREEK

*By Dr. Edward O. Guerrant, Wilmore, Ky.

T was a cold day when I started to ett's Creek, and a long way; but ney had urged so persistently, I not refuse.

A undred miles took me to Elkatawa, e I spent the night with Brother , the faithful Welsh missionary. He a ght in a dark place; salt that has t st its savor. The world needs more l en with the spirit of the Master.

S o'clock next morning found me on ay to Jett's Creek, several miles m he railroad, on the beautiful middle f the upper Kentucky River. "Proc- l" met me at Athol with a led horse, d ent with me to the old schoolhouse J t's Creek, where I preached at 10 M Saturday. There is no church here, a the valley is filled with people, d early one hundred children in this t alone. They beg for a good and church, and offer all they are h help build them.

O old man with a big family and a s son, born blind, said he would give y nd he owned and $150 to have a s chool and church. The others were u y anxious and liberal. I wonder w hey get any money in so wild and o country. Most of it is made by g out railroad ties and floating them w the river to market. Only children e undant.

I ned in a little two-room house with y ng couple who had seven children, d spent the night where there were c . I have never seen a finer lot of il en. Many of them go barefooted i nter, and some of them till they are o . Few of them are warmly clad; t ey are happy and contented, and w heir mountain homes with a strange o ry. I begged for one bright boy out s en, in an open hovel of one room, l to be indignantly refused. He u n't go to the palace of a king. They s be saved and educated at home.

N ht found me far up on Puncheon a after preaching at 2 P.M. I crossed e ver and stopped at "Proctor Bill's" o little cabin under the mountain, r from anywhere. I am glad gener- s ands have given him help to provide b ter home soon. The Puncheon r ers are aroused to the need of a good h l and church; and old Mr. Herald w the most beautiful site on the river r church and college, several acres, e mouth of Puncheon Camp. His o ve all the timber to erect the build- g and $100 besides. Others were as e l. I have never known the High- e s so enthusiastic in their zeal for t things. They are beginning to a e as never before their sore need o th religion and education. The l is breaking on this mid-continent of r ess. They need and deserve the l f all who love God and their fellow They are anxious to help them- v , and surely heaven will help them. E ly Sunday morning found us on the j o the foreign field on Jett's Creek. I s a raw November day, and I never s t the utter desolation of these poor, m n mountains, with the wild waste of and peaks and little cabins. Surely n t must have been in such a country he wrote:

> The melancholy days are come,
> The saddest of the year,
> Of wailing winds, and naked woods,
> And meadows brown and sere.

p aths and roads were full of people to church, mostly on foot, or two on r se. Mrs. Little and her children a t 3 A. M. to get ready to walk three to church, down the river and up Creek. At 10 A. M. the house

o k of the Society of Soul-Winners, which y s 100 evangelists in the mountains of Ken- , Tennessee, North Carolina, and Virginia. was crowded, some standing up. Before me sat old Grandmother McIntosh, with her three-year-old grandchild in her arms, over whose possession her sixteen-year-old son was killed, and her son-in-law was desperately wounded last week. Oh, for the Gospel of peace and good-will in this country! Whose sin is it that they do not have it? It is somebody's. May God help you if it is yours.

At 2 P. M. this bleak November day the house was crowded again, though nine-tenths of the people had walked home and back. What a privilege to preach to such people! When I was done I asked all Christians who had changed hearts and loved God to stand up. Probably a score stood, mostly women. I then asked all who wished to be Christians and have changed hearts and desired to love God to stand up, and every one in the house stood. No man can read human hearts, but I hope and expect to meet many of them beyond these desolate mountains in the Paradise of God. No man deserves such a reward, but they need and deserve it as much as any I know. They are the "lost sheep" for whom the Good Shepherd is seeking.

Testimony a Duty*

FROM the beginning of the Christian dispensation, testimony has been the chief agency in the propagation of the Gospel. It was natural that it should be so. There is no recommendation equal to that of the man who can say, "I have tried it; it has blessed me; it has transformed my life." And when that testimony is accompanied by a life showing the fruit of Christianity, when men can see without verbal testimony that a man is really better and happier for his religion then the effect is irresistible. The story is told of a clergyman who received an application for membership from a man who had sat under his ministry for a long time, that he asked which of his sermons it was that had led him to Christ. "None of them," was the reply; "it was the character of a workman whose bench is next to mine. His gentleness, his patience, his helpfulness and uniform cheerfulness impressed me so much that I asked him how he had attained such perfection of character. He told me it was all due to the influence of Christ. I saw he had a good thing, the thing I had been trying for all my life, and I determined to get it too." That was the testimony of the life.

After all, preaching of the best kind is merely testimony. The preaching of the Gospel by an outsider, who has never felt the power of the Gospel, however eloquent and logical he may be, fails in this, and though he may draw large audiences who delight to listen to his sermons, few, if any, are won to Christ by him. When he dies his influence ceases, and there is nothing to show that he had ever lived. On the other hand, the man who preaches the faith that is in him, who declares the Gospel as he feels it, exerts an influence that is eternal, going on from one convert to another, multiplying to the end of time. No Christian is justified in leaving this power unused. He is bound in honor, and under the Lord's command, to acknowledge the power that has saved him, to tell men what Jesus has done for him, and to recommend him to his friends. What would be thought of a man who had been cured of some deadly disease, if he held his peace when there was an epidemic of that disease and men were dying of it all around him? If he did not proclaim the skill of the physician who had saved him and was willing to save others, men would call him a culpable ingrate.

Ollie Shannon, who is so warm and comfortable now in the St. Mary's Hospital, minus three fingers, but quite happy, because the nurse has smiled at her after she has come out from the influence of the ether, and lies there staring at a golden-crowned saint on the wall near her cot.

Three o'clock in the afternoon! Only seven hours more! Rosy leans her thin body against the shelf in front of her for support. The endless stream of boxes seem all tied together, they come pouring out so fast. How can this mite of a nine-year-old girl understand that since lunch time the machines have all been geared up by the foreman to run at the highest rate of speed. How else can Grab & Grind's order be filled? For there are other rush orders waiting, and Grab & Grind, besides being important stockholders in the factory, have emphasized the fact in their order that several churches and Sunday Schools in Kansas and Nebraska and Missouri and Colorado have sent in orders for candy boxes, and must have them for their holiday entertainments before the twentieth of the month.

The sharp-faced foreman is all over the room at once. He seems to have eyes all over his head. The floor trembles more than ever under the increased speed of the machines. The little dirty fingers fly faster and faster, and every child understands the penalty for soiling the outside of the dainty boxes when the edges of the paper are turned in. It means that dread overtime without pay. Rosy's pile of papers has now changed to another kind, added since lunch. She is now turning in the edges of a beautifully-colored wrapper, which has a picture on it of a sweet-faced baby lying in a cradle, and underneath are the words: "Merry Christmas!" The letters dance in front of Rosy, and she sobs as she leans her little body harder against the shelf, and a mist comes over her eyes, which she wipes with the back of her little hand at the risk of losing a motion which belongs to the boxes. It is five o'clock now, and the lights have been turned on, and it almost seems to warm the room a little. But the blur over Rosy's eyes comes oftener, her legs tremble more; her fingers are numb, and her feet are as cold as ice. Her head throbs, and her sobs come quick. And then—O, thank God, if there is a God—then all the machines begin to slow down, and finally they all stop. The foreman darts over to the crating-room, where something has gone wrong with the hoisting belt, and Rosy almost falls down on the old box which was her seat during lunch time.

The mist in her eyes clears away a little, and then she notes the absence of the foreman. She starts to her feet and looks fearfully around. The one hate of her little heart is the foreman. He is simply a hired hand of Grab & Grind, but Rosy does not know that. And the one love of her little heart is baby Angelo. Rosy turns from her now silent machine and glides swiftly around the piled-up boxes, making for the door through which the boy had entered to tell her that baby Angelo was very sick at home. The other little girls watch her with eyes of indifference, or apathy or amusement. As she lays her hand on the knob of the door a little group of girls nearby begin to laugh. Rosy sees the foreman coming back. She turns the knob of the door and pulls with all her little strength. The door will not open. The girl nearest Rosy whispers to her, "Mort locked it right after lunch. We's here to stay until he lets us out."

The foreman comes up. "Here! get back. You can't go out."

Rosy screams. Then she cries at the foreman, "Baby Angelo's sick. Mamma's sick. I want to go home."

The foreman hesitates. He is not exactly a devil—the foreman. He is the hired man of Grab & Grind. He has children of his own, and he is working for pay.

"Is that true?" he asks of the group of girls near Rosy. In the language of the trade which hires little girls, they are "good" girls and make very little trouble. Grown-up men locked into a factory in America would probably wreck the building to get out, or kill the foreman who tried to lock them in; but little children in America have no trades union to look after their interests, and so the good little girls reply in answer to the foreman's question, "Rosy's little baby brother is sick all the time. Nothing new."

"Get back to your machine," says the foreman. Rosy shrinks from his hand and creeps back to her old place. As the monster in front of her starts its growl again, her dry sobs change to a flood of tears. The first half-dozen boxes that come pouring out at her receive large splashes. Down on the white face of the little baby in the cradle Rosy's hot tears drop, and in the haste of the rush order the damaged boxes are carried without notice out to the crating-room and packed into the case directed to Grab & Grind. Nobody sees these tears but God, and He does not seem to care.

Rosy cries away all the tears her little body contains, and then she stands in front of her machine in a dogged, inhuman fashion, hating the foreman, hating the factory, hating the gorgeous boxes, hating all her little universe, not including God, for she knows or thinks very little about God. He does not enter into her thought, either to hate or to love. How should he? Grab & Grind, who go to church regularly every Sunday morning, have never taught Rosy that God is Love. No one has ever taught her. All she has ever known since she was born was work. All she can remember is labor. Ever since she was able to carry baby Angelo, when she was four years old, until this Sunday evening, Rosy has never been to Sunday School or heard of Jesus, except in a burst of profanity from the foreman; and yet Rosy lives in a city which has dozens of churches that cost over $5,000,000 apiece, and one that is valued by the assessor at $27,000,000.

Seven o'clock now. A light snow is falling on the blackened roofs outside. The foreman passes by Rosy. He stops.

"You needn't stay for the overtime. You can go at nine," he says. Rosy catches her breath, but says nothing, and the foreman passes on.

Eight o'clock now in the box factory. Only one hour more for Rosy. Under the regular work of the factory, the children are allowed to go out and get their supper of soup and boiled meat and potatoes at a company restaurant, but in rush-order time they can wait until they get home. The minister in the big downtown church nearby with the chimes comes into the pulpit wearing his silk gown, and the congregation rises as he opens the morocco-covered prayer book, and speaks in his deep, sonorous, cultured voice.

And then, a few minutes later, the quartette rises and begins the "Gloria in Excelsis": "Glory be to God on high, and on earth peace, good-will towards men. We praise thee, we bless thee, we worship thee, we give thanks to thee for thy great glory, O Lord God, heavenly King, God the Father Almighty."

The great church is redolent with the perfume of careless wealth, lavish with adornment, and reeking with display of fashion. As Rosy goes running past a few minutes after nine, the congregation is coming out.

GIAN HARES, SQUIRRELS AND CATS

elgian hares are in especial favor at ent, not only as pets, but, alas! for r edible value as well. They are no e difficult to raise than other breeds of bit, and require about the same care.

squirrels are not so popular as pets as ays gone by, probably because they e an uncertainty of disposition which sionally results in sharp bites, even n they are most gently handled. Nev- eless, there is a considerable demand them, and as they are easily raised it ell for the pet farmer to add some of n to her stock.

avies, contrary to the general belief, e considerable intelligence, and may taught many little tricks. They are garious little fellows, and do not thrive n compelled to live solitary lives. They uniformly gentle, hence make ideal pets.

he highly bred cat is decidedly gain- in favor in this country as a pet in the es of the wealthy. Witness: The esford Cat Club, with Mrs. Clinton ke, of Chicago, as President, has a ance in the treasury of $760 and odd ts. Then there is the Pacific Cat b, a feline philanthropic institution, the profit from the sale of fine cats the poor, neglected or forgotten nalkin. Again, there are the Siamese, Wellesley, and others.

n England, most of the cat-show en- s have ladies as owners, such items as e Manchester show had a royal ex- itor in the person of Her Royal High- s Princess Victoria"; "Lady Marcus esford has been indefatigably helping the arrangements and offering prizes the Slaugh Championship Cat-Show"; ady Decies will represent the Chin- lla Club at the Isle of Thanet"; "Sir ude Alexander has just joined the Club"; prove with what favor fashionable people regard pussy. What is in vogue is always in demand, so there can hardly be any question of plenty of customers for a good cattery.

The beginner who is keeping only one or two cats, and can't afford to advertise, has only to consult a directory of the nearest town to find the address of stores devoted to pet stock, birds, etc. A letter to any one of them is nearly always sure to bring back a reply. In New York City or Chicago, the largest dry goods stores have departments devoted to the sale of pet animals. Often a card neatly written, or, better still, gotten up by a professional sign-writer, and placed in a woman's exchange or drug store, brings customers; and last of all, if you doubt your local possibilities, there are three or four journals which devote space to cats, and in the "wants" advertisement columns old and young felines are constantly being asked for.

The wisest way to commence, if you can spare the money, is to buy from a reliable breeder a well-bred lady puss, which will cost you about $25. If she has only four kittens she can rear them all. If the family should be six, hunt in the neighborhood for a common puss whose babies are of the same age. Remove the common kittens when the mother is absent, and let your two swell babies crawl about the nest. Mrs. Common Puss can always be made to accept this exchange; but she must be watched and coaxed at first, and care should be taken that she cannot get out and carry away her substitutes. In twenty-four hours after she has nursed the new arrivals, all anxiety may be dismissed. In big catteries, foster-mothers are always kept to help out in these emergencies. Your baby pussies should bring some five dollars apiece when three months old.

ARISTOCRATIC PUSSIES

There are so many distinct breeds of cats that you may have difficulty in deciding which to select; but don't try any more than one at first. The Persians seem to lead in the long-haired class, and the range in that family is almost endless, embracing as it does whites and blue eyes, black with amber orbs, tabbies, gray, brown, orange or silver, tortoise-shells, smokes, silvers, and the beautiful chinchillas.

Few people really understand cats; they say they have no affection and very little sense. This is simply not true. I know from long experience that there is as much fidelity among the much-abused pussies as there is among canines. The former form odd friendships, as the following will prove: Greykins (who started my pet stock), took a baby gray squirrel, which had been brought to me from a nest found in a tree that had to be cut down in the woods one spring. Grey had kittens at this time, and the squirrel was too young to eat, so I took him to her basket, and after a little coaxing she allowed him to nurse. From that time, for two years (when he was accidentally killed), they were the greatest friends you ever saw.

Try keeping cats as a business, and see how much pleasure you will derive from an occupation which is also a companionship, if you treat them as though they had brain and feeling.

The greatest aid to profitable pet stock-raising is having a natural love for dumb "beasties." Birds or animals, big or little, seem to know instantly the people who are to be trusted and who understand them sufficiently to help them in times of trouble; that gives them confidence, makes them so happy and contented that they raise little ones to the best advantage, when you reap the benefit.

The Time to Act is NOW

As long as death is certain and its coming is uncertain, every man with responsibility must admit that the time to act is now. In its sixty-four years of history the Mutual Life has paid its policy holders 738 millions because they acted on the idea that the time to act is now. This vast sum would have been vastly greater had it included the patronage of men with equal means, in equal health, with equal needs, who failed to apply the truth that the time to act is now.

The Mutual Life Insurance Company

has done untold good, has brought untold comfort to the needy as it has faithfully discharged its accruing obligations, but it has no way of helping the man who does not come to realize that the time to act is now. Let us show you what can be done to-day.

Duffy's Apple Juice

Contains the Juice of Two Ripe Apples

LIBERAL OFFER TO THE CLERGY

In order to introduce the greatest temperance beverage to temperance people, the AMERICAN FRUIT PRODUCT COMPANY has decided on a very liberal plan, and will send to every regularly ordained minister of the Gospel, who is now pastor of a congregation, a bottle of DUFFY'S 1842 APPLE JUICE, which is the pure juice of the apple,

It is non-alcoholic, sterilized and effervescent, and free from all preservatives.

It is a food and tonic for the entire family, and if used regularly no medicine will be required, as it drives the uric acid and impurities out of the blood, and keeps the system in a healthy condition.

Simply write to the AMERICAN FRUIT PRODUCT COMPANY, WHITE STREET, ROCHESTER, N. Y., state name of church you are pastor of, and a full size bottle of DUFFY'S APPLE JUICE will be sent you free, express prepaid.

We do this knowing that every minister of the Gospel is anxious to find a pure, wholesome, non-intoxicant non-alcoholic beverage which he can safely recommend to the members of his congregation.

A Mission of the Capitol City

THE Central Union Mission of Washington, D. C., is not only the leading mission organization of the Capitol City, but one of the leading missions of the country at large. It was organized in 1884, but quickly outgrew its quarters, and in 1892 the large six-story building on Louisiana Avenue was purchased, and has since been the mission's home, the entire building being used for mission purposes. The basement is used as a wood-yard, where meals and lodgings may be earned by sawing wood. The first floor has a chapel, where daily noon and evening religious services are held; there are also two dining-rooms, kitchen, and a waiting and reading-room. On the second floor are the office, board-rooms, and an auditorium capable of seating 1,000 persons; while on the upper stories are the library, women's and men's band-rooms, laundry and dormitories.

The management of the mission is under the control of a board of ten men, representing five different denominations, with a ministerial advisory council of ten ministers, one from each of ten denominations. There are also located in different portions of the city, a half a dozen or more branches, where religious services are held during the week, and in four of which successful Sunday Schools are conducted; two of these branches, measured by the extent and gratifying character of the work being done, would easily rank as independent missions.

From May to October, both inclusive, a Gospel Wagon holding an organ, eight or ten musicians and fifteen to twenty other workers, is used in conducting services at two prominent points on Sunday afternoons. At these meetings ministers of the city of the various denominations render most efficient services.

Experience has demonstrated the value of an industrial department in connection with rescue work. Very many come to the mission homeless, friendless and penniless, and are given an opportunity to earn a meal and lodging; they are thus brought into contact with the Gospel of Jesus Christ, as shown by kind words, a cordial greeting, and the recital of the simple story of redeeming love by men who were in like condition. They, too, being convinced that there is a better life are themselves plucked as brands from the burning, and by caring for them for a time, they are enabled to obtain employment and take their places as workers in the Lord's vineyard, helping to save some one else. Two of the men saved during the past year or two are in charge of the open-door branch, located in the tenderloin district of our city, one of whom was a bartender and the other the son of a Methodist minister. Another recent convert is a lawyer holding a good government position; another, a son of a former United States Senator; another, an expert jeweler; another, a manager of a large business. So that, while the mission is primarily doing a rescue work, yet an equally important work is being successfully done with the respectable unchurched classes, who never attend upon the services of an established house of worship.

The expense attending this work is about $5,000 a year, and is raised entirely by voluntary contributions; yet, notwithstanding the endorsement which it receives from the various organizations, the board of directors frequently find themselves lacking in funds to properly do the work already mapped out, or undertake new enterprises, however great the promise of good results may be.

An Opportunity for Service

OUR Lord left a special blessing to any of his followers who would give a cup of water in his name to a brother in need. He said that such persons "should in no wise lose their reward." Like all his teaching, his promise covers a wider field than the words. No one supposes that he intended the blessing to be limited to the water. It was a principle that when we see a brother needing any special gift, and we supply his need, our benefaction would surely be rewarded. To those who realize all Christ did for us, and who long to show their gratitude to him, this promise is very precious. It is as if he had said: "I know how you whom I save will love me and you will long to prove it, but may be in doubt as to the way. You would break an alabaster box of precious ointment, as the grateful woman did, if I were here, but you will not have that opportunity. I will tell you what you can do. When you see any one needing help of any kind, you can render it for my sake, because you love me. I will count it as done for me, and will take note of it, and will see that it shall in no wise lose its reward."

There is at the present time an opportunity of rendering a service of this character, and the readers of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will be glad to know of it. A young man in a prominent school in Rhode Island, who has proved his capacity for learning, and has in him the promise of becoming a brilliant and useful man, is suddenly and unexpectedly deprived of the means of continuing his studies. His teachers speak in the highest terms of his talents and industry, of the progress he has made, and predict for him a useful career, but he must leave school and go to work for his livelihood if no hand is stretched out to help him. In that case, a useful and efficient worker will be lost to the Church. He has, too, a special claim on Christian help, being the son of a widow, and so under the direct care of the God of the fatherless, who has scattered through his word benedictions on their helpers. Who is there who yearns to gain the promised blessing by giving to this lad, thirsting for knowledge, the cup of water that will assuage his thirst?

The need is only $150 a year for three years. Three dollars a week will cover it all, and equip this youth for a career of service. If twelve CHRISTIAN HERALD readers would agree to give twenty-five cents a week, the burden would be lifted. A Christian Endeavor Society or an Epworth League would find such a benefaction a very small tax on its funds. It should not be difficult in this broad land to find twelve individuals or societies to pledge themselves to send to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD office $12.50 on the first of every month for three years. The whole sum would be sent to the young student regularly, thus enabling him to finish his education. The subscribers would surely give their prayers for him in giving their money. Who can tell how much good to the Master's cause might come from a life thus equipped in faith with money and prayers?

A School for Policemen

At Cotthus, Prussia, is a novel training school for policemen. There are 26 courses in all, covering three months of study. When he graduates, the policeman will know about the German and Prussian constitutions, the Cabinet bureau under which he works, and his own powers, rights and duties; also something about the rights of citizens, detective work, the policing of the poor, beggars and tramps, health laws, food inspection and sanitary regulations; the regulation of public meetings; the measurement of criminals, and first help to the injured. None but graduates will be permitted to apply for positions on the police force.

Doing a Week's Washing In 6 Minutes—Read the Proo

THIS woman is using a 1900 Gravity Washer. All she has to do is keep the washer going. A little push starts it one way— a little pull brings it back—the washer does the rest.

The clothes stay still—the water rushes through and around them—and the dirt is taken out.

In six minutes your tubful of clothes is clean.

This machine will wash anything—from lace curtains to carpets, and get them absolutely, spotlessly, specklessly clean.

There isn't anything about a 1900 Gravity Washer to wear out your clothes.

You can wash the finest linen, lawn and lace without breaking a thread.

"Tub rips" and "wash tears" are unknown.

Your clothes last twice as long.

You save time—labor—and money.

You wash quicker—easier—more economically.

Prove all this at my expense and risk.

I let you use a 1900 Gravity Washer a full month FREE.

Send for my New Washer Book.

Read particulars of my offer.

Say you are willing to test a 1900 Gravity Washer.

I will send one to any responsible party, freight prepaid.

I can ship promptly at any time—so you get your washer at once.

Take it home and use it a month. Do all your washings with it.

And, if you don't find the machine all I claim—if it doesn't save you time and work—if it doesn't wash your clothes cleaner and better—don't keep it.

I agree to accept your decision without any back talk—and I will.

If you want to keep the washer—as you surely will when you see how much time, and work, and money it will save you—you can take plenty of time to pay for it.

Pay so much a week—or so much a month—as suits you best.

Pay for the washer as it saves for you.

I make you this offer because I want you to find out for yourself what a 1900 Gravity Washer will do.

I am willing to trust you, because you can probably get trusted at home. And, if your credit is good in your own town, it is just as good with me.

It takes a big factory—the largest washer factory in the world—to keep up with my orders.

So far as I know, my factory is the only one ever devoted exclusively to making washers.

Over half a million of my washers are in use.

Over half a million pleased women can tell you what my washers will do.

But you don't have to take even their say-so. You can test a 1900 Gravity Washer yourself. Then you will know positively.

Write for my book today. It is FREE.

Your name and address on a post card mailed to me at once, gets you my book by return mail.

You are welcome to the book whether you want to buy a washer now or not.

It is a big illustrated book, printed on heavy enameled paper, and has pictures showing exactly how my Washers work.

You will be pleased with this book. It is the finest even I have ever put out. Write me at once.

Find out just how a 1900 Gravity Washer saves your time and strength—preserves your health—and protects your pocketbook.

Helping Friendless Men in Vancouver

SEVERAL thousand miles from New York, on the island of Vancouver, in ne city of Victoria, the Women's Chris-an Temperance Union have been carry-g on a very suc-essful work on ractical lines. One ranch of their ork is a mission or men who are in strange land, far om home and with-ut friends.

Here they find a earty welcome, nd people who ake a personal in-erest in their wel-are. There is a free eading-room and a leasant dining-oom, where attrac-ive lunches are erved at the small-st possible cost. The latter is greatly ppreciated by hose who have met with reverses, yet wish to pay some-hing at least for what they receive.

Mrs. Field

Many men have difficulty when out of work to live in a respectable way, and his the mission helps them to do. There are also some sleeping rooms, the number of which will be increased as soon as the much needed funds can be secured. It is supported by voluntary subscriptions. Every little while some one whom the mission has helped to make a new start in life, returns to visit the mission and leave something towards helping others in distress.

The work was started several years ago in very cramped quarters. Some time ago better rooms were secured in a suitable part of the city near the landing places. Much of its success is due to the present manager, Mrs. Field, who has stood by it through many discouragements since she took charge three years ago. Her great tact and ready sympathy have won many friends for the Vancouver mission and the cause it represents.

Gave His Blood for Jesus

ONE Friday evening lately, when the Mission Hall of the Hebrew Williamsburg, N.Y., Christian Mission o the Jews was so crowded that a number of Jews had to be turned away for lack of standing room, a Jew of about forty came into the hall. Walking up the narrow isle, he looked about as if in search of a seat. When he reached the front row of chairs he stopped short and, without warning, stretched out his arm, extended the palm of his hand, bringing it down, with all the force he could possibly call into active service, upon the face of an eighteen-year-old young man, his son, whom he detected in the meeting. The young man had been frequenting the Mission where he had learned to love the Lord Jesus Christ. A few days later, when ex-Rabbi Leopold Cohn, the Superintendent of the Mission, met him he related his experience.

"That blow brought blood from my teeth," said he, with tear-dimmed eyes; "but," he added, "Jesus shed his blood for me, and this was only a little of mine that I gave for him."

Within the last ten months, a number of vaudeville shows have been opened in the neighborhood of the Mission. One of a group of Jews, standing in front of one of those show-houses, accosted Pastor Cohn, and a conversation followed. When he gently rebuked them for not studying the Bible, of which they are so ignorant, some of them criticised his talk. An old Jew, with a long gray beard and a patriarchal face, shook his hoary head and raised his hands, accompanied by gestures, which produced a sudden calmness in the crowd, and claimed the respectful attention of the bystanders.

"Children! children!" shouted the aged man, "Listen. Before these wicked houses, before these seats of the scornful came to this neighborhood, I used to worry and worry over the Mission House. I used to pass sleepless nights, as my heart ached over the many Jews that went there and learned about the Crucified One. Now I have ceased to worry about that. Now my heart is filled with pain because our young Jews visit these shows. Do you know why? I will tell you. My neighbor's boy of fifteen asked me some time ago, 'Uncle, was Abraham older than you?' 'What do you know about Abraham?' 'We heard the missionary say that Abraham was very old when Isaac was born.' I asked the boy some other questions and he answered them, and showed that he had learned in the Mission God's Torah (Bible). But what do our young people learn in these houses? The girl's have become very bad by attending these evil shows. Their mothers are weeping over their daughters; the boys have learned bad words and to steal money in order to gain admission to the theatres. I wish this missionary would open more missions in these wicked places." The young men were silent and respectful, as he passed on.

Ex-Rabbi Cohn is now striving to build a permanent headquarters for the Mission, and to furnish it suitably. He prints a little monthly paper which tells of the Mission and its work, and will gladly send a copy to any one who writes to him at 620a Quincy Street, Brooklyn, N. Y.

PRISON-GATE MISSION WORK

Colonel Holland, of the Salvation Army, Superintendent of the Prison-Gate Mission, 122 West Fourteenth Street, New York City, reports that during the last six months 5,199 ex-prisoners have been met at the prison gates and helped by advice and otherwise by the mission; 180 were given beds; 326 received meals; 22 got tools for work, and 94 were placed in institutions, where they are now earning an honest living. This is an excellent showing.

FOOD QUESTION

Settled with Perfect Satisfaction by a Dyspeptic

It's not an easy matter to satisfy all the members of the family at meal time as every housewife knows.

And when the husband has dyspepsia and can't eat the simplest ordinary food without causing trouble, the food question becomes doubly annoying.

An Ill. women writes:

"My husband's health was poor, he had no appetite for anything I could get for him, it seemed.

"He was hardly able to work, was taking medicine continually, and as soon as he would feel better would go to work again only to give up in a few weeks. He suffered severly with stomach trouble.

"Tired of everything I had been able to get for him to eat, one day seeing an advertisement about Grape Nuts, I got some for him to try for breakfast the next morning.

"We all thought it was pretty good although we had no idea of using it regularly. But when my husband came home at night he asked for Grape-Nuts.

"It was the same next day and I had to get it right along, because when we would get to the table the question, 'Have you any Grape-Nuts' was a regular thing. So I began to buy it by the dozen pkgs.

"My husband's health began to improve right along. I sometimes felt offended when I'd make something I thought he would like for a change, and still hear the same old question, "Have you any Grape-Nuts?"

"He got so well that for the last two years he has hardly lost a day from his work, and we are still using Grape-Nuts." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

Secret Sin*

SO rare were the occasions on which our Lord became indignant, and lost the sweet, gentle, tender manner that usually characterized him, that we ought to pay special attention to them. When we love some one very reverently, we are naturally anxious to learn what annoys them and what they particularly abhor, in order that we may avoid saying or doing that thing. A son may be undutiful, but he must be a very bad son indeed if he wilfully does the very thing that his father hates. The more indulgent and kind the father is, the more careful the son is to avoid the thing that will exasperate him. So is it with the follower of Christ. He has the personal reason for avoiding the sin that Christ loathed, and denounced the dread of offending him, the fear of offending One who loved us so well that he laid down his life for us. He studies that wonderful life, and learns that the one thing Christ hated above others was hypocrisy. "Woe unto you hypocrites," he said again and again.

This is the more worthy of remark, because Christ was so tender and gentle with sinners of other kinds. Matthew and Zaccheus, whose occupation suggested fraud and oppression, he associated with, and under his teaching they renounced their evil ways. The woman of Samaria, the woman dragged before him in the Temple and the sinner who wept over his feet, would not have been received into decent society even at this day, yet Christ pronounced no "woe" over them. "Go and sin no more" was his tender, pitying sentence. It was reserved for the hypocrite to stir that anger.

The man whom Christ denounced was the man whose life did not accord with his profession. The man who stood at the corners of the streets and prayed, and then went home to contrive a plan for cheating a widow. The man who was very particular to give tithes of everything, even to the cheap herbs that he used on his table, who was careful not to walk abroad on the Sab: bath lest he tread on a seed and so do a species of planting on that day, yet who disregarded the weighty matters of the law. It was these men who were not what they professed to be who stirred the Lord's anger. How careful then should we be that our lives are clear of sin, that our hearts never cherish the evil thing that would grieve him and sep arate us from him

Called Higher

Captain George S. Hodgkinson passed away at his home in St. James, L. I., on June 20, 1906, aged seventy-two years. He was a faithful official of the M. E. Church, and a regular reader of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, from which he felt that he derived much help.

Mrs. Charles Langdale, of Delmont, S. Dak., passed to her reward on October 16, 1906, aged eighty-one years. Her husband spared her failing eyesight by reading evey word of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, which she so much loved, aloud to her, and each week she eagerly awaited its coming.

Laughlin M'Gillis died in Ogdensburg, N. Y., on September 23, 1906, aged sixty years. Mr. M'Gillis was a man of kindly impulses, and an upright Christian citizen. He was a prominent member of the Ogdensburg M. E. Church and of the Masonic and I.O.O.F. fraternities. He leaves a widow, four sons and four daughters.

Mrs. Elizabeth E. Wright-Menafee, principal of the Voorhees Industrial School, South Carolina, died in the Battle Creek Sanitarium, Michigan, on December 14, 1906. It may be truly said that she gave her life for the colored race, and for the establishment and building up of the Voorhees Industrial School, following as she best could in the footsteps of her Lord.

Mrs. Mary J. Morton passed to the great Beyond, from her home at Mount Sterling, Ohio, on May 15, 1906, aged nearly seventy-five years. Mrs. Morton had been a member of the M. E. Church from early youth, and although unable to avail herself of church privileges during her later years, she frequently expressed her great pleasure in being able to read regularly the good things in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Robert Huddleston departed this life on January 5th, in the eighty-seventh year of his age. Mr. Huddleston was one of Indiana's early settlers from England, and became a well-known figure in Miller Township, which had been his home for more than half a century. Three generations of his descendants mourn the passing of the kind and loving patriarch, one of whose last injunctions was that his son should not discontinue his subscription to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD.

Orpha M., widow of George B. Fenwick, passed to her heavenly home, from St. Louis, Mich., on December 30, 1906, aged eighty-two years. At the age of twenty two this aged pilgrim had given her life to the service of Christ, and found it truly the beginning of wisdom. She had read every word of the Bible thirteen times, committing large portions of it to memory. Her mind was a rich storehouse of good things.

Are You Too Thin?
For only 15 minutes a day's practice in your own room upon special exercises that I will give you, you can be round, plump, wholesome, rested and attractive. Nature intended you to be—why should you not?
The following are extracts from the weekly reports of my pupils:
"Just think, Miss Cocroft, I have gained 25 pounds."
"Before I took up your work, I could not eat anything without the greatest distress, and now I think I can digest tacks I am so happy."
"Every exercise and movement has accomplished just what we wanted."
"My bust, neck and chest have filled out beautifully and I carry myself like another woman."
"You have done more for me than doctors have done in 20 years. My constipation is entirely relieved and my nerves are so rested."

I have built up thousands of women—why not you? You will be so much more attractive and so much better satisfied with yourself.
I will cheerfully tell you about my work, and if I cannot help your particular case I will tell you so. My information and advice are entirely free.

DREADED TO EAT
A Quaker Couple's Experience
How many persons dread to eat their m although actually hungry nearly all time!
Nature never intended this should be for we are given a thing called appetite should guide us as to what the system n at any time and can digest.
But we get in a hurry, swallow our f very much as we shovel coal into the furn and our sense of appetite becomes unnat and perverted. Then we eat the wrong k of food or eat too much, and there you a indigestion and its accompanying miseries
A Phila. lady said, the other day:
"My husband and I have been sick nervous for 15 or 20 years from drinking fee—feverish, indigestion, totally unfit a g part of the time, for work or pleasure. actually dreaded to eat our meals.
"We tried doctors and patent medici that counted up into hundreds of doll with little if any benefit.
"Accidentally, a small package of Post came into my hands. I made some accord to directions, with surprising results. both liked it and have not used any cof since.
"The dull feeling after meals has left and we feel better every way. We are well satisfied with Postum that we recomme it to our friends who have been made s and nervous and miserable by coffee." Na given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mi Read the little book, "The Road to W ville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

I can reduce you and at the same time strengthen the stomach, heart and relieve you of such chronic ailments as rheumatism, constipation, weak nerves and such difficulties as depend upon good circulation, strong nerves, strong muscles, good blood, correct breathing.
You can be as good a figure as any woman of your acquaintance—no drugs, no medicine.

"I have reduced 81 pounds under your instruction. There is not a wrinkle in my face and my husband says I look like the girl he married. You can imagine how happy I am."
"You have simply saved my life, Miss Cocroft. I was a nervous wreck when I began my work with you."
"I have reduced 65 pounds in five lessons. I have only 10 more pounds to reduce to reach your goal."
"My hearing continues to improve."
"My constipation is entirely removed."
Miss Cocroft at Her Desk
"I was weighed yesterday—32 pounds in three lessons I think is pretty good."
"The most noticeable change has been in the complete disappearance of my double chin."

Intercessory Prayer

By Mrs. M. Baxter

THE first instance of intercessory prayer on record in the Word of God is Abraham's prayer for Sodom. Abraham was living in close and unconstrained communion with God. In the beginning of the chapter (Genesis 18), the Lord appears to him, that he may tell him the time of the fulfilment of his promise is at hand. "And the Lord appeared to him in the plains of Mamre; . . . and he lifted up his eyes and looked, and lo, three men stood by him."

"I will bless thee . . . and thou shalt be (or be thou, R.V.), a blessing" (Gen. 12: 2), is the keynote of Abraham's life. The assurance of the accomplishment of God's promise to himself was a preparation for his intercession on behalf of Sodom. Thus should it be with us also. The Lord Jesus received gifts for men (Ps. 68: 18). That which we receive, we receive in trust for the Church of Christ. We cannot wonder that they who sun themselves in the delight of a grace given by God, without seeking to benefit others by it, often lose it, and then fancy that they were deceived.

"And the men (who had appeared to Abraham as he sat in the tent door in the heat of the day, Gen. 18: 1), rose up from thence, and looked toward Sodom: and Abraham went with them to bring them on the way. And the Lord said, Shall I hide from Abraham that which I do?" Before Abraham could be in a position to intercede with God, he must know the terms on which he stood with him. God was dealing with him as a prophet. "Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets" (Amos 3: 7), and as with a friend, "I have called you friends; for all things that I have heard of my Father I have made known unto you" (John 15: 15). God says, "Shall I hide from Abraham that thing which I do?"

"Seeing that Abraham shall surely become a . . . mighty nation, and all the nations of the earth shall be blest in him. For I know him, that he will command his children and his household after him, and they shall keep the way of the Lord, to do justice and judgment; that the Lord may bring upon Abraham that which he hath spoken of him." That is, God could count upon Abraham; he knew the man he had to deal with, and that his children and household would be under the influence of God as well as himself. What a lesson this teaches us! In order to retain the same intimate face-to-face, heart-to-heart communion with God which Abraham knew, it is not enough to keep the way of the Lord ourselves; he would have us commit our children and household also to him that they may show forth his praises.

What was the burden which God would confide to Abraham? "And the Lord said, because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is very grievous; I will go down now, and see whether they have done altogether according to the cry of it, which is come unto me, and if not, I will know."

God's commissions of inquiry are personally conducted. He cannot trust into other hands the passing of a sentence which must be executed during ages which God has not numbered (and which, therefore, man calls eternity), for time which we cannot measure is outside the scope of our human conceptions. It is an awful thing for sinners, for sinful cities and for sinful lands, when God draws near to carry on a scrutiny from which no secret thought or motive can be concealed. Abraham trembled, and used his privilege as God's friend to step in and intercede. But Abraham had, in his intercession, a hard lesson before him, the most bitter lesson which God's chosen instruments for evangelizing and teaching often have to learn—he could not bring his spiritual children up to his own level.

RIDPATH'S enviable position as an historian is due to his wonderfully beautiful style, a style no other historian has ever equaled. He pictures the great historical events as though they were happening before your eyes; he carries you with him to see the battles of old; to meet kings and queens and warriors; to sit in the Roman Senate; to march against Saladin and his dark-skinned followers; to sail the southern seas with Drake; to circumnavigate the globe with Magellan; to watch that thin line of Greek spearmen work havoc with the Persian hordes on the field of Marathon; to know Napoleon as you know Roosevelt.

RIDPATH in your home means you need never spend a lonely evening. You can associate with the world's heroes; you can cross the Rubicon with Cæsar, after which Rome was free no more. You can sit at the feet of Socrates, the loftiest genius of the ancient world. You can walk with Luther, who did more than any other man to give to the world religious freedom. You can kneel at the shrine of Lincoln, "the greatest human of all time; the gentlest memory of our world." It is ennobling to commune with these children of destiny. To be associated with great men and events is to be great one's self, and you will add to your store of knowledge which is power, and to the richness of your life.

RIDPATH takes you back to the dawn of history, long before the pyramids of Egypt were built; down through the romantic, troubled times of Chaldea's grandeur and Assyria's magnificence; of Babylonia's wealth and luxury; of Grecian and Roman splendour; of Mohammedan culture and refinement; of French elegance and British power; of American patriotism and religious freedom, to the dawn of yesterday. He covers every race, every nation, every time, and holds you spellbound by his wonderful eloquence. Nothing more interesting, absorbing and inspiring was ever written by man.

RIDPATH throws the mantle of personality over the old heroes of history. Alexander is there; patriot, warrior, statesman, diplomat, crowning the glory of Grecian history. Xerxes, from his mountain platform, sees Themistocles with three hundred and fifty Greek ships smash his Persian fleet of over a thousand sail, and help to mould the language in which this paragraph is written. Rome perches Nero upon the greatest throne on earth, and so sets up a poor madman's name to stand for countless centuries as the synonym of savage cruelty; Napoleon fights Waterloo again under your very eyes, and reels before the iron fact that at last the end of his gilded dream has come. Bismarck is there, gruff, overbearing, a giant pugilist in the diplomatic ring, laughing with grim disdain at France, which says, "You shall not." Washington is there, "four-square to all the winds," grave, thoughtful, proof against the wiles of British strategy and the poisoned darts of false friends; clear-seeing over the heads of his fellow-countrymen, and on into another Century, the most colossal world-figure of his time.

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but as evidence of genuineness and good faith. Where an answer by mail is desired, ten cents in postage stamps must be forwarded by the writers, with full address.

A. S., Norwich, Conn. When were envelopes for letters first used?

They were first mentioned by Swift in 1726. Stamped envelopes came into use in England in 1840.

W. R., New York. In Isaiah 1:15 the reason why God does not answer the prayers of some people, is stated to be that their hands are full of blood. Does that apply to persons who have failed to warn others until it is too late?

No; the passage has no such application. It was a reproof to people who thought that they could make a compromise with God. They believed they could live in sin doing murder and all kinds of wickedness, and could make it all right by bringing sacrifices and oblations. The prophet says that is of no use, they must wash themselves, purify themselves and quit their sins, and until they do that God will not hear them. No man's mission is ended. If he has failed in one duty, he ought to ask God to forgive him and be all the more earnest to fulfil those duties that remain. It would be continuing in sin to neglect later duties on the plea that the earlier and more urgent ones could not now be done.

Mrs. J. A., Brunswick, Ohio. What is the duty of those living in the country in regard to keeping tramps and peddlers over night? How much ground does this injunction cover, "Be not forgetful to entertain strangers?"

In the present state of society it would be a rather dangerous plan to shelter tramps and peddlers indiscriminately. It is a good Christian rule, however, to let no one go from your door hungry, and to do a kindness wherever you can. Certainly, no one with human feelings would turn away a wanderer in storm.

H. L. J., Ithaca, N. Y. Can a person be converted without the influence of the Holy Spirit? If so, at what subsequent time do they receive it?

The Holy Spirit has many functions. In conversion the influence of the Holy Spirit operates in leading the subject to repentance and faith. Afterwards the same influence promotes growth in grace, opens and makes plain the Scriptures and quickens the spiritual powers. The influence is more clearly recognized then. It was these latter functions that were exerted at Ephesus (Acts 19:2-6) when Paul had laid his hands on the disciples.

Nellie F., Oakdale, Calif. Who were the first missionaries to Japan? Were they Protestants? If not, who were the first Protestant missionaries?

Francis Xavier, a Catholic, was the pioneer missionary in 1549. Protestant missions there date from 1859. Revs. John Liggins and C. M. Williams began work at Nagasaki in May of that year.

A. L. M., Underhill, Vt. Why are some commentators on the Bible called higher critics and others lower critics?

To distinguish the character of their work. The lower critics are concerned with the meaning of difficult passages, and study the forms of expression and the ideas supposed to be conveyed in them and the doctrines they teach. The higher critics take higher, broader ground. They study the authorship of the various books and their date and try to find out from their character whether they were edited by some ancient scholar after they were written. Thus, such a passage as "In those days there was no king in Israel" (Judges 17:6) is scarcely likely to have been written by the man who wrote the book, but was probably inserted by some other man at a time when there was a king in Israel. It is from such indications and from differences in literary style that the critics infer a variety in authorship. The important consideration, however, is that which Paul notes, that these are the work of one and the same Spirit (I. Cor. 12:11).

C. M. H., Livermore, Me. Why is the Longfellow home at Cambridge, Mass., called Craigie House?

In 1793 Andrew Craigie, a Scotchman, Apothecary-General to the American Army, became owner of Craigie House. There Tallyrand visited him. After Craigie's death, his widow took boarders, among them, in 1837, the young Professor Longfellow. In 1843 Mrs. Craigie died and the poet's father-in-law, Mr. Appleton, bought the house and gave it to the couple, who continued the name of Craigie House. Within its walls, before the evacuation of Boston by the British, Washington organized the rebellion into a revolution. He used it as his headquarters there until the British left, Mrs. Washington being with him during a part of the time.

A Church Where Washington Worshiped and Served as a Vestryman

IN Fairfax County, Va., on the high land above the Potomac, stands old Pohick Church, one of the most interesting examples of colonial church architecture in America. Here Washington worshiped for many years, serving as a member of its vestry. The building was commenced in 1768 and completed in 1772. It was built of fine brick with sandstone trimmings, and at the top of the walls was a carved cornice. The interior was quite elaborately decorated. There were tablets of blue enamel on the walls, on which were written, in letters of gold, the Lord's Prayer, the Ten Commandments and the Creed. The pulpit was high up against the wall, and was reached by a winding stairway. Above the sounding-board hovered a gilded dove. When the English made their raid against the City of Washington, they carried off the dove as a souvenir of their visit to the locality. The church is now in processof restoration, every effort being made to reproduce the colonial features with historical accuracy. The members of the Ladies' Mount Vernon Association who rent a pew in Pohick Church, occupy it when the annual pilgrimage is made to Mount Vernon, which is only six miles distant.

W. W., Germantown, N. Y. 1. In Joshua 24:2, 3, we read God's declaration that Abraham "dwelt on the other side of the flood," from which he brought him to the land of Canaan. What are we to understand it to mean when it is obviously incorrect according to the account given us of the flood? 2. Why did God deem it so great a sin in David in "numbering Israel" as to visit so dire a punishment upon the people (Chron., chapter 21)?

1. The flood (or tide) referred to is the River Euphrates at Ur. 2. The sin of David consisted in gratifying his own pride by counting the troops he could muster for conquest or for the purpose of some tryannical tax or exaction, instead of fully trusting the divine promise.

J. E. M., Leeds, Md. In what year were the pyramids of Egypt built and for what purpose? How were those immense stones put in place without machinery?

The work of building the three principal pyramids is said to have been begun about 1500 B.C. The greatest is supposed to have been erected by Cheops, 1082 B.C. There are also eleven smaller pyramids at Sakkara. Their purpose was to serve as tombs for the great kings of that early period. How the building was done is a mystery which modern research has not penetrated. The ancient Egyptian civilzation held much of invention and resource which is lost to history.

Mrs. R. B. W., Olneyville, R. I. Are these two quotations in the Bible, "The mill of God grinds slowly" and "He tempers the wind to the shorn lamb"?

No, the first is from a poem entitled "Retribution," by Fredrich von Logan, translated by Longfellow. The other is from Rev. Lawrence Sterne's writings.

M. P. J., Huntsville, Mo. I find in Ezekiel 44:2, a statement that the Lord entered the temple by a certain gate which should be shut afterwards. Does that refer to the Mohammedans having walled up the Golden Gate? Also, who are the saviours mentioned in Obadiah 21?

There is a legend to that effect and, also, that Christ will sit there to judge the nations, but it is unlikely that Ezekiel had that in his mind. He wanted to encourage the Jews who were exiled in Babylon, w a picture of the restored glory; but temple he described has never been bu His picture-teaching was uttered to imp the Jews with the futility of their h of a speedy return to Jerusalem, wh was preventing their settling down Babylon. The reference in Obadiah is Edom, the people of which taunted Hebrews with being cast off. The savio of Israel would judge Edom.

A Native Bringing his Daughter to be Taught

PIONEERING AMONG CANNIBALS

The Remarkable Story of John Paton's Fifty Years' Life in the New Hebrides

If the question were asked what man had had the most hairbreadth escapes during his career and who was ever in the presence of death while engaging to fulfil the duties of his calling, people would try to answer it by giving the name of some Indian fighter or dashing soldier, yet the adventures of the noted of these do not compare with the experiences of Dr. Paton, the famous ionary to Tanna and Aniwa, in the Pacific.

After preparing himself for his ministry, he went to what most of his Scottish rymen thought was certain destruction. Two missionaries who had preceded to the islands to which he was bound, had been clubbed to death within a few nts after their arrival and there was no reason to think but that the same fate ed Dr. Paton. The natives, ver, seemed to have been awed he presence of this man, who, ned, would walk into the midst eir councils and feasts of blood turning their spears aside with aked hands, rebuke them for savagery until they fled from or became penitent. Probably Paton himself could not remem- the number of times his death sought. Muskets, furnished by ical traders, crackled at him the underbrush as he went from to tribe and the whiz of a spear a sound heard every few days.

y ill that befell the islanders the missionaries arrived, was to them as convenient objects on h to vent their wrath. On the d of Tanna they were visited by ld chief from Aneityum. After turned to his home, he was taken ntly ill and died within a few . The ignorant people of Tanna bed his death to the machina- of the missionaries and resolved urn their houses and murder . The brother of the dead chief dly to the white people, came to cede for them. Unfortunately ll ill at the missionaries' house, this strengthened the belief of Tannese that the missionaries had ght illness and death with them their own land. The islanders began to hold meetings to plot the death of Dr. n and his fellow workers, every meeting ending with a cannibal feast. The ms were all women and some that escaped came running to the mission house begged for assistance against their murderous husbands, a help the sorely- t missionaries were unable to give.

st at the time when it seemed as if death in its most horrible forms would come hem within a few days at the least, help came from a most unexpected source. Old Nowar, the chief of the village near which the missionaries lived, and a neighboring chief planned to save the lives of the white people, though at the risk of their own, for the natives when wild for blood would override the authorities of the chiefs and, in fact, only followed their commands willingly when they coincided with their own barbarous wishes.

As soon as the savages discovered the counterplot a great meeting was called. The men smeared with paint, assembled in a large circle, waving clubs and spears. It was arranged that a band should be selected to kill the missionaries and also a white trader who had just landed on the island, in order that not one should be left to tell the tale and the British warships appear as a result and wreak vengeance on the natives at the cannon's mouth. The whole assembly worked themselves into an uncontrollable frenzy; the desire for blood seemed to fill all hearts.

Suddenly one of their greatest warrior chiefs sprang into the circle and, swinging his great war club about his head as if it were but a willow wand and smashing it against the ground as if to presage what would happen to whoever should have the rashness to oppose him, cried: "The man that kills Missi must first kill me; the men that kill the mission teachers must first kill me and my people, for we shall stand by them and defend them till death."

Up rose another chief, brandishing a spear, and he cried out his intention to do battle for the white people. It was so unexpected that those who had been clamoring most loudly for blood, backed off in dismay and made haste to get out of the dangerous neighborhood of the heavy club and poised spear. These two chiefs, it turned out, were from the interior of the island and were regarded as medicine men of the most sacred character, who had the power to send disease upon any person they wished. They had ranked until now as Dr. Paton's bitterest enemies.

The last days that Dr. Paton spent on the turbulent island of Tanna, before he transferred his headquarters to Aniwa, were passed amid wars and rumors of wars. Tribe after tribe declared its intention of going upon the warpath, but what strikes the civilized observer most oddly, was that none seemed certain against whom they were to fight, or who was to start the war. Again Dr. Paton found himself the centre of this intertribal strife. Again the councils of blood were held, and the chiefs near the harbor urged

THE ABSORBING PASSION

TEXT: I. COR. 9: 16

"Woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel"

IN the Pitti Palace of Florence is a wonderful picture, supposed to have been painted by Michael Angelo, called the "Three Fates." There sit the three sisters of mythological fame—Clotho, spinning the thread of life; Lachesis, holding the thread of life, and Atropos, with her long, sharp shears, cutting the thread of life. It is thought that when Michael Angelo painted this picture he used the same model for all the three faces. Whether that is true we know not, but one fact about this picture we know. It is a most impressive and suggestive picture. The artist has depicted three women at their daily tasks, going on in their work serenely, remorselessly, and absolutely independent of all outside influence by which they may be surrounded. When you watch those three faces, you involuntarily say: Yes, I can understand how men, who did not recognize God's hand in the government of the world, may have said, as they looked at this picture, "the fates are ruling our lives. They meet us at the cradle. They guide us through childhood's hours. They grow for us the orange blossoms of the marriage altar. They lower the bars of the great fields of usefulness in which we are to labor. They plant the trees out of which our coffins are to be made. If we heed their commandments, we shall do our work well. If we turn a deaf ear to their behests, then unutterable misfortune and failure will be ours. There the Fates sit, spinning our thread of life, holding our thread of life and, with their long shears, cutting the thread of life at the brink of the grave." Thus men have felt the overarching influences of life about them and they believed they would never get away from the place of the life those fates had made for them.

Men in Wrong Places

Sometimes men with this belief tried to avoid their mission in life, just as men in our day sometimes try to evade the duty to which God has called them. But whenever they do so, these men are unhappy in their work and do not make the most out of their lives. They are like the late Simmons Frieze, the beloved Latin Professor of Michigan University. God never meant him to be a Latin professor. He was born to be a musician. All his desires seemed to call out, "Let me linger by the piano keys." President Andrew D. White once said of him, "Though it has been my good fortune to hear all the leading pianists of my time, I have never heard one who seemed to interpret the masterpieces more worthily. I have always insisted that had he lived in Germany he would have been a second Beethoven. So passionately was he devoted to music, that at times he sent his piano away from his house in order to shun temptations to abridge his professorial work." We find men like Henry Simmons Frieze in every department of life. They are like John Tyndall, who tried to be a civil engineer when he was meant to be a physicist. They are like Matthew Simpson, who wished to be a physician when God intended him to be a minister. They are like James Russell Lowell and Walter Scott, trying to be lawyers when God meant them to be poets and literary men. Happy, thrice happy, are the men who allow the inward tendencies of their minds and hearts to develop along the lines for which they were born, and for which God equipped them.

Happy in His Vocation

Now, Paul in the words of my text is glorying in the fact that he has consecrated his brain and body and soul to the work God had intended him to do. He seems to say in this chapter, "Some people think I sacrificed my joy and pleasure when I gave up my life to Gospel preaching. Why, sirs, I could do nothing else if I tried. My greatest enjoyment in life is not to be found outside of the Gospel ministry, but inside. Why, sirs, if I were not allowed to preach Jesus Christ, I would be the most miserable of all men." Then he uses these words of my text, "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel of Jesus Christ." I want to show you that Paul was one of the happiest of men because he was allowed to be a missionary of Jesus Christ, and that he would have been one of the most miserable of men had he not surrendered all his energies, body, mind and soul, to be a flaming evangelist of the Cross.

Paul had an absorbing passion to preach the Gospel, because, in the first place, he had a revelation of the divine personality of Jesus Christ. He could never get away from his Damascus road experience. He had felt the Christ-touch. He had stood face to face with Jesus. He had seen Jesus. He had talked to Jesus. He had heard Jesus talk to him. No sooner did this divine revelation come, than there sprang up in him a longing desire to go forth and tell to the world what he had seen, and how his Christ could become the world's Saviour. Paul's Damascus experience was like that which some of us have had during our past lives. It may have been during some revival services in the village church of our boyhood days, or it may have been during a season of awful sickness, or when we buried a little child, or during the hours which succeeded our yielding to a heinous sin, that Christ appeared unto us. We can remember it as yesterday. Jesus rose up before us, as he came to Paul, saying, "I am Jesus whom thou hast persecuted." And so realistic was the divine revelation that no argument could ever prove to us that Jesus himself did not appear unto us, as he appeared unto Paul on the Damascus road.

The Essence of Christianity

Nor is Paul the only man who has had this revelation of Jesus Christ. Scores and scores of eminent Christians have had it. Luther had it, and Wesley had it, and Finney had it, and Thomas Chalmers had it, and John Bunyan had it, and John Newton had it. They have had it the same as many of us have had it. The greatest trouble with many of us in Christian work is that we are not obedient to the heavenly vision. We do not say with Paul, "God forbid that I should glory, save in the Cross of Jesus Christ." We are trying to teach men lessons for this life, but we do not emphasize and keep re-emphasizing the essential doctrine, that through the blood of Jesus and in no other way can we be truly cleansed of our sins. We have had this revelation come to us, but we have been pushing it more and more into the background of our lives.

A young minister once said to Mr. Moody: "What makes the difference between your success and mine? Either you are right and I am wrong, or I am right and you are wrong." "Well," said Mr. Moody, "I do not know what is the difference, unless you tell me, for I have never heard you preach." The minister replied, "You make a great deal out of the death of Christ, and I do not make anything out of it. I do not think it has anything to do with the Gospel. I preach about the life and not about the death of Jesus." "Well," said Mr. Moody, "what do you do with this, 'He hath borne our sins upon the tree'? What do you do with this, 'He was wounded for our transgressions, he was bruised for our iniquities and with his stripes were we healed'? What do you do with this, 'Without shedding of blood there is no remission'?" "Oh," answered the minister, "I do not preach on those passages." "What do you preach?" "Well," he answered, "my sermons are moral essays." Then Mr. Moody replied, "My friend, if you take the blood out of the Bible it is all a myth to me." "But," answered the man, "I think that the doctrine is untrue." Then said Mr. Moody, "I advise you to get out of the ministry very quick. I would not preach a sham. If the Bible is untrue, let us stop preaching and come out at once and attack it. But if these things are true, and Jesus left heaven and came into the world to save sinners, then let us lay hold of it and preach it in season and out of season." So say all true ministers of Jesus Christ!

Divine Preparation

But there was another fact besides that revelation on the Damascus road which was driving Paul forward as a minister of Jesus Christ. All men who are converted to Jesus Christ are not expected to enter theological seminaries. There is a fitness in all things. Many a good cobbler has been spoilt to make a very poor preacher. Many men who wear the black cloth of the clergy would make a far better success in building a brick wall than they do in expounding the Word of God from a pulpit. I have a great deal of sympathy with that shrewd father, who, when his son came to him and said: "Father, I had a divine revelation last night. God wants me to be a minister of Jesus Christ. For everywhere about me I kept seeing the two letters blazing at me, 'P. C., P. C., P. C.'—'Preach Chri "Oh, no," said the father, "those two letters, which you saw do not mean 'Preach Christ.' meant for you 'Plough corn.' God meant you a farmer. He never cut you out to be a minister

Running Uncalled

There is no profession, as I well know, about so many mistakes are made as about the min Young men, full of zeal, full of the desire to save full of ambition to serve God, all of which aspir are laudable, rush into the ministry without consid whether they have the talents needed for success i sphere. Many a man who would have made an lent lawyer or physician or stockbroker becom inefficient minister, and, as a humorous professor said, "rushes against the pulpit and stuns himsel life." But there never could have been any dou Paul's vocation. He had all the gifts and qua that are needed to make a man successful in wi souls.

Paul was more than silver-tongued. What he was just as marvelous as the way he said it. Baptiste Massillon was the greatest preacher F ever produced. The proud King Louis XIV. paid the greatest compliment that can be given to any senger of Jesus Christ. He said, "I have heard talented preachers in my chapel before, and was pleased with them, but every time I hear you, much displeased with myself." Great was the eloquence of a Massillon! But greater, far greater the logical power of the Gospel message he broug the French court. After his sermons had been lished, Voltaire, the great sceptic, used to always one of the volumes upon his study desk, declaring they were the words of "the preacher who best u stood the world—who had the eloquence of the a mician, the brilliance of the wit and the logic o philosopher." So with Paul's writings. He was only an orator and an organizer and an ecclesias statesman, but a powerful and convincing writer. epistles will be read by intelligent men for all t These powers he held as a trust for God, and he s to say, "I must preach; I must be a preacher of J Christ on account of my special gifts. Woe is unto if I preach not the Gospel."

A Duty for Everyone

"Well," you say, "if Paul had all these charact tics, I do not wonder that he should want to preach Gospel. No wonder that every moment that he wa presenting Christ to some one, he should feel that t were wasted moments. But I am not a Paul. I not a John Mitchell Mason nor a Jean Bap Massillon. I am as dumb as a Sphinx whenever I st upon my feet before an audience." Perhaps you right, my friend; but

> If you cannot speak like angels,
> If you cannot preach like Paul,
> You can tell the love of Jesus,
> You can say he died for all.

Perhaps you can say this as a consecrated nurse, Florence Nightingale. Perhaps you can sing it singing evangelist, like Philip Phillips or Ira D. San or P. P. Bliss. Perhaps you can pray it, as did y loving, gentle, Christlike mother. I do not k what your talent may be, whether it is the tongue John Summerfield, or the pen of a Clay Trumb But one fact I know: that you have a talent like Paul, you must consecrate all that talent to service of Jesus Christ. "Woe is unto me, if I do surrender all my talents, body, mind and soul, for spreading of the Gospel."

Would that we all, like Paul, might be willing surrender every talent that we have of body, mind soul, to the service of Jesus Christ! God cannot as us to do any more. He has a right to ask of us consecrate as much as that. There is a story told t many years ago, a troop of German cavalry was on march. The captain halted at the home of an Moravian. When the door was opened, he sa "Father, show me a field where I can set my soldi aforaging. We must have food." The old man s "All right, my friend. Follow me." So he took staff and led the soldiers on for about a mile, and t he eleven living passengers e Larchmont, all that sur- of more than one hundred left Providence on that night, are unable to recall accuracy much of the rending detail of the scenes orror which followed the crash. It is believed that small boats and two rafts were set adrift, but of the passengers were clad only in the light ents which they wore when they were thrown from berths, and the intense cold benumbed them so speedy action was impossible. Men and women, n frantic by the bitter winds which swept the ing spray over the frail boats, gave up the struggle plunged into the sea. These boats crossed the g waves to the shore, carrying scores of ice- usted bodies in which life was extinct.

Five of the Salvation Army Officers who Perished on the "Larchmont"

FACED DEATH WITH A HYMN

NDER a starry sky, at midnight, on the 12th of February, the Joy Line steamer Larchmont, on its regular passage from Providence to New , was wrecked off the coast of Block Island. In eeth of a fierce gale, which lashed the sea to fury, e eamer collided with the coal-laden schooner Harry ilton. After one of the most thrilling battles st zero cold and a raging sea ever fought along eastern coast, the nineteen survivors of the wreck ble to tell the story of the trophe. The steamer car- nore than one hundred and souls, including passengers crew, but the number of who perished is unknown. the night of the tragedy, Larchmont was plunging ily through the inky seas her captain, George W. ey, was retiring to his , when a series of shrill tles recalled him to the er's pilot-house. A few ents later the black bow of Knowlton buried itself in the of the steamer. As they d, a flood of icy water ed into the yawning cavern n the side of the doomed er. Later, Captain Haley, e Knowlton, with his crew, he sinking schooner in an boat, and eventually ed the shore.

The crew and officers, eight in all, including Captain McVey, manned the largest boat and, warmly clad, crossed the wild stretch of sea to safety. The eleven surviving passengers, with frozen limbs twisting in torture and minds still shaken by their mortal strife with death, declare that the steamer's employees and members of the crew, in frenzied panic, beat back the women and little children who were piteously pleading to be saved and sprang into the empty boats. But if this be true, retribution was swift and sure, and the oarless craft into which they plunged drifted helplessly on the towering waves and piled upon the beach, with their human freight ice-coated and stiff in death.

The Ill-Fated Steamer "Larchmont"

Of the nineteen survivors of the tragedy, two only are women. One of these thus pictures her experiences during that awful night upon the deep: "There were thirty-three passengers swept away from the sinking ship upon the same strip of wreckage to which my husband and I clung. Some of the people upon our improvised raft were silent and stunned, some were raving madly, others were loudly cursing and swearing, while yet others fervently prayed. Not until after thirteen hours of almost incredible suffering, with limbs frozen and death very near, did help come. Then a passing schooner rescued our little company of seven."

A rescue steamer from Providence picked up many frozen bodies encased in coffins of ice ten inches thick. At nightfall the steamer returned to Providence bearing the nineteen survivors. In the same vessel were fifty of the dead.

Among the lost passengers on board the ill-fated steamer, a company of young Salvation Army officers and soldiers triumphantly witnessed for their faith in the cruel testing time which followed the collision. A congress of the Eastern Scandinavian Province Salvationists was about to open in New York, and seven of the junior captains with three cadets and a number of soldiers were on their way from Worcester, Providence and Boston to attend it. Five young captains, Helga Helgren, Anna Runeborg, Aurora Lifvenndahl, Anna Oden and Alma Johansen, were Scandinavian girls.

Commander Evangeline Booth sent officers to the scene of the tragedy and the tidings they gathered were not of death, but of victory. Those who are left to tell the story tell how the sweet voices of the blue-gowned Salvation lassies were lifted in prayer and song. Calmly they stood amidst the frenzied throng, and above the din of confusion and turmoil which succeeded the crash, their singing rose clear and loud and triumphant:

Safe into the haven guide, O, receive my soul at last.

A survivor tells of one of the brave girls approaching him with shining countenance and inquiring gently if he was ready to die. "We are not afraid," she added; "we can go to Heaven just as well from here as from the land, but are you ready? Is my Saviour yours?"

The loss of these able officers, strong as organizers and rich in spirituality and musical talent, is a heavy one to the Army, of which they were loyal followers.

HE ABSORBING PASSION—Cont'd

e to a fine field of barley. "There is just the field vant," said the captain; "let us stop here." "Have ence," answered the old man; "I will show one h will suit your purposes just as well." So he led troops on about a quarter of a league farther, until reached another field of barley. After the soldiers gathered the grain, the captain turned to the old and said, "Father, this will do. But the field we ed had better grain than this. Why did you bring o this field?" "Because," answered the old man, e other field was not mine, and this is." Beautiful! utiful! The old Moravian did not want the iers to rob his neighbors, so he let them rob of his own field of ripened grain. But beautiful as that sacrifice was, I can tell you of one still more beautiful. It is the child of God taking Jesus by the hand and leading the Saviour to his fields, and saying, "Here, Master; here are my fields, take them. Here is my voice, use it. Here is my tongue, let it speak for thee. Here is my hand, let it work for thee. All that I have is thine." That is another way of interpreting the Pauline words, "Woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel."

I believe that Paul was intensely and agonizingly anxious to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ because of his years of wasted Gospel opportunities. He was as some of us are. He did not give his heart to God in his youth. For years he opposed the teachings of Jesus. He may have clapped his hands in joy when he heard of Christ's trial and crucifixion. After the crucifixion, he gave up some time to persecuting the followers of the lowly Nazarene. "Oh," I think I hear him say after his conversion, "if I can only live long enough to undo some of the awful results of those persecutions! Oh, if I can only live long enough to go into those cities where I have derided him! My Lord and my Christ, wilt thou not let me live long enough to testify for thee?" After years spent in stifling the Gospel invitation, when at last you come to kneel at the Cross, cannot you cry out as did Paul, "Lord, receive me, the chief of sinners. 'Woe! woe is unto me, if I preach not the Gospel of Jesus Christ.' "

Refugees Clamoring for Food at a Relief Station

MILLIONS starving! The reader cannot imag it. Neither can I, though I write within earshot an encampment of thirty thousand refugees, ose thin, pitiful wail for help has been in my e all day—although even that has been less eloquent tha the gaunt and haggard appearance of pale, yellow face nd thin, trembling, outstretched hands.

Oh, those hands! I shudder as I see them, stretche put in vain, for one dare not give a dole of a penny, lest be literally mobbed by the shivering, famished creatures. ne missionary farther north narrowly escaped with his li ast week. He had one hundred work tickets to give out, a mob of more than a thousand men, in their frenzy a chance to labor for bread, overwhelmed him and tra led him into unconsciousness before he could be rescued. For a single almoner to try to fill even a few of these ha is impossible; only the united charity of men and w en throughout Christendom who love their brother me an avail in this awful crisis.

What I have seen to-day suggests a vision of a li of beseeching hands—all the sufferers of this bitter fa ne ranged in a row, miles and tens of miles and scores of les and hundreds of miles long. Such thin, trembling h ds many of them are. The old, old women, almost too f ple to stand, gazing at you hollow-eyed, while their hand re extended in mute appeal—to think that the mothers of en, and the mothers of mothers of men, should anywhere ne to this! Equally moving are the sick, stretched out o he bare ground, unable to rise, just feebly motioning fo he succor that you cannot give.

The Suffering Babies

And the babies! How the cry of the children must ne up before God! Wan little figures, some of them l ng skeletons, which mothers hold forth in tragic and ite appeal Usually the poor little creatures are held clo to the bare breasts of their mothers for the sake of a le warmth. I can understand now why a mother at An g threw her two children into the canal rather than see m slowly starve before her eyes. Yet mother-love is str g; its bands are not lightly broken by even such famine nd suffering as are to be witnessed here.

Little more than an hour ago I saw two women, pre u- ably a mother and a grandmother, wailing over the y coffin of a child that had been part of grim famine's d y- toll. The average rate of death from exposure and hu er is estimated at two hundred each day, yet the cit of Tsinkiangpu alone, on December 20, had that many de s.

It is all so horrible, so overpowering, so haunting so heartrending, that one cannot write of it in orderly fash n. It seems as if only the repeated cry of "Help! help! hel " can be fashioned for the ears of the prosperous Amer n people, to whom God has given a year of plenty, while re poor of China perish from want.

Out of the awful mass of suffering, a succession of i i- vidual pictures come trooping before my vision. T e was the man, too weak to stand erect, who bore on is back, as older brothers carry babies in China, his blind d mother, the mere skin-and-bone framework of a wo n. They wanted help, and pleaded for it in the thin whine of the utterly miserable—and I dared not give them so muc as a copper!

Despairing Mothers

Or that mother, hard-eyed and rigid, who stood again a wall, with her six children gathered about her tattered ski , staring out uncaring on a company of living refugees, W are a more melancholy sight than the thousands of anc t graves among which they are encamped. They had b n fed; one portion of thin, watery rice porridge for th n all, and now they must wait in the cold for another twe - four hours to pass before they can be fed again—and e n then some stronger ones may push them aside and steal th r turn at the meagre relief.

Strange incongruities flash into one's mind as he wa about among these thirty-thousand refugees. As I pas d this morning, an old, old woman, covered only by a few ra who sat on the cold bare ground, sharing her small bow f rice with a babe of twelve or eighteen months, evidently grandchild, who sat on her knees, I thought of some gra mothers whom I know in America—sweet-faced, comforta e and kindly, whose evening of life is made pleasant by love of children and grandchildren, and who know not word want. And I recalled some baby friend—sweet, ruc y little dears, wrapped in the finest linen, with wardrobes up which love has lavished its generosity, and whose food i matter of careful consultation with physicians and frien . Of course, I cannot imagine these delicately nurtured bab in dirty tatters and exposed to the cold of winter night a day, week after week; yet somehow, one picture sugge s cidents could be piled upon incidents. Every one of e thirty thousand refugees incarnates a story—a story home abandoned; of toilsome journeys to this southern ict, in the hope of finding a pittance of food to allay that al gnawing of hunger; of the eager hunt for a sheltered . in a doorway; of being driven from spot to spot, until st a few feet of bare earth are secured out among the es with the other refugees—a space no bigger than a ese grave suffices for an entire family; of the daily and tly huddling together in one mass for the sake of an warmth; of the search for dry grass with which to e a tiny fire; of the morning struggle for a portion of government rice and of that indescribable, terrible, itive duel between life and starvation which the ese so dauntlessly endure.

all this, I write of the best, and not of the worst! is only the first outpost of the famine district. If the er finds Chinkiang on the map, by running his finger g the Yangtse River from Shanghai, he will see that nien, which is the centre of the famine district, is far to north. The famine region is called the "Kianpeh," or rth of the River," meaning the Yangtse River. This is on the south bank of the river, and outside of the ict. Crops here are flourishing. The provinces chiefly ted are Kiangsu and Anhui, with the fringes of Honan Shantung. The forty thousand square miles which com- the famine region (a district almost as large as the State ew York) lies about the old bed of the Yellow River.

parsely-settled America can scarcely understand or credit statement that of this one district alone, ten million per- are affected seriously by the famine. Three million , women and children—more persons than dwell in all reater New York—are in a state of actual destitution. illion and a quarter have fled to the walled cities, of h there are between twenty and thirty accessable, as gees, where their very numbers and desperation compel officials to make some scant provision for them.

Conditions at Chinkiang

t this writing I am in Chinkiang. But despite all the ors I have indicated, the lot of the refugees here is con- red the most favorable. The city itself numbers three dred thousand inhabitants. Fear, if no other consider- n, constrains them to stand in the way of total starva- for this mass. A little farther north, the city of Yang- has eighty thousand refugees, encamped in little mat , alongside of which an American dog kennel would be alatial habitation. Nanking has some forty thousand gees under the shadow of its walls. Tsinkiangpu, with than two hundred thousand residents, has an ominous mpment of nearly half a million desperate, famishing ple at its gates, ready at the first incitement to face a k, violent death, rather than this torturing, slow starva- , and so constituting an army ripe for loot and massacre. ry missionary in the famine district understands full that he is daily walking on a deadly mine.

ack in the country the unimaginable, indescribable worst ts. Sufferers, strong and resolute, may make their way h to the cities and compel food for themselves. But t of those who are too weak or timid to leave their es? Some of them are subsisting on roots and leaves and bark of trees, others are holding out to the end—and dying. Thousands must die before relief can reach n, no matter how quickly it comes, granting that relief does extend to their districts. Death is inevitable for y, especially the very old and the very young. No cen- can ever be made of the mortality of this famine. But is certain: unless the Christian public of America kly comes to the help of these needy, the deaths will manyfold what they otherwise would be. This is an ortunity to save life, and, since all relief is being dis- uted solely by missionaries, it is an opportunity to com- d to these people the Gospel of Him who embodies self in the person of each of earth's needy ones, ing, "I was an hungered, and ye gave me meat, I was sty, and ye gave me drink . . . . . naked, and ye hed me."

The "Larchmont" Horror

VERY sad is the story told on another page of the sinking of the Larchmont in Long Island Sound. How the accident could have occurred on a starlight night, when the lights of each vessel were visible to the men on the other, is a mystery, which perhaps the investigation that will follow, may solve. There is no mystery, however, in the other parts of the narrative. The characteristics of the tragedy are far too familiar to us. The steamer caved in before the blow of the schooner as if it was built of matchwood. It had no watertight bulkheads, though there was some talk of a law being enacted requiring that provision, which would have saved many lives. Then we read of the boats in which a few of the people got away from the sinking vessel being without oars and drifting helplessly on the waves. Surely, if there is any law that will take cognizance of such a state of affairs it should be invoked, especially before the season comes, when the Sound boats will be crowded with passengers.

Still more deplorable, though scarcely criminal, only disgraceful, are the stories in circulation of the desertion of the passengers by the Captain and many of the crew. The captain admits that the boat in which he escaped with seven of his men, was the first to leave the sinking vessel. We have heard of captains who remained until the last; but this one appears to have been of another order. The boat, too, in which he made his escape would have held some of the passengers, but he was so eager to get away that he did not wait for them and one lady says that when she attempted to get in she was roughly pushed aside. We turn away from the narrative with loathing. The very fact that so few of the passengers and so many of the crew were saved tells its own story.

For the dead and for the living who, maimed and frost-bitten, suffered such misery, we can but grieve. The suddenness of the calamity must have been terrible. In those awful moments, what opportunity was there for any soul to make its peace with God? How the disaster brought out character! The little band of Salvationists standing together singing their hymns as the vessel sank in the icy waters, while men around them were shrieking and cursing was an impressive spectacle, showing how souls supported by faith can meet death. That group is a picture that carries a sermon more eloquent than can ever be preached. The calm confidence of the soul that, on the verge of such a death, could sing, unmoved by fear or by the confusion around, teaches a lesson that cannot be forgotten. Well might those around say, "Let me die the death of the righteous and let my last end be like his."

The Sleeping Town

TOWNS and communities, like people, cannot remain stationary. They must either progress or decline. The question whether a town is a live one or not has nothing to do with the size of the place. There are towns that do not have their names in the average geography that have all the activity of a miniature New York City, and there are quite large cities that have apparently fallen to sleep. For the sleepy town many excuses are given. Among them, "factories have moved to other places," "the young men have gone to the great centres of trade." A sleepy, unprogressive place reacts, unfortunately, upon the people who live in it. They seem to be in what is known as "their waking moments," in other words, getting ready for another nap. Most of our sleepy towns are so, because one generation has made its money and retired from business, and they are willing to let the town sleep; it is more comfortable without the blowing of factory whistles or the backing of trains upon a siding. The younger generation in despair gets up and goes elsewhere.

Such conditions should be met by associations of people who are ambitious and awake, who should do their utmost to make their town an attractive place for men of business to establish their plants in, and where young men can find work and an outlet for their energy without going to some other town to help build it up with their young blood and fresh minds. The young men will not stay—it is unreasonable to expect them to—where there is no prospect for material or intellectual progress. Village improvement associations have been already formed in many places, and, although bearing various names, all have the one idea of making the home town a place to be proud of, a better place morally, spiritually, intellectually, and commercially than it has been. The reports of the success of some of these associations read like fairy stories, but have the added attraction of being true.

If a town shows signs of settling itself for a long nap, the neighbors should get together and form committees to carry out various lines of town improvement, all forming part of the great "committee of the whole," to awaken the place from its dream. Too much sleep is a dangerous thing for a community; the opportunity of becoming better and greater may pass while the blinds are drawn and the grass sprouts between the bricks of the pavement.

Comfort for the Weak

ONE well known in the world of literature tells how once she found a lamb lying bleating piteously by the dusty roadside, while the shepherd and the other sheep were already far ahead. The lady carried the lamb till she overtook the flock, and found the mother ewe, eager to receive it. But the shepherd drove back the lamb, and said, "It can't keep up and must be left behind."

There are many who cannot keep up on the rough journey and in the hard battle of life, and the world too often gives them no helping hand, but leaves them behind. If a man is too weak to struggle to the front, the world tramples him under foot, or throws him aside.

Not so does the Good Shepherd treat his sheep and his lambs. If one has wandered away, he seeks it. If one has fallen, he lifts it up. If one is weak and helpless, he carries it in his bosom. Is not this sweet comfort for any of us, whatever the sense of weakness and sin and failure? Trust the Good Shepherd. He will not leave you behind.

The Uses of Sorrow

OUR life is too great to have its plan completed and its mystery explained within the narrow limits of this world. We must survey the horizon of eternity if we would see the full unfolding of the economy under which we are placed and but a very small part of which falls under our inspection here; if we would see "the end of the Lord, that he is very pitiful"—the end of all the paths by which he is leading us and recognize that they are mercy and truth to them that fear him.

The more we are imprisoned by circumstances, the more we are limited by trouble, the better fitted are we to get such a view. It needs trouble in the soul to look beyond the things that are temporal to the things that are eternal, just as it needs the air to be saturated with latent vapor in order to bring distant objects in the landscape near and to make every hue and line distinct.

Travellers in Switzerland have observed that the Alps at Macon are as completely hidden behind a veil of perfectly clear open sky as behind a heavy cloud; but that before a change of weather Mont Blanc shows itself distinctly, with its well known snowy dome and dark aiguilles, clear cut against the sky a hundred miles away. So in the spiritual world, sorrow makes the atmosphere of the soul transparent and the things of eternity, often unseen when all is well, grow near and well defined and vivid, as if a panorama unrolled by angel hands before our mortal eyes.

Our Letter From China

IN this issue of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD we print the first news letter and photographs received direct from any special correspondent on the famine field, if we except the letters that have come to us from the good missionaries themselves. Mr. Ellis' letter is the first of a series. It tells its sorrowful story in a way to move all hearts to sympathy. It is a story that should be read in every church and Sunday School and Bible Class and home throughout the nation. It opens the way to a great work of Christ benevolence, which cannot fail to make as deep lasting an impression upon China as a similar work made upon India, where multitudes have been won o to Christianity by kindness in the time of trial suffering.

"The people of my country are dying," said Sir Ch tung Liang Cheng, the Chinese Minister at Washingt to a representative of this journal a few days ago. "Th are suffering indescribably in untold numbers in famine districts, and it shows the wonderful brotherh of mankind that, away over here in America, the gr American people should raise money for their relief. words can express our gratitude."

Thus in China, as in India and Japan, high and lo noble and peasant, are touched and impressed by t loving and helpful service that Christian hearts a hands so willingly render "In His name" to those w are in need. The present opportunity for seed-sowing one that will produce an abundant harvest. A gift China now may be the means, under blessing, of savi both soul and body.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST JORDON and Gospel Singer Mitchell are conducti phenomenally large services at Kokomo, Ind.

—EVANGELIST JOHN S. HAMILTON, of Cleveland, O., is now c ducting services to crowded audiences at Uniontown, Pa.

—EVANGELIST HENRY W. STOUGH, who has been known especia as the foe of racetrack gambling, is holding large meetings Worcester, Mass.

—THE CLERGYMEN of Paterson, N. J., have arranged a pl whereby each in turn acts as chaplain in making pastoral visits the general hospital.

—CINCINNATI PASTORS are indignant at the report that Salon the sacrilegious opera which was lately withdrawn in New Yo in deference to public opinion, is to be produced in that city, a are organizing to prevent it.

—THE PROJECTED SERIES of Gospel meetings in New York sho and factories began February 5. It was proposed to hold o hundred meetings in ten days under the auspices of the Feder tion of Churches. Inclement weather to some extent interfer with the programme.

—A UNION GOSPEL CAMPAIGN is now being carried on at Waupac Wis., under the direction of Charles N. Hunt, the lawyer evang list, of Minneapolis, Minn., assisted by Soloist Alexander B. Davi son. The churches uniting are the Baptist and Methodist ar excellent results are reported.

—WORCESTER, MASS., is to be the next scene of active Gosp labors by Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman and his corps of evangelist workers. At the great series of meetings recently held in Pa tucket, R. I., one thousand personal workers, trained and orga ized as a working committee, did most effective service.

—CROSSLEY AND HUNTER, the Canadian evangelists, have recenti closed a Union campaign in Calgary, Canada, in which about fi hundred professed conversion. The Sunday after the meetin closed one hundred and nine united with the Central Methodi Church. All the churches have reaped a rich harvest.

—HIS EXCELLENCY SIR CHENTUNG LIANG CHENG, Chinese Ministe at Washington, speaking with a representative of this journa said: "The Chinese people remember what THE CHRISTIAN HERAL did for our famine sufferers before, and they are deeply gratefu No words can express our appreciation of Dr. Klopsch's unrivalle philanthropy, and through him I would express my gratitude t the American people for their great generosity.

THE BIBLE and the NEWSPAPER

Scene of Martyrdom

WHEN Lincoln dedicated the cemetery at Gettysburg, he said that the real dedication had taken place when men died there. So it is with the vast ruin in Rome that is known as the Coliseum. It was the scene of the martyrdom of Christians in such vast numbers that it needed none of the crosses and oratories that Pope Benedict XIV. caused to be erected there to make its soil sacred in the eyes of Christendom. None can go there without a solemn sense of the cruelties there perpetrated and the sublime heroism that preferred death to the desertion of Christ. The illustration on this page shows how modern visitors testify their reverence. It was drawn by the famous artist, G. Amato, of the Illustrated London News, and was published in that journal. It shows how people of all classes, Roman Catholic priests, laymen and women, are thrilled as they look upon the actual stones which the brave Christians must have gazed upon in their last moments. Recent excavations in this vast theatre, which had seats for 87,000 persons and standing places for 15,000 more, have revealed the chambers in which the lions and other fierce beasts were kept. The route can be traced by which they entered the arena and the place whence the Christians, men and women, were thrown to them to be torn to pieces and devoured before the huge crowd of Rome's citizens, who gloated over the spectacle. It was their method of celebrating the public holidays, and was the natural culmination of the early spectacles when fights between pairs of gladiators sufficed to entertain the spectators. These grew tame and were followed by huge massacres, in which hundreds of victims were slaughtered at a single show. The people were eager to witness the spectacle and the emperors won popularity by pandering to the popular taste. In the Neronian persecution the Christians were clad in the skins of wild beasts and torn to pieces by devouring dogs. Another device was to cover them with pitch and elevate them on poles in Nero's garden, where they were consumed as torches. In the next persecution, under Domitian, forty thousand Christians are believed to have perished in various ways. Under Trajan, under Decius, under Valerian and under Diocletian, the horror continued, and throughout the shows in the Coliseum were kept up and the Christians were flung to the lions on the national holiday. The building in which the heroic martyrs laid down their lives is now a vast ruin. The silent lesson breathed from its stones is, as Lincoln said of Gettysburg, a lesson of dedication. It would be a shame to us if we were disloyal to the cause to which men and women were faithful when the price of fidelity was death.

The Place in the Coliseum in Rome Whence Christians were Thrown to the Lions

For thy sake we are killed all the day long; we are accounted as sheep for the slaughter (Rom., 8: 36).

Royal Thanks

The friendly service Admiral Davis, of our Navy, rendered recently in the emergency in Jamaica, which evoked the ungentlemanly criticism of Governor Swettenham, has been acknowledged in a very different spirit by King Edward. In his speech at the opening of Parliament on February 12, the King said: "The disaster called forth many proofs of practical good will from all parts of my empire, and I recognize with sincere gratitude the sympathy shown by the people of the United States and the assistance promptly offered by their naval authorities." As he uttered these words he turned in the direction of the Diplomatic Corps and bowed to the American Ambassador, Whitelaw Reid. We can afford to overlook the rudeness of a minor official when the head of the British Empire renders acknowledgment and tenders his thanks so cordially and gracefully. It is so that the Christian is consoled when he is misunderstood and misrepresented on earth. He can bear contumely and abuse when he knows that his cause is in the hands of Him who seeth all things and judges righteously.

Great in counsel, and mighty in work: for thine eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men: to give everyone according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings (Jer. 32: 19).

Nations Forbidden to Fight

For probably the first time in history, two quarreling nations have been peremptorily forbidden by five neighboring nations to resort to arms. Heretofore other nations have courteously intervened when two governments prepared for war and have offered their good offices in the interests of peace, but now intervention has assumed a more authoritative form. A statement issued on February 12 from the State Department at Washington, D. C., says that at a conference held the day before between Assistant Secretary Bacon and the Mexican Ambassador, it had been decided that Mexico and the United States would unite with Salvador, Costa Rica and Guatemala in making identical representations to Honduras and Nicaragua to the effect that they would be expected to settle their differences without resort to war, and that the arbitration court which was recently terminated at San Salvador must be reconvened in order that the issues between the two countries may be peacefully settled. This is a mandate that the two nations dare not disregard, and it is, therefore, a step in the direction of universal peace. There might be a case in which two belligerents might be too powerful to be so controlled, but there will be a time when the moral and spiritual force emanating from Him who will reign in Jerusalem will be recognized as final and authoritative.

Out of Zion shall go forth the law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem. He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and nation shall not lift up sword against nation (Isa. 2: 3, 4).

The Great Sun Spot

One of the largest spots ever seen on the face of the sun was observed by Professor Brashear, of the Allegheny Observatory, on February 13. Its approximate length, he says, was 118,000 miles and its width 50,000 miles, thus covering an area of five thousand million miles, or about sixteen times the size of the earth. It was remarkably active and exceedingly beautiful and was passing slowly toward the central meridian. It is seldom that a spot is seen of larger dimensions than half a million miles. The cause and nature of these spots have not yet been determined, but the leading astronomers are inclined to believe that they are breaks in the luminous atmosphere, due to eruptions on the surface of the sun, or to terrific cyclones sweeping across it. The ordinary spots with which we are familiar appear at intervals of about eleven years. This spot, however, is not one of the series, but is a stranger newly developed. It has been remarked that the appearance of these sun spots is usually accompanied by electrical disturbances on our earth, but whether these disturbances are caused by the spots, or are simply coincidences, has not yet been ascertained. It is clear, however, that vast changes are taking place in the condition of the centre of our system, and no one knows what they may portend to us; but whatever comes we know that the Christian has a sure and eternal refuge.

The heavens are the work of thine hands: they shall perish; but thou remainest: they all shall wax old as doth a garment; but thou art the same and thy years shall not fail (Heb. 1: 10-12).

Starved in a Freight Car

Two railroad employees at Paterson, N. J., had a ghastly surprise a few days ago when they broke the seals on a freight car that had come in from North Carolina. Lying close to the doors was the emaciated body of a man, who had evidently been accidentally imprisoned in the car and had died of starvation. His face showed that he had died in agony, and bruises on his hands indicated that he had made fruitless efforts to effect his release or make it known that he was imprisoned in the car. There was nothing found on the body that would reveal his identity, or whence he came. The car had been two weeks en route from North Carolina. It is supposed he had crawled into the car where it was loaded and went to sleep and the door had been shut and sealed by railroad employees. The snowstorm delayed the delivery of the car and, besides the lack of food and water, the unknown must have suffered severely from the intense cold. Doubtless the man thought the car would stand still long enough for him to have his nap and had no idea that it would carry him away on so long a journey. People often make a similar mistake about their lives, forgetting that life is fleeting and nothing in this world is stable or permanent.

We are strangers before thee, and sojourners, as were all our fathers: our days on the earth are as a shadow, and there is none abiding (Chron. 29: 15).

Saved from Living Burial

A singular accident befell a coal dealer in Brooklyn, N. Y., last week. A consignment of two hundred tons of pea-coal had arrived for him, and had been transferred from the barges to the "pocket" in his yard on the wharf. He climbed the wall back of the pocket to inspect it. Some sound attracted his attention, and in turning to investigate it his foot slipped and he fell into the big bin. He sank to his knees and instantly realized his danger. He tried to throw himself flat on the coal, but the more he struggled the deeper he sank. He shouted for help, and several of his employees rushed to the scene. Happily, one of the men thought of opening the chute which permitted the coal to run out to the loading platform below. When about half the coal had run out, his form was seen jammed against the chute, and ropes were thrown to him, by which he was drawn out. The surgeons at the hospital said that if he had been under the coal two minutes longer nothing could have saved his life. He is not the first man whose possessions have been so great as to put him in peril.

They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and heartful lusts, which drown men in destruction (I. Timothy, 6: 9).

LEADERS OF THE DIPLOMATIC CORPS

Foreign Diplomats at Washington

MODERN diplomacy is not all made up of secret state papers or mysterious conferences with foreign offices. Dignified ambassadors and wise-looking secretaries, hurrying to the Department of State with great black portfolios under their arms to consult with Mr. Secretary Root and Mr. Assistant Secretary Bacon, are not the only nor the most important part of a diplomatist's duty at our National Capital. In recent years, at least, it has been found by the governments over the seas that it is quite as necessary, in selecting a man for the Washington mission, to secure a plenipotentiary who understands the social amenities of life, as one who can conduct purely business affairs of state. They have learned that there are vast possibilities in what might be termed personal diplomacy. They therefore select men who not only are themselves capable, but whose families also are capable of making a social success.

One need only to glance at the present members of the Diplomatic Corps at Washington to realize the truth of this statement. In the ambassadorial ranks there is no one who stands higher with President Roosevelt, our State Department, and officialdom generally than the Ambassador from Germany, the cultured and genial Freiherr Speck von Sternberg. As a diplomatist he stands without a peer in the corps; but, in addition to this, he and his charming wife—an American girl—have made the Embassy one of the most popular in the city. Senatorial, residential, as well as diplomatic circles have been made welcome there, and there is not the slightest doubt that this has contributed immeasurably to the good feeling existing between the United States and Speck von Sternberg's "Fatherland." It is the same with the

RILLIANT LIFE AT THE EMBASSIES

French and other embassies. Under the late Lord Pauncefote, the British embassy was the centre of social life at the Capital, and that it will resume its old sway under Ambassador Bryce there is little doubt.

Just at this time, that most interesting of all bodies, the Corps Diplomatique, is represented by nine embassies and twenty-nine legations at Washington. The countries sending plenipotentiaries of ambassadorial rank are, in their official precedence, Italy, Austria-Hungary, France, Germany, Brazil, Russia, Japan, Mexico and Great Britain. The South American country of Chile wants very much to raise the standard of its post at Washington to an embassy, and return the scholarly Gana, the present Chilian ambassador at London, to the United States; but there is intense opposition by the larger Powers to any of the smaller nations, particularly the South American Republics, being admitted to the highest plenipotentiary rank, and this opposition will probably be the death-knell to Chile's ambition in this direction.

The Italian Ambassador, Baron des Planches, is the Dean of the Corps—that is, he has been stationed longer in Washington than any of his conferees. The Baron and his accomplished wife have done more to raise the social prestige of Italy at Washington than any of his predecessors. Through his influence, his home government purchased legation property—the magnificent Hearst mansion on New Hampshire Avenue—and they have thrown it open to the social world with a most generous hospitality.

AN "ARTIST-PASTOR" AND HIS WORK

By Susan Hunter Walker

TO be an artist and a minister, and to possess brain and eye and hand strong and virile enough to produce, at fourscore years and four, a fine work in symbolic art, is the gift of the Reverend Johannes Adam Oertel, D.D., a Protestant Episcopal pastor of Vienna, Va.

Johannes A. Oertel

The latest productions of this "artist-priest" are the altar, reredos and credence table which have lately been placed in Emmanuel Church, Belair, Maryland. The work is a combination of elaborate carving of figures and symbols in quartered oak, representations of the four evangelists, done in oil on canvas, adoring cherubim in monotone, and illuminated texts and symbols. In its general scheme, this follows the larger work of the same character executed by this artist for the Church of the Incarnation, Washington. The latter stands high as an example of American art.

To immediately identify the "artist-priest," one has but to recall his best-known work, "The Rock of Ages." Johannes A. Oertel can never be forgotten so long as this picture, familiar to every eye, lives (it was reproduced in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD several years ago). Tastes and styles in symbolic art change with the years, and "The Rock of Ages" may not now appeal to the collector of modern art, but it has fulfilled its purpose more adequately than any other American religious painting. It is still a potent missionary, bearing its message of salvation to every corner of the civilized world.

It was when this country was in the throes of turmoil resulting from the Civil War, that this canvas was painted in the artist's quiet studio at Westerly, Rhode Island. The original painting was a small affair, three by four feet in size. It was the artist's conception of Faith, and was intended to be the first of a series representing Faith, Hope and Charity. His idea was to give to the world those truths so plainly depicted that all who ran might read. In his design of Faith the world was a great sea, sometimes calm, sometimes turbulent; but the final doom of all launched upon it was destruction unless they found the Rock of Ages—the Cross of Christ.

"Christ Going up to Jerusalem," by Oertel

The original canvas was sold for a thousand dollars to Augustus Storrs, of Brooklyn. Before it went to its purchaser, it was put on exhibition in a New York gal y. "The Rock of Ages" was the pinnacle of the artist's progress It brought him fame to crown his years of effort. He gave up fo e time his studio work and, gratifying an old desire, entered the n s try of the Episcopal Church. From then until now he has filled missio y posts, taught in art schools and colleges, painted at intervals and no n the evening of his life, he is passing his days in a suburban village ot far removed from the national capital.

His modest frame studio here is filled with canvasses; walls are cov d and pictures are strewn about the big room in artistic confusion. e is a late picture, "Christ Going up to Jerusalem," there a cop f "The Final Harvest," and a large photographic reproduction of e original "Rock of Ages" hangs upon the wall and, most beautifu f all, on the easel rests "The Walk to Gethsemane." This painting a moonlight scene and represents our Lord and his disciples on their sad walk together. The delicate tones and shadows in this picture e exquisite and harmonize feelingly with the spirit of the subject. s is considered the masterpiece among the later works of the a artist.

"The Walk to Gethsemane," by Oertel

Johannes Adam Oertel was born in 1823 and passed his boyhoo the town of Nuremberg, Bavaria. The famous frescos by Peter Visc probably gave him his first lesson in mural decoration. He c to America in his early manhood, filled with ideals he had gained f his study of the German masters and their impress has never left him.

PIONEERING AMONG CANNIBALS

the removal or death of the missionaries, while Ian, a great inland chief, spoke fiercely in their behalf. Ian led Dr. Paton to the conference and showed him his own armed followers, with these words:

"Missi, these are my men and your friends. We are met to defend you and the worship." Then he motioned to those drawn up on the opposite side. "These are your enemies and ours. The enemies of the worship, and the disturbers of the peace on Tanna. Missi say the word and the muskets of my men will sweep all opposition away, and the worship will spread and we will all be strong for it on Tanna. We will not shoot without your leave, but if you refuse they will kill you and persecute us and our children and banish Jehovah's worship from our land."

The opposing chiefs and their followers were trembling with fear and if Dr. Paton had consented, or had Ian lost his self-control, it is probable that the enemy would have been literally swept away from the path of progress in Tanna. Dr. Paton, however, was yet in great hopes that the natives who had opposed him would yet yield to his teachings and frowned sternly on any proposition to have them killed, even though their hands had been drenched with the blood of a hundred innocent victims. He stepped into the circle and facing the the opposing chiefs, told them he was there to help them and that he loved them all. He said he was not afraid to die, but that his God in his own time would punish them. The enemy gave a peace offering to save their skins from Ian and seemed to be satisfied to let the matter drop, but they were only planning fresh treachery. It was soon announced that that chief Ian was to be attacked through sorcery, something that the untutored savages feared more than battle. Ian did became ill; he was probably poisoned. Dr. Paton, summoned in haste, came to attend him. The people were enraged at Dr. Paton's refusal to allow their enemies to be killed and felt if they had carried out their plan Ian would yet be well. Dr. Paton knew that he was being trapped.

The natives stood in whispering groups as he passed by and soon withdrew from the village, an ominous sign. He found Ian stretched in his hut and apparently at the point of death. "Come," said the chief feebly.

Dr. Paton Expected Death Instantly

"Come near me and sit by my bedside to talk with Missi." Dr. Paton sat down by him and began to t with him. Suddenly the chief reached into the tha and drew out a butcher knife and pointed it at missionary's heart. Dr. Paton did not move a musc but looked the savage steadily in the eye. Then savage threw the knife back into the thatch and cri to the missionary to go at once. Dr. Paton return through the deserted village, watching for an ambush every step, but not a soul was seen; they had all go so that after the murder no one would be able to gi any information to the officers when the warships can The chief, they knew, would be dead.

A wonderful change took place in the character the natives after their conversion. Their devotion the missionaries was as marked as their hatred for the had been before they became Christians. In ma cases they became active missionaries themselves a went to tell, in their own simple way, the lessons their new-found religion.

Once the missionary fell ill of the swamp fever an he thought that his end was near. His faithful nativ Abraham, and his wife assisted him, as he almost crawle toward the top of a high hill. Some distance from th top the missionary fainted and the two natives carrie him to the top and laid him on a bed of cocoanut leave and built a roof of leaves above his head. Day afte day they fed him and watched over him with the mos tender solicitude. The Tannese natives thought th white man was dead and did not hunt for him Strength at last returned and he decided to build mission house on the spot of his recovery.

YOUR EASTER GIFT TO US

VERY important changes in the rulings and regulations governing the second-class mail privilege take place on March 4th. It has been decided to rigidly enforce the order excluding from second-class mail privileges all publications which contain blank forms intended to be cut out for whatever purpose. This issue, dated February 27th, is the last in which may be employed to carry to our readers such convenient solicitation of correspondence, and we take advantage of this final opportunity to ask their hearty co-operation in making the Great Campaign for 500,000 additions to our Subscription List, in which we are about to engage, a triumphant success. This will be your Easter Gift to us.

Final Opportunity

To carry on our extensive propaganda we shall require a million names, and we appeal to our readers to mail us that number on or before Monday, March 18th. If every subscriber to The Christian Herald were to undertake to fill out the List for twenty-five names, printed for their convenience on the next page, we would receive over six million names. Of course, there are many who, owing to feeble health and other unfavorable conditions, cannot respond to the promptings of their generous hearts and therefore we cannot reasonably expect so large a number. We have in former instances succeeded, again and again, in getting a million, and we feel confident that most of our readers will gladly embrace this final opportunity and send us a list of representative men and women whose company they would be glad to enjoy on the Subscription List of The Christian Herald.

Select the Names

Of course there is no difference between name people and others, therefore remember, please, that we ask for names of adult people, Protestant people, church-going people, and no two of them living in the same house. Do you know twenty-five such people? Just stop to think, and if you do know that many, please fill out the Blank supplied and send it to us as promptly as possible.

OUR EASTER GIFT TO YOU

YOU will remember the fine picture of "Washington's Entry into New York," which we published in our last week's issue. Every person sending a list of 25 names and 10 cents for packing and mailing, will receive that picture, superbly printed on very heavy extra-coated stock, delivered free from blemish or crease of any kind, and ready for framing, as an evidence of our practical appreciation of their kind co-operation. The pictures which we will send out under this offer are far better in execution than those that appeared in The Christian Herald, and even better than those which we advertised for sale as "specially good productions," being printed with extra care, on high-grade paper, and packed so as to guarantee absolutely undamaged delivery. Remember, there are eleven colors in the picture and the paper is large enough to afford the luxury of wide margins. These pictures are sold in New York at $1.25 each. This will be our Easter Gift to you. You may, of course, send in your List without taking advantage of this offer.

WASHINGTON'S TRIUMPHAL ENTRY INTO NEW YORK, NOVEMBER 25, 1783

This Superb Patriotic Picture, Greatly Enlarged, Exquisitely Printed in Eleven Colors, on high-grade Coated Paper, and Measuring 18 x 24 Inches, is the One Mentioned in the Article on this Page

Some years ago we addressed a similar request to our readers, and in response received Two Million Four Hundred Thousand Names. While we are only expecting One Million now, we would not be surprised to get double that number.

Last Mailing Date

These Lists must reach The Christian Herald Office as close to March 18, as the mails can carry them, and no lists should be mailed later than that day. As this is the last time we can appeal to our readers to co-operate with us on this line, we are confident that one and all will favor us with a complete and specially selected List. Address the List as soon as completed to

A Personal Appeal from Dr. Klopsch

Kindly permit me to ask as a special and personal favor that you send us a list of twenty-five names. It means but little to you in the way of effort, but it means very much to me. You know something of the work in which I am engaged and I know that you feel a personal interest in it and would like to see it succeed on a much larger scale than ever before. If so, please be good enough to give your wish practical expression in the shape of a list of twenty-five people whom you believe sympathetically inclined and thus likely to appreciate a beautifully illustrated circular setting forth the mission of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD as the King's messenger of good tidings. I shall ever feel personally grateful to you for your kind co-operation.

P.S. Under the new Postal Regulation this will be your last opportunity.

Yours Truly

"OF SUCH IS THE KINGDOM"

By REV. CHARLES M. SHELDON, Author of "In His Steps"

SCENE I.

ROSY CALVAIRE pauses a moment, even in her heart fear for baby Angelo, fascinated by the burst of warm light that pours out on the walk and the superior beings that de- the stone steps to their carriages or automobiles standing in a long row the curbstone. This downtown ch, close by the factory, has done some things for men and women in the ness district; but the children—oh ey are such small children—so small at the eyes of Grab & Grind are, so the only eyes that have seen them, e the church was busy with its ritual, its glory to God, sung by a $5,000 r in a $5,000,000 temple.

e minister goes back into his cozy by the side of the chancel, where the robe is hung up and, before going out s carriage waiting for him by the side , he exchanges a word with his organ- s he comes down from the loft.

The 'In excelsis' was splendidly ren- d to-night. Your 'Magnificat' by mant was specially strong."

Thank you, Doctor. I appreciate your l. I hope the session will not fail to about Madam La Foy's increase in ry. She has been offered $1,000 more t. Mark's. It would be a pity to lose solo singing."

O, I'll see to that," the minister says, lessly, as he puts on his overcoat. ab & Grind will contribute $500 . They are specially enthusiastic Madam La Foy's singing."

It would not do to let St. Mark's get start of us," says the organist.

No, indeed." The Doctor opens the door. "Whew! a cold, raw night. ks as if we would have a stormy sea- . Yes. What is it Richards?" he says, ctionately, to a young man who comes ning up the side doorsteps.

I beg pardon, Doctor, but I wanted to see the design of the box covers I e made for our candy boxes this year. committee has its arrangements pretty l made for the Sunday School enter- ment, and I thought—"

Yes, yes, Richards. Come back in e a minute. It's bitter cold."

The minister and his young parishioner back into the warm room near the ncel, and the young man eagerly, and h a show of professional pride, displays heet of paper to the minister, covered h the cradle and baby, the same design sy has been folding on the boxes all the ernoon.

Fine! Couldn't be better. It's artistic. u're improving every year, Richard. proud of you."

The young artist glows with pleasure der the warm words of praise from his stor.

"I thought you would like it. The com- ttee has ordered 500 for the Sunday hool. We want the children at the ssion to have a good time."

"That's right, Richards. We must see at the children have a good time." He ens the door again and goes down to carriage.

"Good night, Richards, and a Merry ristmas to you!"

"Same to you, Doctor," says the young man, as he respectfully holds the Doctor's carriage door open for him, and then turns with a satisfied smile down the sidewalk, humming Emily Ellicott's hymn:

Thou did'st leave thy throne
And thy kingly crown,
When thou cam'st to earth for me;
But in Bethlehem's home
Was there found no room
For thy holy nativity:
O come to my heart, Lord Jesus,
There is room in my heart for thee.

Rosy runs along because she is so cold. She is tired to death and hungry, only not so hungry as a few hours ago; her body is faint even at the thought of food, and the hate she has felt all day for the foreman is gone because her love for baby Angelo has all the room there is in her soul. She runs several blocks, cuts through dark alleys, where she would sob for fear if baby Angelo did not help her, and at last reaches a pair of dirty outside stairs by the side of a tenement house. She stumbles up these stairs, falls against the rickety door at the head of them and enters, shutting the door quickly behind her. There is a dirty piece of candle on the shelf near an old bed, on which her mother is lying, and by the side of the bed a box, in which baby Angelo is lying.

Rosy goes at once up to her mother.

"Mamma, I came as soon as I could. Mort, the foreman, locked us in. How is Angelo?"

"He seems quieter now. A district caller from St. Mary's has been here. Left some coal and other things. Poor dear, how tired you must be!" Mrs. Calvaire speaks faintly.

Rosy opens the little stove and puts in more coal. Then she goes to the table and for a moment looks at the paper bags there. Then she takes down the bit of candle and stoops over baby Angelo's box.

"Mamma!" she says, "Angelo is so cold. His face is so cold."

"The visitor left some blankets over there."

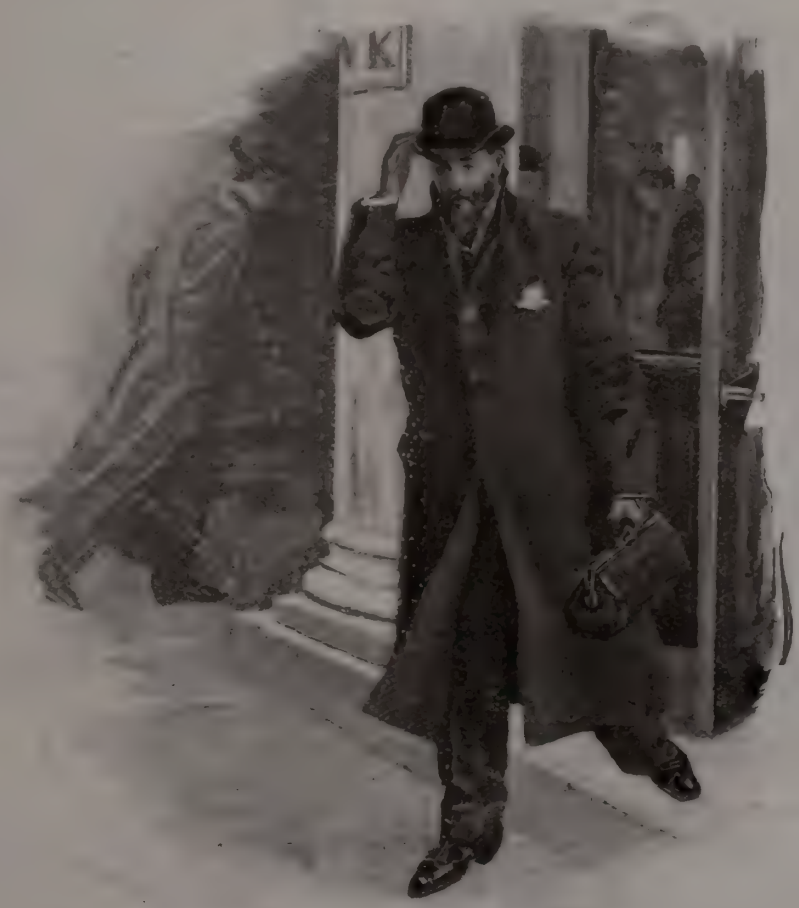
Mrs. Calvaire tries to rise, as she points to a corner.

"But his face is so cold, mamma, and so white!" Rosy grows more and more terrified. Splashes of melted tallow fall over her trembling fingers as the candle tilts in her hands.

Mrs. Calvaire reaches her hand over the side of the bed and lays it on the baby's cheek. A moment, and then, with a scream of terror, she flings herself out of bed, kneeling by the side of the box.

"O, he's dead! dead! Rosy! Call the doctor! Call Mrs. Millard. My baby!"

Rosy hears, but her heart stands still. Then she throws herself down by the side of her mother. All the pent-up grief of her little soul bursts over that poor piece of cold clay that she has carried so often hugged up to her staggering body, until she feels not like a sister but a mother to it. She does not scream. She cries; great bursts of weeping that drain her again of tears as in the afternoon, only now, instead of falling on a picture of a baby in a cradle, they fall in hot splashes down on the cold, dead face of baby Angelo; and God sees these tears also, and God notes them in his book of remembrance, and in the movement of his great purposes for the redemption of the world, every one of those tears is like an ocean-flood of protest against child-labor in this country, which shall rise up and sweep over Grab & Grind, and sweep out of our commercial selfishness forever one of the greatest and most inexcusable wrongs of which a civilized nation was ever guilty.



"Dr. Wentworth fought his way out of the store"

SCENE II.

The Doctor

DR. JAMES WENTWORTH is in a hurry. Doctors are often in a hurry. Generally it is on other people's account. Sometimes it is on their own. The doctor has spent a trying afternoon in his office and now, at half-past five, he breathes a great sigh of relief as he comes down out of the great skyscraper and joins the immense crowd on the sidewalk. It is sharp and frosty, and a sputter of snow is in the air. The stores are gorgeously trimmed with holly and evergreen, and jammed with Christmas shoppers.

In front of Grab & Grind's great emporium Dr. Wentworth pauses, as hundreds have done all day, attracted by the huge pyramids of candy boxes and the advertisement of the candy bargain sale

He looks a moment and then shrugs his shoulders.

"Might as well get something for the children now," he says, and plunges into one of the doorways of the store.

Inside the building is a mob of holiday shoppers. The aisles are jammed with a crowd of tired men and women, and the girls behind Grab & Grind's counter are rushing holiday bargains at the highest commercial speed. Dr Wentworth finally succeeds in getting up to the candy-box counter.

"Give me two of those," he says to the girl, pointing to a pyramid of boxes covered with the picture of the baby in the cradle and the words "Merry Christmas" underneath.

The girl pulls two boxes off the pile, makes out her check, shoves the whole over to the bundle girl, who is snowed under with previous bundles. The doctor waits because he has to. The fetid air in the store chokes him. The mad throng of Christmas shoppers bumps up against him, at times almost forcing him away from his place at the counter. Men reach over his shoulders after bundles and knock his hat off. Women look at him indignantly for standing in the way. But after an interval of less than half an hour the doctor secures his candy boxes, fights his way out of the store, makes a dash for a Park Avenue car, hangs on to a strap with dozens of other men like him carrying bundles, fights his way out of the car at One-hundred-and-thirty-second Street and, with another sigh of relief, lets himself into his cozy flat, where he first conceals the candy boxes on the hat-tree shelf under his overcoat, and then with a smile greets his pretty wife and a little girl, who runs out of the hallroom to see him.

Ruth, nine years old, rosy and happy,

GREATNESS OF GENTLENESS

International Sunday School Lesson for March 10
By Dr. and Mrs. Wilbur F. Crafts

ABRAHAM and Jacob lived "the strenuous life" in a wide range of travel. Isaac's "simple life" was spent in a radius of forty miles, bounded by Hebron, Gerar, and Beer-Lahai-Roi. A quiet, average, everyday life was his, whose simple duties he glorified by daily faithfulness, illustrating the saying, "Little things are little things, but to do little things faithfully is a great thing" (Gen. 26: 13). We are liable to hold before children too much a stimulus to imitate men of exceptional greatness. This lesson shows what beauty and glory a true gentleman may put into the commonplace life which must come to most of us.

Isaac On the Altar

It will be easy to remember that Isaac was born as long before Christ as the eleven-year-olds in our homes and Sunday Schools after Christ. His home was Beersheba, the southernmost town in Palestine. Let us recall all we have previously learned of Isaac as the child of promise, especially his gentle submission at twenty-five years of age, when his father Abraham, with bleeding heart, told him on Mount Moriah that God had commanded that he should be offered as a sacrifice. A modern illustration of a like trustful submission is the case of a child who was out driving with his parents, when one of them spoke of continuing the drive through the cemetery. "Oh, don't," said the child, with strange fear. Unable to understand his feeling, his parents drove on. He pleaded once more, "Don't, don't take me there." On they went, and he soon stilled his protests. When at length they came out of the cemetery he exclaimed in glad surprise, "What! Are you going to take me back again? I thought when they took children to the cemetery, they left them there in the ground." He supposed he was being carried to burial, but in loving submission to his parents he had brought himself to trust and obey. And trust was right at least, and brought him out safe at last.

Isaac's name meant laughter, and his gentleness and obedience even as a boy verified the prophecy in his name, that he would bring joy to his home. Is it laughter and joy or tears and sorrow we are bringing to our parents?

After the scene on Mount Moriah, the next impressive event in Isaac's life was the death of Sarah, his mother, when he was thirty-six years of age. Then comes the beautiful story of his marriage to Rebekah. It is greatly to his credit that he did not fall into the polygamy which had become so common, even among good men, that God's Edenic rule of one wife seemed to have been almost forgotten. Although God bore with this fault in Abraham and Jacob and David and Solomon, there is no word of approval for polygamy, or even of apology for it, in all the Bible; and the effects of it are shown to be bad by the trouble it made Abraham, culminating in the sending away of Hagar and Ishmael, and in like troubles in other households. When Isaac was seventy-five his noble father, Abraham, died. The story of this lesson comes next in order when Isaac was ninety-two years old.

Blessed on the Farm

In this lesson we see Isaac as a peace-loving stock farmer, or ranchman, whose farming was done with crude plow and rude sickle, but with consecration and prosperity. His labor, life, love were devoted to God and the good of men. Let our consecration include not alone our prayer-meetings, but our daily labor, all of which should be "done heartily, as unto the Lord." God blessed Isaac's farm work, but his very prosperity, as always, brought the envy of the Philistines in its train. It is a reminder of the fact that human nature is the same in all ages, that the word "Philistines" is applied in our own time and country to the enemies of the divine order.

Birth of Anti-Semitism

Abimelech, the king of the Philistines, bade Isaac move on, because his prosperity was making trouble. It was the beginning of what is known in Europe as anti-Semitism, the hatred of Jews, because they lend money to the thriftless native peasants on mortgage and then foreclose. Isaac might doubtless have held his own by marshaling again those three hundred servants of his father, with whom Abraham had defeated five chiefs. Isaac had added others in his increasing household. But he believed rightly, that in the end more is lost than gained by fighting, and moved on to patures new. "Violence is the reader of Robert Louis Stevenson's rs, says they show how well he prac- in everyday life the gospel of courage, e high moral value of good temper, of the crime of gloom and despond- . Of this a journalist says: "A fit of ation was to him a thing to be ashamed d he apologizes for being occasionally down by his ill health. One cannot o be struck by the buoyant and joyous in Stevenson, whose whole life was a gle with disease. By pure will-power revented physical pain from mastering pirit. He felt that a man's duty was e cheery and helpful for the sake of rs, and that it was a miserably poor g to let one's own suffering shadow rs' lives." Hence this heroic soul in c body was a happiness-maker, both in home circle and in that larger circle hed by his books. He cultivated good er because he realized its moral value.

When it comes to be recognized more generally, a it ought to be, that good temper is not only cultivatable, but a Christian duty, and that one has no moral right to inflict gloom and despondency upon home members or the community, we shall doubtless see a marked change for the better. Doubtless a sunny disposition is natural to some and not to others; but all may acquire this, as well as any other virtue, and its possession is one of the strong recommendations of one's religion. There is no reason why one member of the family—say the unselfish mother—should supply all the sunshine for the home.

The Glory of Patience

There is an English proverb to the effect that "patience is a plaster for all sores." The Italians say, "The world is his who has patience." And the French add, "All comes right to him who can wait." But what is patience? It is heroism in an unostentatious garb—heroism amid the petty inconveniences and annoyances of the counting-house, schoolroom, warehouse, workshop, nursery or street. A subscription paper was handed around one Christmas season in behalf of the lady who has charge of the central office of the telephone A subscription paper is a very common thing everywhere when Christmas is near, but the heading to this paper was very uncommon and significant. In substance it read: "We, the undersigned, in consideration of the kind and patient cheerfulness of Miss Blank, shown at all times to all by the tone of her voice, do cheerfully pay the sums," etc.

Isaac was not much of a talker, but he preached of peace and gentleness in actions that speak louder than words, which reminds us of a good story for boys, and for girls, too: "When I get big enough" said Eddie, "I'm going to be a preacher." "What is a preacher?" said grandma. Eddie answered in surprise, "A preacher tells the people what the Bible means. And he says, 'thirdly, my brethren,' and everybody listens. It's nice to have people listen to you." Grandma smiled. "I think you're now." "I'm afraid I'm not," said Eddie. "What does a preacher do first?" said grandma. "He takes a text and 'splains it," said Eddie. "Here is a good text," said grandma, 'Be kindly affectioned one to another.' I should like to have you preach a week from that text." "Preach a week? Why grandma, I can't. There's nothing to 'splain about that. You just be kind and that's all there is of it." "Can't you be kind to everybody you meet for a week?" said grandma. "Would that be preaching?" said Eddie. "It would, and the very best kind. A good preacher has to preach that way, or the people would not listen to what he says in the pulpit." "Well," said Eddie with a sigh, "I suppose I can try, but I was not thinking of that kind of preaching." The next day Eddie said to himself, "It is not kind to the teacher to whisper in school," and so he did'nt. "It is not kind to mamma to play on the road and keep dinner waiting," he said after school, and hurried home. At the end of the week grandma said, "How do you like preaching?" Eddie answered, "Why, I like it, grandma, but I guess everybody else was preaching that text, too, for everybody has been kind to me."

A Remarkable Church

Dear Editor: You would be surprised if you knew how many of my church members are subscribers of your paper. I believe that Deacon John B. Young is among the oldest you have any account of; a saintly, godly man, as pure as the sun ever shone on!

Our church is the oldest Congregational Church in the State. It has 170 members. A sewing society sixty-five years old, with a president who has served fifty-two consecutive years. Our organist of the church has just resigned, who played for us over fifty consecutive years. We have just re-dedicated an almost new interior, with new rooms, floors, pulpit, pews, handsome windows, solid silver communion service (individual) and gaslights generated on the premises; electric light on the pulpit and acousticon for the deaf.

I think it is a wonderful church these days, and should be heard from. All the above has been accomplished in less than three years. Before that the church was only an ordinary, everyday country church. (Rev.) John A. Gray.

"New Creations" in BUSH LIMAS!

Nature has surely surpassed herself! In a single season she has outstripped all efforts of man. In fact, such distinct new types have never even been dreamed of before!

To learn just what they really are and how they were discovered, kindly study pages 10 to 15 of The Farm Annual for 1907. They are undoubtedly the "Greatest Novelties of the Age."

The Burpee-Improved is an entirely "New Creation." The pods are truly enormous in size, borne in great abundance upon bushes two and one-half feet high by two feet across. The beans are both larger and thicker than those of the popular Burpee's Bush Lima or any strain of the large White Pole Lima.

Fordhook Bush Lima This is altogether unique. Nothing like it has ever been seen before. It is the first and only stiffly erect Bush form of the fat "Potato Lima." Both pods and beans are twice the size of Dreer's, Thorburn's or Kumerle Bush Lima and more than half again as large as the Challenger Pole Lima.

$1115 in Cash Prizes

With one prize of $150, and several of $50 each, we will pay a total of $1115 on these Two New Bush Limas, —see Burpee's Farm Annual.

These Bush Limas are sold only in sealed packets. Each packet contains twelve perfect hand-picked beans: Per pkt. 25 cents; 5 pkts. for $1.00 postpaid.

Burpee Improved Bush Lima.—Life-Size Pod

"Five Finest" New Flowers For 25 Cts.

We will mail,—as a special advertising offer,—one regular fifteen-cent packet each of the charming Variegated Queen Tall Nasturtium, the first of Burpee's New "Royal Race" of Variegated-Leaved Tall Nasturtiums, —Burbank's New Crimson-Flowering Eschscholtzia,—Burpee's Hercules Giant Pansies,—the gigantic orchid flowered new pink, Florence Spencer (see illustration) and the richly colored Evelyn Byatt Sweet Pea. Purchased separately these five packets would cost seventy-five cents. All five packets mailed for 25 cts.; or, five assortments (in all 25 packets) for $1.00,—to separate addresses if requested.

Four 1908 Novelties FREE!

To every one who orders direct from this advertisement, we will send Free,—if asked for,—any one with a 50c. order, any two with a dollar order, or all four with an order for $2.00. These Novelties, not yet catalogued by us, but on which we offer Cash Prizes for advance trials, are: New American Dwarf Bush Nasturtium, "Ashes of Roses,"—The New English "Beacon" Sweet Pea,—New American Thick-Leaved Gigantic Mustard, and a New Early Hard-Head Butter Lettuce from Germany.

camps at Chinkiang and at Nanking, and I was told that they are infinitely better than those which line the canal to and at Tsingkiangpu. Yet the wretchedness, the misery, the almost appalling horror of the camps I saw are practically indescribable. There is no attempt at sanitation and the mat huts are crowded together and each contains many men, women and children, who are clothed in rags, who are dishevelled beyond description and who are living on a scanty tea cup of rice a day and besides such roots and other vegetable substances as can be gleaned from a country already swept nearly bare. This is the condition of these people near the prosperous cities of Nanking and Chinkiang, and they only constitute a small percentage of the whole, the refugees in the river cities and towns probably numbering altogether 75,000.

"The climax of this famine will not come for six or seven weeks, the time when the real Chinese winter of the latitude is on. That there will be a great loss of life goes without saying; the only question now is how much can it be limited."

"Little Mary"
Who Wrote an Appeal for China

A Little Girl's Appeal for China

Little Mary, a sweet child of ten, sends us this touching letter, which shows how deeply American children feel for the unfortunate little ones of China:

"Friends of THE CHRISTIAN HERALD:—Think of the poor Chinese people. When you read of how they drown their children, remember it is because they would not see them slowly die before their eyes. No, you would not either—I know it. They have hearts, just the same as we have.

"When you think of the poor skeletons — for that is what they are — you can imagine how they look — feeble and unable to walk. When you see the picture of the boy in 1906 with his bowl full of rice, and in 1907 empty, you know it is hard. Yes, very.

"Think of the poor children. How they suffer! Their little cries are full of sadness. And how hard it must be for the poor mothers and fathers. They suffer, too, but not as much as the poor little ones, who are as thin as a pencil and yet as good as can be. We cannot understand how miserable they are. They are fed once every twenty-four hours, unless they can get something for themselves, like sweet potato leaves or the bark of some tree.

"Then think of how we have three meals a day, and a nice bed to sleep in and a warm room. The poor people in China have hardly anything to eat, and only a wet mat to sleep on in the cold nights; nothing under them but the cold ground and very little over them.

"Oh, how thankful to God we should be that we do not suffer like the poor Chinese people. So let us thank God, let us try to help the poor Chinamen.

"MARY."

Relief Committees Co-operating

The General Relief Committee in Shanghai has written to the Missionary Relief Committee at Chinkiang, cordially inviting its co-operation. The letter says, in part:

The native authorities have promised every assistance and protection possible. The Committee is of opinion that the authorities will do everything in their power to preserve order. Distributions of relief come before the famine sufferers as practical benefactors, and they will be most heartily welcomed by the people they come to succor. They do not therefore anticipate any real danger from this cause. There will probably be very real danger from disease and famine fever in the spring, to which all helpers will be exposed. The Committee have assured the Viceroy that it has no intention of presenting any claim on the part of any of its agents for indemnity in case of any untoward occurrence. Will you please therefore most carefully weigh this point, and count the risk as a part of the price of the famine relief?

In the distribution of relief, the only qualification will be absolute need. No shade of religious belief or unbelief will enter into the consideration of the case. This work is a great humanitarian one in its broadest sense, and aims at ameliorating physical suffering and the saving of life. Help should be given only to those who are actually face to face with starvation.

Distribution Centres

The Committee have agreed to commence at once the work of distribution in the following centres, namely: Tsingkiangpu (including Antnug), Suchien, Yaowan and Hau Choofu. All funds and foodstuffs will be sent to you, and you will be responsible for the proper distribution of the same. A Committee of local gentry should be found to work with you, which will be constituted as follows: Two local men of repute will be nominated by Mr. Hsu Tsui Tsiang, a Taotai appointed by the Viceroy, in whom the Committee has full confidence. You yourselves are hereby requested to appoint two others.

In view of the fact that the Chinese Government and others are sending large sums of money into the district, it has been decided that for the present the immediate necessity is a sufficiency of foodstuffs. 15,000 bags of American flour have been purchased and will be forwarded up-country in a few days. The flour will be shipped by us to Chinkiang and consigned to Messrs. McCrae & Walker. The Taotai in that place has been instructed, at our request, by the Viceroy to prepare launches and boats to convey up-country to your station, or as near as boats can get. Upon arrival it will be turned over to you.

The Committee suggest that the published price should be thirty cash per pound as the price of their flour. At the same time you are at liberty to lower the price to twenty-five cash or even twenty, if in your judgment such a course should be adopted. The funds can be sent back to Shanghai as realized and be again converted into foodstuffs, or used as subsequent experience may decide. The adoption of this plan will make the funds of the Committee achieve the maximum of results. The government is issuing thirty cash (about two cents, American) daily to every destitute person.

House-to-House Visits

When you begin work, you should personally visit every house, ascertaining, with the aid of your native Committee, the names of the heads of each house. A list should be carefully compiled, giving details of the number of women and children in each house, and the amount of food necessary to keep them alive. Tickets are being prepared, and will be sent to you from Shanghai, upon which all these details should be entered. Each head of a family should be supplied with such a ticket, ruled off for use for one whole month.

Yours sincerely,
EDWARD S. LITTLE,
Chairman Executive Committee.

All contributions to the Chinese Relief Fund should be addressed to THE CHRISTIAN HERALD, 92 Bible House, New York. Every contribution will be acknowledged in these columns.

China's Famine

ONCE again a wail of sorrow
From a far-off Eastern land,
Though but faintly comes the echo,
We must hear and understand.
They are turning to the Saviour,
Those who dwell in darkest night;
Let us haste and give them succor,
Let us send a ray of light.

Shall we, in this land of plenty,
Prosper in our selfish greed,
"We have naught to spare for China, Naught to give them in their need?"
Shall we see our brothers perish,
Those for whom the Christ has died?
Shall we hear that wail of anguish
And in silence turn aside?

China's millions need the Saviour,
They are waking from their sleep,
If they find that we remember
Them in want and sorrow deep.
If across the mighty waters,
We should send them food to day,
They will know that Christians send it,
And will seek the better way.

China's millions won for Jesus!
A true-hearted, loyal band,
Should arise from out this famine,
If we give with lavish hand.
They will be such true disciples,
Bravest Christians oft they make,
Facing death in loyal service,
Dying for the Master's sake.

So when the doctor goes down in the morning he steps into Grab & Grind's with the soiled boxes. It is only a little after eight, but already the store is beginning to fill up with early morning shoppers.

The doctor goes over to the candy-box counter.

"I want to exchange these boxes," he says to the girl. "They're soiled."

The girl takes them suspiciously and examines them. The doctor has brought back the sale slip.

"O, well, we'll exchange them. You'll have to wait till I send over to the exchange department. Those girls in the factory are getting awful careless this year. Lots of the boxes are damaged."

The doctor waits, and as the crowd is not yet large and the girl behind the pyramids not yet rushed, he asks:

"These boxes made here in the city?"

"Sure! Down on Devall Street. My brother's one of the bosses in the crating department."

"Did you say the boxes are made by girls?"

"No. Made by machines But girls put on the wrappers and tuck in the edges. The machines can't do that."

"How old are the girls?" the doctor asks. He does not know just what prompts the question, but something he has read lately is back of it.

"O, nine, ten, eleven, any old age," the girl answers pertly. "I worked there once when I was eleven. Bum place."

"Where did you say it was?"

"Devall Street. Fronting on Cass. Can't miss it. Advertisement out in front, 'Small girls wanted.' Here's your bundle."

The girl hands the candy boxes over to the doctor, and he takes them and walks out.

The plague spot on the body may be left to heal itself, it is the plague with which the physician wrestles. His patient is concerned about his eyes being bloodshot; the physician tells him that his general health is out of order and there is no need to give him a lotion for his eyes. This is Christ's principle. He gives life and with more life the sins with which the sinner struggles and vainly seeks to overcome are sloughed off.

When a man begins to realize how evil is the life he is leading and determines to reform, he often begins slowly and toilsomely to break off one evil habit after another. Too often he tires of this and falls back into his former state of indolent passivity. It would be a lifelong task and even at the end success would not be assured. But if at the beginning he goes to Christ and, fixing his eyes on him, tries to follow him, Christ imparts life and strength to him and he overcomes by Christ's power.

Van Camp's BAKED WITH TOMATO SAUCE PORK AND BEANS

The Nut-like Flavor of the Beans

The rich, nutty flavor of the beans in Van Camp's Pork and Beans with Tomato Sauce is compounded by old Mother Nature herself in her happiest mood.
To produce beans having this delicate flavor peculiar to Van Camp's, requires just the right combination of soil and climate.
Van Camp's seek out the favored sections of the country where the finest-flavored beans in the world are raised.
Merely good beans are not good enough for Van Camp's—nothing but the very best goes.
That is the secret of the delicious, appetizing taste of Van Camp's—that and the Van Camp way of cooking.
For even the finest beans may lose their flavor unless the cook knows how.
Van Camp's cook does.
All the natural and irresistible goodness of Van Camp's beans is preserved in its entirety by the Van Camp cooking—the delicate sweetness, the mealy consistency, the nutty flavor. And, Van Camp's Beans are filled to the bursting point with nutrition—meet the most exacting demands of the healthiest appetite—give vitality and strength.
Then there is the Tomato Sauce—made as only Van Camp's know how to make it—retaining all the juicy goodness of vine-ripened tomatoes—imparting the spicy zest so much appreciated by the particular palate.
And don't forget the slice of tender pork—just large enough to give the satisfying richness for which Van Camp's are famous. Test Van Camp's in this savory dish:

Entree of Beans

One quart of Van Camp's Pork and Beans with Tomato Sauce.
One-half cup sweet cream.
One cup English walnut meats, broken once. Press the beans through a colander. Moisten with the cream, beating up lightly, stirring in the walnut meats. Pile lightly into a baking dish and bake twenty minutes. Serve hot as an entree for dinner or for luncheon.

Tell the grocery man not to make any mistake when you order Van Camp's, because you'll be sorely displeased and disappointed if he doesn't bring you Van Camp's.

JAPANESE KUDZU VINE
Grows 30 to 40 Feet
The First Season Without Care
It comes from Japan, the land so productive of curios and ornamental flowers. The blossoms are large and in panicles, similar to Wistaria, and of a purple color, but much larger and in better clusters. The foliage is dense. It blooms so early, is so beautiful and grows with so little care, being perfectly hardy, that it is the

Ambassador des Planches was to resign. Should this prove true, it would promote the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, Baron Hengelmuller von Hengervar, to the deanery. He and the Baroness have long been social leaders at the capital. Their government owns the stately embassy on Connecticut Avenue and they have always maintained it in befitting style.

M. Jusserand, the French Ambassador, and his American wife are deservedly popular in Washington. He is a gifted writer, as well as a diplomatist, and they have drawn about them some of the brightest brains of the capital. He is also an expert tennis and golf player and often joins President Roosevelt, after office hours, on his tennis court back of the White House offices. The French Government is building a palatial ambassadorial residence out in the fashionable west end of the city, which is to be ready for occupancy next spring. Germany built its stately chancery on Highland Terrace some years ago. When Freiherr von Sternberg took possession of it in 1903, he refurnished it almost entirely and it contains what is probably the richest collection of ceramics in the United States, some of the finest pictures and a marvelously interesting lot of furniture. A series of evening receptions is given during the winter seasons and these are among the most brilliant social events of the year.

Brazil attained ambassadorial rank in 1905. Mr. Joaquim Nabuco, the present incumbent, was its first ambassador and is one of the ablest statesmen of his country. His father was called "The Liberator of Brazil," as it was largely through his efforts that slavery was abolished in his country, as Ambassador Nabuco proudly says, "without the loss of a drop of blood." The present embassy at Washington is located in leased property, a handsome residence on Lafayette Square; but the government will purchase in course of a little time. Russia is also in rented quarters on Farragut Square. It was thought that that country would buy the imposing Levi P. Morton house on Scott Circle, when Count Cassini moved into it last year; but nothing further has been heard of it since Baron Rosen, Russia's present envoy, took up his residence here. The Rosens have made no attempt to follow in the footsteps of their predecessors and are not noted among the large entertainers of our capital, but the Baron is an astute diplomat. It is said he is shortly to be transferred to Paris.

Japan's first ambassador, Viscount Siuzo Aoki and his most delightful German frau, are winning golden social laurels. He is recognized as one of the ablest diplomatist of the Corps and is holding his own with a remarkably steady hand during these trying days for the little Island Kingdom. The Japanese Government owns legation property on N Street, but the ambassador has leased the marble Sherman residence on Franklin Square, where a generous hospitality is dispensed. The family have with them this winter their daughter, who married the German Count von Hatzfeldt when he was connected with the German Embassy at Tokio. Both Viscountess Aoki and her daughter are accomplished women. As hostesses they are in constant demand socially, from the White House even to the "Cave Dwellers" of residential Washington.

Mexico has just sent a new ambassador, Senor Don Enrique C. Creel, who has the distinction of being the only multi-millionaire among the diplomatists. This is his first diplomatic post, but he is a man of rare ability, president of several of the leading banks in Mexico, has large mining interests and, in fact, is connected in some way with almost all the large commercial projects of his country. That he and his handsome wife expect to resume the social position which was maintained by the lamented Romeros, is evidenced by the sumptuous reception given by them shortly after their arrival.

Great Britain's new ambassador, the Honorable James Bryce, who has just arrived, is too well known to need a description here. It is interesting to note that Mrs. Bryce's maternal grandfather was Samuel Stillman Fair, of Boston, who went to England early in the last century and became the Liverpool partner of the Baring Brothers. Her maternal grandmother was a descendant of John Greene of Salem, who was associated with Roger Williams in the founding of Rhode Island. Washington is giving a royal welcome to this distinguished couple and the Connecticut Avenue Embassy is the objective point of all the social and official world.

There are a number of new faces in the ministerial contingent of the Corps this winter, Senor Cortez of Colombia and Doctor Lafinur of Uruguay being the latest. South America, in fact, was never so ably represented at Washington as at present. Bolivia has sent her ranking statesman, Senor Don Calderon, as has also Panama in Senor Don Obaldia. The plenipotentiaries from the Argentine Republic, Ecuador and Colombia are all well-known writers in their own countries. Senor Pardo is the brother of the Peruvian President and Senor Carbo of Ecuador has seen long service in the foreign office of his country. The bride of the Corps is Madame Corea, a lovely and popular Washington girl, who has just been married to the Nicaraguan minister.

The Chinese, Persian and Siamese ministers still maintain their legation, without the aid of the fair sex, as the first minister is a widower, the second has never brought his wife to this country and the latter is an eligible bachelor. All, however, are most popular in Washington society and entertain with marked generosity; but as Sir Liang, the Chinese envoy, lost his mother recently, he and all his suite are in social retirement.

Spanish Testaments for Panama

Among the great multitude of laborers at the Isthmus now engaged in digging the Canal the prevailing tongue is Spanish. Mission work among these laborers has begun at several points within the Canal Zone, and requests now come for Spanish New Testaments. To those of our readers who are interested in this "foreign missionary work at home," an opportunity is open to send the Gospel to the Canal laborers. Copies of the pocket edition Spanish New Testament, complete, with a collection of Gospel Hymns edited by Ira D. Sankey and bound up with the Gospels, can be furnished by THE CHRISTIAN HERALD at 5 cents each, or six copies for 25 cents and twenty-four for $1. These are very serviceable in Gospel work wherever the Spanish language is spoken. For the special purpose of assisting those who are interested in the progress of Christian work in the Canal Zone at Panama, THE CHRISTIAN HERALD will forward, without extra charge for postage, to missionaries at Colon, Ancon, the Culebra district, etc., all purchases of Spanish Testaments, in lots of ten and upward, at the nominal prices above named.

A SCRIPTURAL ACROSTIC

COMPILED BY IDA M. CHAPMAN

Trust in the Lord with all thine heart.
He was wounded for our transgressions.
Enter ye in at the strait gate.

Christ is all and in all.
His mercy endureth forever.
Rejoice in the Lord alway.
In my Father's house are many mansions.
Sorrow and sighing shall flee away.
The Lord Jehovah, is the Rock of Ages
If we suffer we shall also reign with him.
As thy days so shall thy strength be.
Now the just shall live by faith.

Happy is he whose hope is in the Lord.
Endure hardness as a good soldier of Jesus Christ.
Rest in the Lord.
Ask and it shall be given you.
Let all the people praise thee, O God.
Do all to the glory of God.

Lessons of Abraham's Life*

HELD in reverence by Christian and Jew and even by Mohammedan, the personality of Abraham looms bright out of that strange far-off time. The city of his birth has fallen into ruins and the places at which he made his temporary sojourns are in the hands of unbelievers, but his name is more familiar in the lands that are foremost in the world to-day than are the names of kings and conquerors. Wherever the Jew goes—and there are few lands where he does not go—he bears with him the name and fame of the founder of his race.

There is much we would like to know about the grand, strong man. We would like to know what were the conditions of life in that old Chaldean city, with its ancient civilization. We wonder how God spoke to him, whether in an audible voice as he wandered amid the solitudes, as he spoke to Moses, or in a vision of the night as he did to Solomon. How did Abraham recognize the voice as one of authority, even if he did not know anything of God? It needs a voice of some power to cause a man to quit his home and go out among strangers. Perhaps it was only a conviction of his own mind, as it is in these days when God leads a man to see his duty. God has many ways of making his will known to men. Which one he adopted in Abraham's case we cannot know; the important thing for us is that Abraham heard and obeyed.

The incidents of his life after the decisive step of coming out in faith and trust are so full of teaching that each might well be the subject of study. His relations with Lot are deeply interesting. His magnanimity in giving his nephew the choice of land; the interest he took in him afterwards, rescuing him from his captors and pleading with God for the city of his refuge. Then we have the weakness of the strong man's character in the denial of his wife in Egypt and in Gerar through fear of his life, showing that even the man strong in faith has his hours of weakness and that not even one deliverance will teach him to avoid the same sin. Then his having to expel Hagar, an act which must have wrung his heart, should teach us the suffering that inevitably follows a departure from strict morality, as many a man has proved to his cost. Finally that wonderful, pathetic incident in which Isaac, his beloved son, was stretched on the altar and the father seized the knife to slay his son. Truly a life full of lessons to the Christian.

Kidnappers in China

"A gang of fifteen robbers made a raid on a village about fifteen miles north-east of Taianfu City," says The North China Herald, "and carried off four boys, whom they held for ransom at a large sum.

"The Taian magistrate heard of it and fortunately seems to be a man of some courage. He hurried out to the place, and by threats of punishment on the heads of the neighboring villages, turned out the local guards and surrounded the hill where the robbers were holding the boys. They attempted to screen themselves behind the boys, but were completely surrounded by the soldiers and people, and some of the latter being skilled in shooting pigeons with their firelocks, crept up and took the robbers in the rear. The result was that six were killed, seven captured and two fled away wounded, one of whom has since been captured."

* Topic of the Christian Endeavor Society for March 10. Heb. 11: 8-19.

The Answer to All Paint Questions

To most people paint is more or less of a mystery and the buying and applying of it largely a matter of chance.

To simplify all paint problems the company operating the largest paint and varnish plant in the world has originated the system of "Acme Quality"—a mark that plainly and instantly designates the very best paints, varnishes, stains and enamels possible to produce.

The "Acme Quality" kind includes Everything That Goes on with a Brush—making it easy for anyone, anywhere, to secure with absolute certainty the Perfect Paint for Every Purpose, by simply looking for this

A Great Paint Book FREE

As a further help to every paint user a text-book has been prepared by practical painters on "The Selection and Use of Paints and Finishes." This book takes up in turn every kind of painting, varnishing, staining and enameling. Its explanations and directions have been worked out by men who really know and are willing that others should also know.

It is the only book of its kind ever published. Valuable to the painter, the housewife, the property owner, to everyone. Free on Request.

In buying, no matter for what use you want paint, varnish or enamel, always insist on the "Acme Quality" kind.

is the deed for one of our lots at Pleasantville Terrace, the new, popular suburb of Atlantic City; 11 minutes from the Boardwalk on the Atlantic City R. R. (Reading System). Our free book, tells about one of the most coveted pieces of the earth's surface on the globe.

"WHERE FORTUNES ARE MADE"

How land values there increase daily. How hundreds of people have made and are now making enormous fortunes. It also gives interesting facts and figures. Tells how a barren tract of land that was sold for $14 an acre is now worth $1,000 a foot. How a $10 investment made $3,000. How $400 made $750. How $700 made $50,000. How a $25 investment in Pleasantville Terrace made 125 per cent. in six months.

This book contains a lot of valuable information that will be interesting to those who are looking for a safe and profitable investment for their savings. If you can invest only a small portion of your income, from $1 to $5 a month, you should secure a copy at once. It will show you how to lay the only safe and sure foundation on which the greatest fortunes of the country have been built. The Astor, Gould, Vanderbilt, and Stephen Girard millions were made in just this way.

How the Church Debt was Paid

THERE is a story of the late Jay Gould vouched for by the New York Advertiser. Mr. Gould and another railroad magnate were delayed for a few hours in a small Western town. They started to occupy the hours by making a tour of their surroundings. They had not gone far before they heard a bell, and saw a crowd of curious people surrounding an auctioneer, who was crying: "Fifteen hundred dollars! Am I offered more?" when one of the visitors touched a tall Texan on the arm and asked him what the sale was for.

"This is a knockout for the parson," said the ranger.

"In what way?" asked the visitor.

"You see, the parson built this church, but the tin petered out, and now the wood butcher is selling the whole crowd out for his coin."

The visitor stepped up to the auctioneer and asked for the contractor, who was closing out his lien. The auctioneer pointed out the man, and the visitor approached him and asked the amount of his claim.

"Seventeen hundred dollars and costs," said he.

"What will you take in settlement?"

"I'll settle for fifteen hundred dollars and donate the balance."

The visitor taking from his pocket several bills of large denomination, gave them to the contractor and took his receipt in full, with the canceled lien. Just then an old man said: "Stranger, what are you going to do with the claim you've just bought?"

"Why do you wish to know?"

"Why," said he, "I am the steward of this church. All of the members and Sunday School scholars are in the church, with the president, elder and pastor on their knees praying God to come to our help and save the church."

The visitor said nothing, but taking the receipted bill and canceled lien that he had in his hand, he gave them to the steward and, turning toward the depot, walked rapidly back to the train. The little man was none other than Jay Gould.

70-Year-Old Man Not Too Old to Accept a Food Pointer.

"For the last 20 years," writes a Maine man, "I've been troubled with Dyspepsia and liver complaint, and have tried about every known remedy without much in the way of results until I took up the food question.

"A friend recommended Grape-Nuts food, after I had taken all sorts of medicines with only occasional, temporary relief.

"This was about nine months ago, and I began the Grape-Nuts for breakfast with cream and a little sugar. Since then I have had the food for at least one meal a day, usually for breakfast.

"Words fail to express the benefit I received from the use of Grape-Nuts. My stomach is almost entirely free from pain and my liver complaint has almost disappeared. I have gained flesh, sleep well, can eat nearly any kind of food except greasy, starchy things and am strong and healthy at the age of 70 years.

"If I can be the means of helping any poor mortal who has been troubled with dyspepsia as I have been, I am willing to answer any letter enclosing stamp." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich. Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

THE SECRET'S OUT

The secret of good bread is good flour.

GOLD MEDAL FLOUR is made clean and pure for the home baker. From the time the wheat enters the mill until it leaves it in the form of flour, it is not touched by the hand of man. The wheat is washed and scoured, currents of purified air are used constantly, and the flour is finally sifted many times through delicate silk cloth.

Questions and Answers

Letters for this department must contain name and address of the sender—not for publication, but as evidence of genuineness and good faith. Where an answer by mail is desired, ten cents in postage stamps must be forwarded by the writers, with full address.

Inquirer, Erie, Pa. 1. When God created the earth was the surface level or were there some mountains? 2. What was the height of Mt. Ararat at the time of the Flood?

1. It is reasonable to suppose that the surface was diversified by hill and valley and plain and mountain from the beginning. 2. Mt. Ararat has two peaks: Great Ararat, 16,254 feet above sea level, and Little Ararat, 12,284 feet above sea level. That is the present height. What it was at the time of the Flood none can tell.

Newton, Utica, N. Y. Can you tell me anything of the nature of the devil who, as stated in Luke 4: 2-13, was able to control Christ?

You seem to have misread the passage. Our impression from it was precisely the opposite, that the devil could not control Christ. He tried to get him into his power by crafty suggestions, but failed. His proposals were just such as would be likely to appeal to Christ at the beginning of his work. To make a test of his miraculous power, to make a spectacular exhibition of himself and to gain his end by an act of adoration, these were his suggestions. A weak man would have yielded to them, especially if they had arisen in his own mind. Jesus proved his power by resisting them.

J. C. S., Oleta, Calif. Is anything known about the population of Sodom and Gomorrah?

They were two of the five cities of the Vale of Siddim, known as "the cities of the plain." As the sites of all these cities are now buried under the southern shallows of the Dead Sea nothing is accurately known as to their size or population. Josephus, in Antiquities, book 1, chap. 9, says the cities were rich, populous and prosperous and had five kings.

Mrs. A. T., Stella, Neb. Of what country are "The Children of the Ghetto," and where do they get their name?

In the Middle Ages, the Jews' quarter of a large town, outside of which they were not permitted to live, was called the ghetto. The name is now given to that section of a large city occupied by Jews of the poorer classes. New York's ghetto is on the lower east side of the city. Read Israel Zangwill's Children of the Ghetto.

C. H. M., Flushing, N. Y. When was the first river and harbor bill for the improvement of American waterways passed?

March 3, 1823. Polk, in 1846, and Pierce, in 1854, vetoed such bills. In the last twenty years there has been a river and harbor bill passed by about every Congress.

L. A. H., Greenback, Tenn.; M. G., Chicago, Ill., and others. Do you think the statement in Hebrews 6: 5, 6 closes the door of hope to backsliders in saying it is impossible to renew certain persons to repentance?

The door of hope is never closed while life lasts. The writer of the Epistle evidently had in mind some open and outrageous denial of Christ, the circumstances of which are not on record. Perhaps it was that of some man in the early Church who, after knowing the truth and feeling its power, tasting as one who experiments, not as one who feeds, turns back to the husks of Judaism, or to the pollution of heathenism. We know, as a matter of fact, that it is more difficult to win a man who, knowing the Gospel mentally, but not experimentally, has fallen into sin, than to win an ignorant man who hears the Gospel for the first time. It does at times seem almost impossible to get such men to repent. But it is they who close the door; God does not close it. The statement in the Epistle should not distress any backslider who repents, because he proves by his repentance that in his case the passage does not apply. He repents, therefore he is not one of those whom "it is impossible to renew to repentance." The Word of God is full of invitations to the backslider to return and he is assured of pardon and restoration.

H. T., Yonkers, N. Y. Were tract societies first formed in this country or in Great Britain?

The first one was organized in England, in 1698, and was called the Society for Promoting Christian Knowledge. The first undenominational tract society in the United States was organized in Boston in 1803.

C. B., Elysian, Minn. Why is the planet Neptune hotter than Jupiter, since it was thrown from the sun first and is the smaller of the two?

Neptune is not hotter than the other planets, notwithstanding that it was thrown off from the sun first when the sun was hotter than now. The reason it is not hotter is because of its much smaller size and it has cooled faster and been longer about it. How much longer no one knows and never will while our home is here. In my opinion, there is not a shadow of reason for supposing that it is hotter when its heat from the sun is far less than that of the nearer planets.

Marathon, N. Y. LEWIS SWIFT.

Reader, Loup City, Neb., writes:

I have been much interested in reading, "Why I Left the Pastorate," in your issue of February 6th. Dr Peters says: "For man-made creeds I have no more use than for last year's almanac." Alexander Campbell sought to unite the factions of professing Christians, by repudiating creeds and making the Bible alone the expression of our faith and belief. Yet the fact is self-evident that it is impossible to convey the Gospel message except by using definite and intelligible language adapted to the conditions of our day and the needs of the hearer. "For we know in part and we prophesy in part."

It is not given to any of us to see but a bit of the pattern, and no one's bit is just the same as another's bit; yet to each is given enough to enable him to recognize the pattern. . . . Why, then, should an individual's membership in the Methodist Church be a barrier to his membership in the Presbyterian Church? Each organization regards the members of the other as fellow Christians. That lifting the embargo from off their individual members by the divided Christian churches would in itself prove a panacea for the ills that hinder, is more than could be hoped for. The evil is too deeply rooted. But with each and all of us it would go far towards taking the beam out of our own eyes; and it is certainly wise to work along the line of least resistance.

J. W. P., Jaffa, Ont., Can. How did Cain's life end?

The facts connected with the close of his life are not recorded in Scripture. Josephus says that after settling in his land of exile, he had children and became rich and powerful, but corrupt and violent and "a great leader of men in wicked courses."

Reader, Detroit, Mich. When and where was Eli Whitney, the inventor of the cotton-gin for separating seed cotton, born?

He was born in Westborough, Mass., December 8, 1765.

G. E. D., Dunn's Station, Pa. 1. What is the exact date of the settlement of Santa Fe? 2. Is California a land of earthquakes? 3. Are the Chinese and Japanese still coming into the United States?

1. Santa Fe was founded in 1605, under the name of La Ciudad Real de la Santa Fe de San Francisco. 2. Part of the State, especially near San Francisco, has earth tremors quite frequently, but they ordinarily cause no damage. The San Francisco quake exceeded any other t had occurred. In a large portion of State the earth's crust is as firm as in Eastern States. 3. The Chinese are c ing in very small numbers, only merch and students and others of equal rank ing admitted. Laborers are not allo entrance. The Japanese have been c ing to the Pacific States in large numb There are many in Hawaii. The quest of their coming is before Congress.

B. M., Ansonia, Conn. Will you please inform how Good Friday is determined, or wh does not always fall on the same date?

After much contention in the ea Church about the date, the Council of Ni in 325 A. D., decided that Easter D should, throughout the Christian world, cur upon the Sunday following the 1 day of the calendar moon, which happ upon or next after March 21. There are several such books, but t early Christian Church councils decided exclude them with many others from t canon of Scripture, because their authori was more than doubtful. Pay-Day on the Panama Canal PAY-DAY on the Panama Canal is the "day of days," as it is most everywhere, for the thousands of working men who are digging and blasting away for the world's commerce through the Isthmus. Besides the American engineers and foremen, there are represented in the line that files up to that august personage, the paymaster, many races and all shades of complexion, from the sable hue of the African to the fair skin and golden hair of the Swede. The question of laborers—where to get them and how to take care of them—has been one of the greatest problems of the gigantic undertaking. That so few lives have been sacrificed in that tropical climate speaks volumes for the efficiency of the officials in charge.

IN THE LAND OF THE "BIG HATS"

A Correspondent Tells of the Singular Headgear of the Koreans

The Largest Midweek Prayer-Meeting in the World

N Korea, the big hats of the Pyeng Yang women are famous. They are made of straw or reeds, undecorated, and shaped like a dredging op. Each hat would hold at least a bhel and a-half of grain. It is too big to take indoors, into the church or the hne, and so is left outside at the door. When worn it not only covers the head, b it also conceals the face and the upper third of the body.

he men all wear their hats in church. And such hats! The ordinary headgear o Korean man is a black horsehair creation, flat of brim, and with a "stovepipe" ihe centre to protect his topknot, which is the Korean badge of manhood. This b is fastened under the chin wh ribbons. Underneath it is ften another horsehair hat, r sembling somewhat the f nework of an elderly wom- s bonnet. Still below this i a black gauze band, holding t hair in place, and tight ough, it would seem, to p all circulation of blood. r is this the whole extent masculine headgear. If a n is in mourning, he wears a huge "mourner's" hat, al- st as big as that of the eng Yang woman. If he is gaged to be married—which i the case of the non-Chris- n community may be as early ten or twelve years—he ars a light brown or yellow rsehair hat.

A few men, on the night on ich I write, as it threatened snow, wore a waterproof er their precious stovepipe, sort of oil-paper umbrella, ich every Korean gentleman ries about with him.

If it is true, as has been so en said, that the midweek yer-meeting is the gauge a church's spiritual life, n the record for vitality is ld by a body of believers in s remote city of Pyeng ng, in Northern Korea, ose regular Wednesday night service ranges in attendance from 700 to 1,300 rsons. The night I visited it more than 1,200 were present. For more reasons an mere size this service is noteworthy. Nevertheless, the extraordinary magnide of this midweek devotional gathering is worth dwelling upon. These hundreds people do not assemble in expectation of any noveltv; there are no "features" this meeting, and no programme; it is simply a coming together of Christians for praise and prayer and mutual exhortation. Attendance, moreover, is not without difficulty. Korean streets are unlighted at night, and everybody goes afoot, usually carrying a tiny paper lantern, shaped like a disk. On the occasion of my visit to Pyeng Yang it was bitterly cold, yet those 1,200 persons had left warm homes to gather in the scarcely-heated church. Simply as a spectacle, the occasion would be considered one of extraordinary interest by a Westerner. The church edifice, which was built by the Koreans with money and labor given entirely by the church members, would not be considered very large in America. It is shaped like a letter L, the pulpit being at the angle, where a partition divides one arm from the other. To the left of the partition sat the women and to the right the men. Unlike most religious gatherings in Christian lands, there were more men than women present, probably a third more, and the men's side was so crowded that the small boys spilled over into the women's department by the score, while others swarmed on the platform, about the leader's feet.

A Korean Farmhouse

In Korea, the whole family goes to church, and during the midweek service several mothers, carrying their babies in their bosoms beneath their dress, could be seen walking to and fro at the rear of the room to keep the little ones from being fretful. So the age of the attendants upon this meeting ranged from early infancy to old age; one little old woman I noticed, bent nearly double with years, whose wrinkled and furrowed face and scarcely open eyes, yet reflected the radiance of an inner light.

There are no pews, chairs, or benches in the church. The congregation sat cross-legged on the floor, and crowded close together. This accounts for the extraordinary seating capacity of the Korean churches; there is no waste space. All the women, and nearly all the men, were dressed in white. The children were dressed in bright garments; red, yellow and green being favorite colors. The women sat with uncovered faces and bared heads, although on the streets they generally wear a cloak

A Sermon by
Rev. Hugh Black, D.D.*

Sneering Hearers

TEXT: EZEKIEL 20:49

"Then said I, Ah Lord God! they say of me, Doth he not speak parables?"

IN spite of the first partial exile, in which Ezekiel shared, by which the king and nobles and natural leaders of the Jews were deported to Babylon, the great religious lessons which the prophets sought to teach the people were rejected. Both the exiles, and those left at home, buoyed themselves up with the vain thought that everything would turn out all right; for was not Jerusalem, the Holy City, still remaining, and were not the tokens of their old nationality still left to them? Ezekiel, who for years had preached the inevitable destruction of Jerusalem and the complete fall and exile of Judah, was disbelieved and despised. He was only an irreconcilable croaker.

A Vain Hope

Now, when at last under the influence of their shallow optimism Judah again rebelled, Nebuchadnezzar set the armed might of his empire against the rebels. The people still hoped that something would happen to break the chains which bound hapless Judah, and make her once more a free, independent nation. Ezekiel repeated the judgment of doom, and we can imagine something of the impatience and anger with which he was met by the excited people. When the vision came to him of the complete destruction as of a forest on fire, the terrible conflagration devouring even every green tree, a flaming flame that shall not be quenched, he knew that nobody would believe him, and that they would say that it was just another effort of the literary artist in him to put his croaking in a new and startling form.

He seems to have hesitated to express his vision in the exact manner it came to him. He feels it almost useless to convince them that he spoke the truth of God. Men will pass by his warning with a sneer about himself. He knew they would discount his words, and call it only another trick of his old manner.

One of the burdens of every original teacher and thinker and artist, is the feeling that the truth he has to declare seems so dependent on the limitations of his particular mental equipment. He can only utter his message according to the bent of his own individuality. He has his own manner of speech, his own way of expressing himself. And the fear constantly strikes him that his manner may obscure the truth, and men will pass by the reality and think of it as only another evidence of what they call his mannerism. Ezekiel seems to have felt this fear. He knows that his way of speaking is in figures, similitudes, parables. and he is fully conscious of the popular objection which his manner created. And when this appalling vision of the destruction of Jerusalem came to him, he is well aware that the people will discount what he has to say, and will repeat the parrot-cry that it is only another of his strange literary figures.

Warning Derided

It is to him a heavy burden that his own peculiarities of mind and method should seem to stand in the way of his message being received. With a cry of anguish, he seems to ask to be relieved from the necessity of speaking; but the prophetic fire is in his bones also, and will not let him be silent. "Then said I, Ah Lord God! they say of me, Is he not a speaker of parables?"

Of course the suggestion in the taunt, which gives it its sting, is that his words are only figures of speech, without any reality behind them. The pain of the thought to the prophet is that the people will make the form of his words an excuse for not really listening. The truth he has to declare is unpleasant to them, and they pretend they do not understand and ride away on a sneer from even considering them. With cheap sarcasm, they shelter behind the assumed difficulty of the words and pretend they do not understand.

It is a popular device, but never so popular as in dealing with matters of religion, and the keenest pain that can come to a preacher is the knowledge that there are some who escape the divine appeal because of some fault or insufficiency in him, that there are some who are offended by his manner of presenting the truth; some even have excuse for despising the very water of life because of the earthen vessel that brings it.

The experience is not confined to religious teachers. It is the fate of every interpreter of truth, whatever be the medium in which he works; and especially is it the fate of every original thinker. "We mistake men's diseases," says Richard Baxter, "when we think there needeth nothing to cure them of their errors but the evidence of truth. Alas, there are many distempers of mind to be removed before they receive that evidence." And one of these distempers certainly is making so much of the personal equation of the man who teaches. Let a man paint much, or write much, or speak much, and people think more of his manner than of what he has to reveal. Their criticisms are almost altogether of his methods; and many are offended because they do not like his methods.

Wagner, who at least had the zeal of an Apostle, had to hear of much of his work dismissed as Wagnerian. Reams and reams have been filled with idle talk about Browning's style. Anything that Carlyle said was discounted as only Carlylesque. The charlatan in all the arts is, of course, vain of such notice, and strives by all dodges to create outre effects to command such attention; but the man with even a spark of is sick at heart that it should ever be supposed that he had worked for that, and sick at heart that men should never get past his method of utterance to the living truth he has striven to utter. But in religion, more than in all other regions, is this offense disastrous; for the utterance of religious truth asks not for admiration, or approval, or even intellectual agreement, but spiritual assent, the thrill of soul, which recognizes the truth and bends to its dominion. And the offense here is greatest, because in the very nature of the case, unless the truth is spiritually discerned, it cannot but appear as a parable, a similitude of words without reality behind it. If it is not welcomed by the very intuition of the soul that hears, if it does not make its appeal directly as truth, it can have no real meaning, and can be dismissed as idle talk.

Religious truth is not like mathematical propositions, which, if they are accepted at all, must be accepted in the same way. If you you accept the definition of a straight line, a straight line must be the same thing practically to all of you, however you may prefer to define it. Two and two are four if you accept that, are always four, and in the same way to all of you. But spiritual truth is a matter of spiritual interpretation to each soul. The discernment of it is a spiritual thing. Its fulness can only be hinted at by any human words, and all who do not see it and accept it can look on these words only as parables.

Even apart from revealed truth this is so in the interpretation of anything that exists. The same thing will appeal differently to different people, according to capacity, understanding, experience. One may look on a flower with the eye of a florist, another with the eye of a market-gardener, another of a botanist, another of an artist. Buttercups and daisies may be a nuisance to a farmer and a delight to a child. Roses may be considered from the commercial standpoint, or the æsthetic. As with Wordsworth's "Peter Bell,"

> In vain through every changeful year
> Did Nature lead him as before:
> A primrose by the river's brim
> A yellow primrose was to him,
> And it was nothing more.

To speak of it in any other way would be to speak in parables, meaningless.

If this is so in such things, how much more is the difficulty of finding a common denominator when we speak of the unseen and eternal. Every man who has tried to make plain the things of God knows that his way of speaking will be an offense to some, who will meet his words with blank unintelligence, or with complete misunderstanding, or with a jest of indifference; and all such can enter somewhat into the pain of Ezekiel, when he cried, "Ah Lord God! they say of me, Is he not a speaker of parables?"

Our Lord warned his disciples of this and of the indifference with which the world would receive message. "Unto you," he said to the inner circl is given to know the mystery of the kingdom of but unto them that are without all these things are in parables." Religion can only be a matter of i apprehension, moral adjustment to the truth, spi susceptibility to the religious impression. The di tion between men, involved in our Lord's saying, an arbitrary one, but an essential one, dependent state of the heart. This itself is an eternal tr religion, that it is a question of the heart, a questi holy affections. Christ did not arbitrarily dete that there should be some that were without, who words only mystified.

Measured by the Truth

The distinction is a fact of life in all regions, lectual and moral, as well as spiritual. His words only the occasion which tested men and divided into the two classes. We speak of judging truth also truth is judging us. By hidden alchemy it covers whether we are in sympathy with it, whethe life is in unison with it. We are not the standa truth by which it is measured. Truth is its own sta and measures us. It is true that we have to Christ: but far truer is it that Christ is judging us attitude to him is judging us. When Christ spo the effect of his parables, he meant that they acte sieves sifting out the different kinds of hearers b influence produced on them. Susceptible minds rec the impression. Childlike hearts opened to let hi Receptive souls felt his powerful appeal, and qui in restless eagerness till they found rest in him. found in him the way, the truth, the life. Others of him, as their fathers said of the prophets before "Is he not a speaker of parables?"

When the verities of the faith appear to yo mysteries, when the unseen makes no appeal to when spiritual truth sounds like an idle tale, whe religion seems like playing with words, when God the human soul, the divine Christ and the life ete appear to you but figures of speech, with no realit which they stand, no passion of truth which the w half conceal but also half reveal, if in Gospel Epistle, in the burning lips and gleaming eyes of you do not feel Christ's imperious claims, if you d see his transcendent beauty, if you do not hear hi sistent appeal, what can we say, but that, seeing see and do not perceive, and hearing you hear do not understand?

Deaf Ears Unstopped

All spiritual truth must appear as parables to all do not know the language, to all who cannot recog the accents of truth even in forms that sound hars uncomely to them. The principle of spiritual i pretation is ever the same—by spiritual discern "Know ye not this parable? And how will ye k all parables?" asked our Lord. The Christian posi is not reached by an intellectual process. It come the simple, humble, responsive heart. To know gives at least the capacity to recognize the things of

If you feel like an outsider in the courts of the L if in the presence of Jesus you feel that you have relationship to him, if at the mention of religious t you feel that you are among those that are with who care not for these things, or at least understand these things, do not ride away from the appeal t cheap sarcasm. Say not, "Is he not a speaker of p bles?" as if that absolved you from further con about it all. Turn to Christ with a heart-pang your soul should be so seared and hardened. Benc Christ humbly, and he will unstop the deaf ears and seal the blind eyes and give you a heart to understa for he will take you into the holy of holies, into very presence-chamber of the king, and reveal Father to you, homeless, fatherless child of his. Ch is his own evidence. He brings conviction with h And when he comes the music of his words will to chords of infinite harmony in your heart. And unto y it will be given to know the mystery of the Kingdom God and no longer in parables.

SUN-SPOTS AND EARTHQUAKES

ECENT earthquakes and sun-spots have caused a move of interest among all classes of people in the new science of seismology, or earthquakes, and in astronomy. Many men, of great scientific knowledge, believe that a connection between the disturbances on the earth and the spots that have appeared on the surface of the sun may be proved from the results of investigations now being carried on.

...e Horizontal Pendulum

When the papers announced late last month that the orb, on which we are dependent for warmth, light, sunstrokes and the growth of the various good things that sprout in the spring, had spotted its round face, hundreds of amateur astronomers took long squints through home-smoked ...s at the interesting phenomena, and then wore ...es while they got over what they had learned. ...youngster who smoked the whole drawing-room ...w with burning paper and left the French plate ...ated with wide cracks, was in a short time a vic... his thirst for knowledge, as have been all men, ...g or old, who are unfortunate to be in advance of ...time. Those who had "real" glasses fitted for the ...se saw, down on the lower right-hand side of the ... black cluster of spots one-eighth the diameter of ... hole circle. The spot or spots was estimated to ...8,000 miles long, and to have an area of 3,540,000 ... miles. These spots recur practically every eleven ...ne-tenth years.

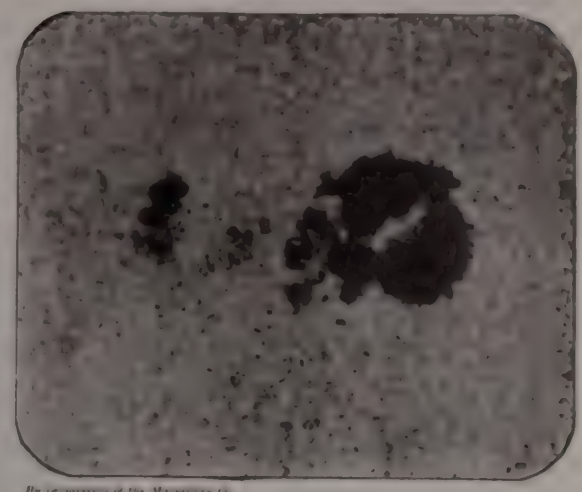
...me scientists thought that the spots were due to ...ical disturbances on the earth, and that their ap...nce was connected in some way with the aurora ...alis. At the time the spots became distinctly ...le there were great electrical storms in South ...rica. Towns in Chili were shaken by an earth...ke, and ships near Punta Arenas were sunk. Two ...noes in the Andes woke up suddenly and belched ... great masses of sable smoke.

...ce the disasters at San Francisco, in South America, Italy and Kingston, the importance of having a wider knowledge of the cause of earthquakes and of ways in which their coming may be foretold, has been impressed on the minds of all people living in a country where the earth's crust endeavors to shake up the cities that have settled upon its back.

Great Britain, although free from dangerous tremors, is doing much toward collecting accurate data on the subject. This is due to the enterprise and enthusiasm of Professor John Milne, F.R.S., director of the seismological station at Shide, in the Isle of Wight.

For over twenty years Mr. Milne held the chair of mining and geology in the Imperial College of Engineering in Tokio, Japan. While there he became intensely interested in the study of Japanese volcanoes and earthquakes. Probably no place in the world offers such opportunities for the study of the latter phenomena. The people there become so accustomed to the almost daily earth tremors that they scarcely raise their eyes when a screen suddenly becomes endowed with the power of movement and totters about in its corner, or the sliding panels shake and rattle in their sockets and the gaily-painted lanterns bob violently as if struck by a heavy breeze. Japanese houses are built low and are admirably fitted to withstand the frequent earthquake shocks, consequently we hear of no such disasters there as occur in our own country and in other places where they are of infrequent occurrence.

As an aid to the study of this new science of seismology, Professor Milne invented the Milne horizontal pendulum seismograph, an instrument that is now used at all well equipped stations. Returning from Japan, he devoted all of his time to the new study. A committee of the British Association aided Mr. Milne. Prof. Luigi Palozzo, of the University of Rome, is President of the new International Seismological Association.



Sun-Spots as Seen Through a Telescope

The delicate instruments now in use record hundreds of earthquakes that are never felt by man. Often the observer at the machine, when all seems quiet and nature at rest, will suddenly see the pendulum vibrate and the little needle trace in red ink a path up and down and across the paper, showing the time and action of one of "the unfelt breathings of the earth." Perhaps in a day or two the cable will flash to Europe and America a story of the havoc wrought in the distant Himalayas or in the islands of the sea. Perhaps no word ever comes to tell where the shock occurred, the sole witness being the blood-red streak across the white paper at the earthquake station.

Although only two-score years of ..., he has seen this work grow from nothing to its ...ent proportions. He has been pastor, jointly with ...'. S. A. Moffett, D.D., of "the big church" (as ... mother congregation is called) from the very first. ... has baptized hundreds if not thousands of heathen ...eans. (One of his associates, Rev. C. E. Kearns, ... year baptized eleven hundred persons.) The "big church," which has a membership of twelve hundred, has swarmed three times within four years, and of these new congregations, the smallest numbers two hundred and fifty and the largest six hundred and fifty.

The people have grown from the worship of evil spirits to a New Testament plane of life and experience. I never heard of a church maintaining a higher standard of membership than this one, and the other Korean churches. It regularly and vigorously enforces its discipline. The strictest morality, total abstinence, the possession of only one wife, a knowledge of the Scriptures, systematic giving, and personal evangelistic work, are all required of church members. The Koreans are great smokers, yet these Pyeng Yang Christians have voluntarily established an anti-tobacco society, and with the money saved they maintain two colporteurs. A book-store, reading-room, public bath, day schools, a school for the blind (the first in the land) and the beginnings of an insane asylum (likewise the first in Korea), are all maintained by these whole-hearted disciples.

Missionary Lee is pastor of the "big church," his associate, Dr. Moffett, being home on furlough. In Korea to-day the missionary has no time for evangelistic work or for pioneer effort; he is kept busy trying to keep up with the growth of the church through self-propagation. Then Missionary Lee has charge of an industrial school, where students at the Union Methodist and Presbyterian College support themselves and learn a trade at the same time. Having been a practical mechanic himself, Mr. Lee runs this school on workmanlike lines. Incidentally, he has some teaching responsibilities in the Theological Seminary, which is to give Korea, next fall, its first crop of preachers.

He is also the moving spirit in the missionary social life of Pyeng Yang, holding the two-score missionaries to the duty of occasional relaxation. The Pyeng Yang community is a real brotherhood, made up of Methodists and Presbyterians, working together as one. The former also have churches and prayer-meetings in and about Pyeng Yang worthy to be classed with the record-breaking one which I have cited.

These superb missionaries are worthy of their flock. And, carefully weighing my words, I am prepared to express the opinion that the life of these Korean Christians probably comes nearer to that of the Apostolic Church than anything else contemporaneous known at present to Christendom. Religion is all in all to them. Less than a generation distant from rank heathendom, they yet display a marvelous genius for Christianity. The essence of the Gospel seems to appeal to them at once. In devotion to Jesus and his disciples, they are like little children. In simplicity and guilelessness and affection, they instantly win one's heart. The tie of a common faith means more to them than any other tie. At the close of the prayer-meeting metioned, the men by dozens crowded upon the platform, smiling and eager to greet a fellow-Christian from afar. They do not shake hands, as is the manner of Anglo-Saxons; instead, they grasp one by the arm or hand or lay their hand affectionately upon one's shoulder. Always their salutation is "Peace."

When I started for Seoul before daylight the next morning, I found that, in addition to the two missionaries who had escorted me to the train, there were a dozen of the men from the church, who had walked three miles through the darkness and the cold, in order to send on his journey with their benediction one whom they had met for the first time only a few hours before. The shining faces and oft-repeated salutation of "Peace" of these fellow Christians in queer hats and flowing robes abides as a precious memory, and I am confident to believe, as a leading Korean statesman assured me, that the Korean church is the only hope and salvation of the imperiled Korean nation.

SETTLING THE JAPANESE QUESTION

THROUGH the untiring personal efforts of President Roosevelt the deadlock between the National Government and the School Board of San Francisco has been broken, and the Japanese school question is in a fair way to a satisfactory solution. The situation was one that unless an understanding had been soon reached there would have arisen grave international complications, owing to the sensitiveness of the Japanese people whenever the suggestion is made that they be classed with the Chinese and Koreans instead of with the people of European nations. A full account of the origin of the trouble in San Francisco, where the Japanese scholars in the public schools were ordered to attend the school set apart for the children of Asiatic parents, and also of the test case brought by the United States authorities, appeared in THE CHRISTIAN HERALD of January 9. The new arrangement made by the United States authorities and the School Board has one feature that will doubtless meet with some opposition from the Japanese, and which was little expected by them when they made their first protest against the action of the board. Although Japanese children of the same school age as the American children will be admitted on an equal footing in the schools of San Francisco, it has been enacted by Congress that all Japanese who come to this country hereafter must have passports signed by officials in Japan.

The Japanese coolie class of laborers, to whom so much objection is made by the people of the Pacific coast States, will be practically excluded from the United States in the future by the new passport regulation. Those already here may remain.

The President, after fruitless negotiations by mail and telegraph, invited Mayor Schmitz and the entire School Board of San Francisco to come to Washington for consultation. The Californians came as requested, and for about a week were in almost daily consultation with the President and Secretary Root at the White House. President Roosevelt made many suggestions looking toward a compromise, but no decision was reached until the fifteenth of last month.

The Mayor and the board would not rescind the order for the segregation of the Japanese from the American pupils, but they let it be understood that any Japanese will be admitted to the white schools under the same conditions that must be met by white pupils who a for admission. Thus, any Japanese u fourteen years may enter any prima grammar school. White children ar permitted to enter a grammar school he has reached the age of fourteen. will be remembered that the main o tion was against allowing young men the other side of the Pacific to at schools in which the other scholars but children. By applying the equal rule, the cause of the complaint is moved. Japanese of fifteen years of are permitted to become regular stud in the high school, if they pass a satis tory examination. The delegation f California accepted the compromise, the idea that Congress would pass a s factory amendment to the immigra laws governing the admission of coo reference to which has been previo made in this article.

The clause in regard to the passp for all Japanese who desire to enter territorial limits of the United St was submitted, it is understood, to Japanese Government at Tokio, and reported to be satisfactory. The cla will be inserted in the new treaty tha now being made between Japan America.

Our Government promised the C fornia delegation that the legal proce ings recently instituted in San Franci would be at once dropped.

Three days after the announcement made that a satisfactory basis for set ment had been found, Congress pas the passport regulation so much desi by the representatives from the Pac coast.

HOW A WORK OF FAITH GREW

"WHAT can I do to make my lifecount for something, as God intended it should?" This was the question some years ago in the mind of Dr. Thomas Spees Carrington, a young Christian physician with a thriving city practice. A hint of the answer came a few months later, when he, his wife and little daughter left their home, country and all their opportunities, to go to Turkey to aid there in the work of the American Board of Foreign Missions.

Turkey is a land of beauty and beneficent climate, but the great masses of its over twenty million inhabitants are, alas, ignorant of even the simplest sanitary knowledge, and as a consequence of which it is the astounding fact that fifty per cent. of the babies die, while many of the rest grow into blind or crippled adults.

Dr. Carrington entered zealously into his work in Marsovan, an interior city about six hundred miles east of Constantinople, where he was stationed in connection with Anatolia College. The pitiable condition of the people touched his heart deeply. Little children with tuberculosis of the bones, lungs, or stomach, with eye diseases, with distorted limbs, with deformities of every kind; mothers diseased and suffering; old and young in all stages of filth and misery, these were everyday sights. There was much to be done.

With his few hundred dollars Dr. Carrington hired a little four-room house, improvised sterilizers out of two old kerosene cans, borrowed a castaway table for operating upon, bought, invented and made other equipments necessary, and in due time announced himself as ready for patients. A few years passed, during which he worked night and day for the throngs that came. He saved, sacrificed, prayed and believed, until, with the help and helpers God had sent him, in place of the little old house in which he began, there rose a noble hospital, with three fine buildings and a training school for nurses besides.

To the other Christian hearts this magnificent work did not go unheeded. In the soul of a young native woman there was a breaking in of kindred light that melted away the walls of ignorance and predjudice. Prompted by sympathy, she first offered to read to the convalescents in the hospital; then, the scheme of helping the sufferers filling her mind, she resolved to take her stand in the face of inherited custom and belief. She went to Dr. Carrington and said simply, "I have made up my mind to be a nurse and will work for a year without pay."

Thus was Luceper, the first nurse ever trained in Turkey, started on her gracious ministry. The hospital in Marsovan grew in fame and usefulness and continued to serve the increasing throngs of pitiful sufferers. The fame of the man who could give a "sleeping medicine and cut out pain" spread far into the hills and valleys of Mesopotamia. One poor, afflicted woman walked the thirty days' journey from her home to the hospital. She had no money or means of repaying the service, but she had faith. In due time she went away rejoicing. Another time came a man who had been a brigand chieftain. His diseased foot needed amputation. He, too, was poor. A rosary of ninety-nine beads was the sum of his possessions. During convalescence some one gave him a Bible, in which he became so greatly interested he would scarcely allow it out of his sight. Upon his recovery, he insisted on presenting his precious rosary to the doctor.

One day the doctor was riding with a party of friends through a village, when the children of the street began to throw stones. Suddenly a shrill, childish voice cried out, "Oh, that is the good man who cured little Achmet! That is the man who cured little Achmet!" The shower of stones ceased and the doctor and his party were besieged to come and see Achmet and his father and mother.

A little girl sufferer, an outcast, homeless and ill, was taken into the hospital. After her recovery she was placed with a Christian family, but only a few days elapsed until, with tears and entreaties, she begged to be brought back to the hospital to help the sick people. There she remained for four years, assisting in the care of little invalids in the children's ward.

During seven years' continuous labor at Marsovan, thousands of patients were treated by Dr. Carrington and hundreds of operations performed. He decided that the work needed a training school for native nurses in Constantinople, from which nurses could be sent into the homes of poor families not only to help them through sickness, but to teach them how to make surroundings sanitary and wholesome. He visited the United States and told the story of Turkey's crying need.

* * *

After months of zealous labor, the day came when The American Hospital and Training School for Nurses in Constantinople was duly incorporated. Messrs. Brown & Co., bankers, 59 Wall Street, New York, were appointed as fiscal agents to receive all donations. He returned to Constantinople and secured a suitable house to serve as a temporary hospital. It was remodeled, repaired and refitted and on September 1, 1906, was to be formally opened. Early in the morning of August 29th it was completely destroyed by fire. Everything had been swept away almost in the twinkling of an eye!

Undaunted by this disaster, Dr. Carrington began to plan anew. He came again to this country to enlist friends for the work, which he confidently hopes to establish even on a better basis than before. He hopes to raise $15,000 to b the land for a site.

"So strong is my faith that I expect he says, "and every day receive show of blessing. I believe God is back everything, even the fire. His work c never fail." HELEN VAN-ANDERSON.

Carrying the Caskets into Swedish Hall

Commander Evangeline Booth

The Funeral Procession up Fifth Avenue

THEIR DEAD COMRADES HONORED

Salvation Army Services at the Funeral of the "Larchmont" Victims

PRECEDED by the draped flags of the Union, the Salvation Army and of Sweden, a solemn procession of Salvationists, bearing their dead, passed down the centre aisle of Carnegie Hall, New York City on the afternoon of Sunday, February 17th.

Ten of the Army's most valued workers in the Eastern Scandinavian Province—"the flower of the flock"—met their death when the Sound steamer Larchmont went down off Block Island on the night of the 11th of February, all but nineteen of the more than one hundred and fifty persons on board being lost. But three of the ten bodies of the dead Army officers had been recovered—those of Captain (Miss) Elin Lambert, Lieutenant John Molin and Cadet John Cedarblom. Their caskets, draped in the Stars and Stripes and the Army colors, were set down before the flower-bordered platform, which was occupied by the closely-seated ranks of those who had been their comrades, while the sombre notes of a funeral march, rendered by the National Staff Band, ruled the requiem of the dead.

More than 5,000 people, of every rank in life, crowded the large hall. The memorial services were conducted by Commander Evangeline Booth, the head of the Army in the United States, and were of intense and high mournful interest. Brigadier Nelson, in charge of the Eastern Scandinavian work, his voice broken and close with repressed emotion, gave a personal sketch of each of his dead comrades, as he had known them in the springtime of their youth. Each "Warrior of the Cross" lived again, as their leader related incident after incident of their self-sacrifice and devotion to the cause they loved so well.

Captain Lambert, turned from her mother's door because she joined the Army, had for years rejoiced in being able to send back to the now widowed mother in the old country the major portion of her earnings. Cadet Emma Becklund, a sunny-faced girl of seventeen years, was one of a family of twelve Salvationists living in Worcester, Mass. She was to have been married to Captain Richard Swan, but, hand clasped in hand, they went together to that land where there is neither marrying nor giving in marriage. Captains Aurora Lifvendahl and Anna Runeborg died as they had lived—together. Comrades in Sweden, they went together to Scotland under Army orders. From there they came to America, working together with great effect among their own people in New England. Of Lieutenant John Molin, his leader tenderly said: "He was to have been promoted at the Congress toward which he was journeying, but the great Commander-in-Chief has promoted him to heaven instead." And so the role of honor was called, while upon the platform sat the bowed figure of Captain Anna Oden's stricken mother, with the two brothers of another of the dead officers.

Several speakers paid tribute to the dead, after which the Swedish songsters, clad in deep crimson, with the white scarf of mourning crossing their breasts, sang the "Homeland" with exquisite effect.

Miss Booth then told the story of the Larchmont disaster, moving the entire audience to tears. She said in part: "The story of our promoted warriors, which we learn from the survivors of the Larchmont tragedy, is one which must convince the most sceptical that neither life nor death has power to turn us from our purpose. Ten more names are enrolled upon our glorious record of comrades who have died at their post.

"Not only has a great gap been made in our ranks by the swift departure of ten of the best and highest and bravest and dearest warriors of our ranks, but a great gap is made in our hearts, for we of the Salvation Army love each other well and truly. When I learned of the manner of their passing, I said, 'Not lost, but saved! saved! saved!' Their robes were made white in the blood of the Lamb, and even the blackness of that midnight terror could not hide their glistening. In that storm they were calm. Amid the shrieks and curses and pleadings on every hand, they sought to give consolation and help.

"We learn that those young girls went to the distracted passengers, seeking to persuade them to lay their sins down at the feet of Jesus. When the crash came our Army lads and lasses stood alone, with their feet upon a Rock. As the engines hissed and steamed and stopped, and the bitter wind blew out their fair hair and their little blue uniforms, seven frail girls sent forth an immortal challenge, not only across the bitter, death-stricken waters, but across the seas of all time, 'O death, where is thy sting; O grave, where is thy victory.'

"My comrades, these who are gone have shown the whole world not only how a Salvationist can live, but how a Salvationist can die. We will bind up our wounds and wipe our eyes, for what is dark now will be made clear when we see His face."

A movement is already on foot looking toward the erection of a monument to the victims of the Larchmont catastrophe in the Salvation Army plot at Kensico Cemetery, New York.

SUBWAY TOILERS HEAR THE GOSPEL

THERE are now nineteen shop meetings being regularly conducted in shops by the Twenty-third Street and West Side Branches of the Y. M. C. A. in New York City. These meetings have been in progress for over fifteen months. The places at which they are held include pump manufactories, bronze foundries, iron works, elevator works, paint works, piano factories, several stations of the Subway, bakeries, factories, etc. The attendance ranges from forty in the smaller shops to one hundred in the larger ones.

In these gatherings, the usual programme is to have some music (such as violin, musical bells, vocal solos, etc.) and a brief address on some topic connected with religion or the Bible. Occasionally health talks are given. Dr. Milton Wallace is giving a series of talks on "Consumption as a Preventable and Curable Disease," visiting each shop but once only, and distributing circulars.

Another feature of the Y. M. C. A. work is having a meeting once a month for the men who speak at these noon meetings, for discussion of shop methods and principles of work. Much help has been received from some of the pastors of churches in the vicinity.

A Gospel Meeting Among Workers in the Subway, New York

Special meetings are now held for Italian workers in the piano factories. At such meetings some worker translates for the audience the words of the speaker.

Secretary Powlison, of the Y. M. C. A. West Side Branch, says of these meetings: "They are in no sense sectarian—they are not conducted with any idea of inducing the men to join any specific organization. If the men want us to come, we are glad to come; if they don't want us, we have no wish to force ourselves on them. Our sole object is to bring to men who otherwise might not search for it the idea of a larger life—of ethics, of the Kingdom of God—so presented as to give no religious offense to any one. We depend for our success on the ability of our speakers, and we send the best we have, for the working men, next to college men, make the most difficult of audiences. We give them speakers who have ideas—Alexander Irvine, himself formerly a working man; the Rev. George L. McNutt, the 'dinner-pail man'; the Rev. William Wilkinson, the Wall Street preacher. These speakers know their men, and hold their interest.

Smoot Triumphant

BY a vote of 42 to 28, the United States Senate has rejected the resolution to unseat Reed Smoot, the Mormon Senator.

This result had been foreseen for many months past. When the element of "political expediency" made itself plainly felt in the Smoot case last fall, it was a foregone conclusion that the crusade of the women and the will of the majority of the Committee would be defeated by the enforcement of the two-thirds rule.

Not since American women began to be a factor in public affairs, has any woman's campaign been so vigorously and picturesquely conducted as this. State after State was fired with enthusiasm, and the women, like gallant veterans, threw their pickets and their advance guards even into the heart of Mormondom itself—into its very citadel. It was a campaign of earnest work, brilliant speeches and lofty sentiment. Not the least remarkable feature of it was the great petition of a million American women to the Senate, praying for the exclusion of the Mormon member on what the women believed to be sound, logical and just grounds. They had implicit confidence in the wisdom and patriotism of the Senate, and believed that the plea of the mothers and daughters of the nation would not pass unheeded.

Well—they have been disappointed. They misjudged the Senate. They credited it with ideal qualities, and they possibly overrated the weight of the moral argument in politics. But the practical lessons learned in the campaign are valuable ones, and should not be forgotten.

We sympathize with the women who fought in this battle. The moral victory is unquestionably theirs, though the seat remains with Smoot.

The Peace of the World

WHILE distrusting appearances and the pacific protestations of European statesmen, there does seem, in the tendency of recent conferences, ground for hope of future peace. The programme for the approaching conference at the Hague, as outlined by the Russian commisssioner, shows an intelligent desire to prevent the outbreak of war, or at least to compel two disputants to exhaust all honorable means of avoiding war before taking the field. It is proposed to increase the powers of courts of arbitration and to organize methods of establishing international "Commissions of Inquiry." The danger with quarreling nations is the same as with individuals, in the first period of the quarrel, when one nation is smarting under a supposed insult or injury and the other nation refuses to discuss the matter or justifies its act. Then passions are strong, the people lose their self-control and demand that their government defend the national honor. The government does not like to be considered cowardly, and shrinks from resisting the popular clamor which injudicious newspapers have whipped up to frenzy and is hurried into war. The old recipe to count fifty before speaking when you are angry, is good for nations, and if the Hague Conference can compel an angry nation to halt, organize an International Commission of Inquiry and present its case to the world before commencing hostilities, an important step will be taken toward the peaceful settlement of disputes.

Another event of hopeful augury is the news of an attempt now being made to establish a good understanding, if not a formal alliance, between England and Russia and their respective allies. If England and Japan abandon the suspicious attitude with which for half a century they have regarded every move of Russia and France, and agree to regard one another not as possible enemies but as friends, and deal with one another on that basis, one of the most dangerous elements in the situation will have been eliminated. We are not saying that those are the most quarrelsome Powers, but they are the Powers which have among them the largest number of burning questions, and they have behind them long years of habitual distrust. If they can agree to live in peace and friendship the probability of a great war is remote; while if they were to make an alliance defensive and offensive, war would become practically impossible. The prospects of peace have thus become brighter and we may hope that the Conference at the Hague will render them still more roseate. Who can tell how soon the sword may be ground into a ploughshare and the big stick be sent to a museum as a useless implement of a barbarous age?

Saving One Life

FROM a reader in Brockport, N. Y., who signs "Perplexed," we have this communication:

Dear Editor:—I am very sure many who have heard through your Christlike paper of the frightful state of things in China, long at least to save one life.

How many dollars would be needed to keep one man, one woman or one child from starving, say, for six months?

It seems as if one felt they had a father, mother or sister there, and if it were within their means, they would not feel the task so appalling as to try to do good to 15,000,000. Perhaps to provide for a week or a month or even a day might be all some could do.

We are not surprised that our correspondent should regard the situation in China as appalling. The mind recoils at the thought of the vast multitudes of famine refugees who are being driven by hunger hither and thither, aimlessly, hopelessly, leaving a train of dead and dying in their wake. It is difficult for the human mind to grasp the fact that millions of human beings, scattered over a territory of 40,000 square miles, are even now dying of starvation. How impotent seems man in the face of a calamity so overwhelming!

Still, if each of us does our individual share, little though it may be, it will greatly reduce the suffering. We may not be able to save all, but with God's help we may be instrumental in rescuing hundreds, aye, thousands, of these perishing ones. Working together, our cumulative efforts will accomplish in China what they accomplished in India, in Japan, in Finland, in Armenia, where tens of thousands gratefully acknowledged that they owed their lives to the prompt assistance rendered by God's people in America.

If every reader of this journal undertakes as a duty and a privilege to save the life of one poor man, woman or child in China, the divine blessing will attend that effort, and make it successful and multiply it abundantly. This is the experience of the past and we have not a shadow of doubt that it will be repeated.

To our friend in Brockport, and to all others who wish to help China in her time of trial, we would say: Resolve now to save one life at least, if you can do no more. This is easily within your reach, as these figures, which are those furnished by the Missionary Committee on the famine field, prove:

20 cents will save a life for a week.
10 cents a day will feed a small family.
$1 will feed a family of five one week.
$5 will save 6 lives 1 month.
$3 will save 1 life 3 months.
$10 will keep a family over the pinch.
$100 will save a small community.

All contributions sent to this journal are cabled through the Department of State and distributed by the missionaries at the front.

Among the Workers

—EVANGELIST GEORGE BENNARD and John Allen labored recently among the people of Little Valley, N. Y., for four weeks with much success. About seventy-five conversions are reported.

—PROF. R. A. TORREY closed a six weeks' series of services at Cleveland, O., February 10. It is claimed that fully 2,000 conversions have resulted.

—REV. CELMENT THOMAS, a Welsh revivalist, who took part in the great spiritual awakening in that country several years ago, is now holding services in different towns throughout Ohio.

—EVANGELISTS HART AND MAGANN, of Fairbury, Ill., are conducting revival meetings in the First M. E. Church, Albion, Mich. Other meetings, recently held in Trenton, N. J., were notable for the number of men who sought Christ.

—EVANGELIST J. W. MAHOOD and his associate, Rev. J. W. Potter, have had great success in the revival they have been conducting at Warren, Pa. Nine churches united in the meeting and two hundred confessed Christ in the first two weeks.

—AT ST. JOSEPH RIVER VALLEY, MICH., Pastor Hoyt, of the Baptist Church, has just finished a series of meetings, which lasted eight weeks. The membership of the Sunday School was greatly increased and a society of young converts organized.

—COL. NOEL GAINES, of Frankfort, Ky., is now at Atlantic City, N. J., where he has been assisting two other evangelists in the notable Union Revival and Temperance Crusade now in progress there. One of his co-workers is Rev. George R. Stuart, of Tenn., formerly Sam Jones' evangelistic associate, and the other is Rev. Clarence B. Strouse, Methodist evangelist from Virginia. Their united work has been greatly blessed.

Japan's Government Grateful

IMPERIAL JAPANESE EMBAS

Death on the Rail

, New York and its neighborhood was shocked on February 16, by the report of a railroad horror involving the death of twenty-one persons and the of about 150 others. The accident occurred on arlem division of the New York Central, which has ly inaugurated the electrical traction system. This nly the second trip the train had made under that n. It was scheduled to leave New York soon after clock in the evening, and thence to run to White s as an express and proceed to Brewster as a local. s a few minutes late in getting away from the al's yard, and put on extra speed to reach White s on time. When it reached Bronx Park Station, ilroad officials say it was traveling at a speed of miles an hour; but some of the passengers say the was at least seventy miles, and a brakeman another road, who was a passenger on the estimates it as at least sixty miles an hour. rt distance beyond the station the track s to the left. As it took the curve the rear ft the rails, bumped a short distance on es and then turned on its side. The coup- held and the motorman, knowing nothing hat had occurred, kept up his speed, drag- the rear car on its side. In another minute ar had pulled the car ahead of it off the It, too, turned on its side, and dragged the head of that off. For an awful minute the went on, dragging the three overturned r and then it came to a stand. The awful s were immediately apparent. Passengers been flung on the side of the car that was on es; some of them fell through the windows were ground beneath the car; others were ed under the seats and torn limb from limb. s an appalling sight. The track for about hundred yards was strewn with mangled s, separated limbs, fragments of clothing bloodstained splinters of the cars. Some ngers who had fallen against doors or the of seats, and so kept from falling on the ered sides of the cars, were still alive, but was danger of their being burned, for the had fallen on the third rail and short cir- the current. Happily, a fireman was on who realized the peril, and he rushed to the near- re-alarm box and summoned help. The flames were ily extinguished and the work of rescue began. injured were attended by surgeons, hurried to the from all quarters, and the dead were taken to s to await identification.

he investigation already in progress makes the ery of the accident still deeper. The Commis- ers are in doubt whether even the story, as originally , is correct. Some have reached the conclusion that motor cars were first to leave the rails. It is all the difficult to form a reliable opinion, because the pany promptly removed the wreck of the train and red the track, so that traffic might be resumed. tever may be the final decision as to details, there be no doubt that the real cause of the disaster was speed at which the train was carried around the e, and the same habit caused a similar disaster ntly in England. The railroad Companies blame the lic for the speed with which they must run trains, but excuse does not hold. They know, as the passenger ot, where the danger line is, he is not so foolish as to desire Companies to pass that line. ter, he would say, that he reach destination a few minutes later risk not reaching it at all. re is no consideration that can gh against safety. Men under- d this in relation to their phys- life, though they often forget hen their eternal life is in stion.

search, which shows how ng is the faith of scholars in the iptural records, in spite of the bts expressed by scoffers, is ut to begin in Asia Minor. Sir lliam Ramsay and a party of lorers are setting out to search the tablets stored in the an- nt temples of the Hittites. Lord Strathcona, of Canada, has placed at the disposal of the expedition the sum of $2,500, and he will give the same amount every year for five years, on condition that they search specially for a particular tablet. This is the tablet recording Abraham's purchase of the cave of Machpelah. The transaction is described in Genesis 23, and it was evidently a very formal affair. Abraham refused to receive the field as a gift, but paid for it in "money current with the merchant" and was very careful that the land should be "made sure unto him for a possession." This could be done at that time only by having his title recorded in soft clay, which was afterwards baked and deposited in the local temple for safe keeping. Thousands of such tablets have been found in good condition in the cellars of the temples under the desert sands. The tablet would be practically imperishable and careful search will be made for it. Its discovery would set at rest many doubts that have been raised as to the authenticity of the sacred record. It will be the best of all times for it to come to light, because in these days men have learned to read the ancient characters which were in use at the time it was made and will be able to recognize it and perceive its value. So will the promise be fulfilled.

Truth shall spring out of the earth (Psalm 85: 11).

A Ship on an Iceberg

One of the deepest mysteries ever presented by the sea is that reported by the captain of the Emilie Galline, a French vessel, which has recently reached Portland, Ore., from the Antarctic. While near the Falkland Islands the vessel ran into a field of icebergs and had great difficulty in threading a course among them. In searching for a channel the man on the lookout called out that there was a ship on the ice. The captain changed his course to get as near as was safe to the strange object. There, upon the crest of a giant iceberg, the captain saw, perched on the summit of an inaccessible crag, a ship as large as the one on which he was sailing. He made out that she was of iron and had once three masts. These, however, were gone, broken off apparently by some tremendous hurricane. He tried to make out her name with the aid of his telescope, but her bow and stern were so thickly coated with ice that it was impossible. The ship had evidently been deserted, for, though it was carefully watched, there were no signals, as there undoubtedly would have been if any of the crew were on board. The theory of the discoverers is that the ice had formed around the ship at the part where the hull tapers off to the keel, and as the pressure increased, the vessel rose until it was held in an upright position on the ice. The ice increased in thickness, raising the ship upon it until it stood on the summit of the icy crag. What became of the crew, or what was the identity of the vessel, or how long it is since it rose to its position on the iceberg no one knows. It is, perhaps, the mute evidence of an unknown tragedy, in which men perished in darkness and solitude. If this was so we can but hope there may have been among them some who knew that in that awful loneliness they were not beyond the loving care of God.

Whither shall I go from thy spirit. . . . . If I take the wings of the morning, and dwell in the uttermost parts of the sea; even there shall thy hand lead me, and thy right hand shall hold me (Psalm 139: 7-10).

A Blind Man's Idea of Color

There has always been some curiosity as to the conception of color that there must be in the mind of a man blind from birth. He clearly can have no idea of what color means, and it has occasioned some surprise to find that in some instances it is associated with music. The reporter of a journal published in Cleveland, Ohio, put the question to a man in that city who had been born blind, and received this answer: "A person blind from birth, as I have been, can have no proper conception of color. To me color is sound, or rather, music. When I hear the word red, for example, I instantly think of a high, piercing note of music; blue is to me a delicately sounded note, fairly high and pleasing in tone; green is a soft tone and rather low, quiet and restful, while yellow is lively, quick little notes, rapidly sounding and causing pleasure, almost to laughter. Black, alas, is the only color we can realize, for we are told that that is the absence of all light, and we know only too well what that means." He interprets the things he does not know by the things that he does know, and it is astonishing how well he has done it! Perhaps, when we get our spiritual sense, we may similarly find that our conception of things celestial has fallen short of the reality.

Eye hath not seen nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man, the things which God hath prepared for them that love him (I. Cor. 2:9).

A Boy Blocks the Subway

How easily the long trains that pass through New York's Subway may be thrown into confusion, was shown last week by a boy of fourteen. There are in the pavement of the streets above it long ventilators. One of these gratings near the Brooklyn Bridge needed repairs and a gang of men was sent to make them. The boy stood watching them at their work and waited until they went to their dinner. When the men got far enough away, leaving a large coil of copper wire on the grating, he lost no time in making some experiments with the third rail which carries the electricity thirty feet below the grating. In a few minutes the system was short circuited and trains throughout the whole section stood still. Hundreds of passengers were delayed by the mischievous trick. It does not need much skill or power to paralyze a great work. It can be done by a very insignificant instrument if he is endowed with the spirit of mischief.

It is as sport to a fool to do mischief (Prov. 10: 23).

Lifting One of the Shattered Cars From the Track on to Its Trucks

What has Become of Old-fashioned Gallantry?

By MARGARET E. SANGSTER

PEOPLE who are interested in the picturesque aspect of language, and who like to get at the root of words, often find a good deal of suggestion in the primary meaning of a term. Gallantry springs from a French root, and carries with it a thought of youth, splendor, pomp and brilliance, fast following upon which come politeness, courtesy, devotion to women, kindness to the weak, and all those gentle and deferential attentions that ease social intercourse, and make life a thing of sweetness and happiness, even in the midst of the daily round of care.

The Scottish word "callant" is a corruption of gallant, and conveys again the imagery of youth, of the lad with the headlong dash, and the blithe courage and valiant daring which belong to us when the heart is young. That the fine gold of gallantry has been debased and a spurious coin sometimes takes its place, argues nothing against the viriginal purity of the real thing; most realities in this world have had sooner or later their counterfeits, but it is the dross only that perishes; the gold abides, though it be tried by fire. And, thererefore, in this material age of ours, a period full of bustle and hurry and fierce competition and frantic excitement, a period when men make haste to be rich and women to be luxurious, we chronicle indeed the passing of a certain sort of gallantry, and concede with sorrow that a certain fineness of old-school manner is on the decline.

Chivalry in the Home

In the countless happy homes of the land, there are still shown in unabated measure the fidelity, constancy and devotion of husbands and wives; a man choosing one woman from the world, is faithful to her through all change and disaster, measuring other women by her; his ideal, cleaving to her, let fortune do its best or its worst; not always with enough expression, but yet with the love that seems to itself to need no special demonstration. The husband worships his wife from youth to silver hair.

"The shallows murmur, but the deeps are dumb." There is unstinted attention to the old and the feeble. Sunday after Sunday, in a village church, I have seen a strong man in the prime of his life rise and assist from the auditorium the faltering steps of his mother, well on in years and back again in her second childhood, a mother who insists on coming to church, though very rarely does she feel able to remain through a service. No knight ever in the middle ages paid his devoir to a lady fair with more gallantry than this good man has displayed to his mother.

In a home that I know, a wife has spent many years a prisoner, bound hand and foot on a couch of relentless pain. The man who proudly led her to the altar when her eyes were bright and her cheeks like the damask rose, ministers to her yet, when her cheeks are pallid, her eyes hollow and her hands knotted and gnarled with the long anguish of a cruel spinal malady. Never a syllable of impatience crosses his lips, never a shadow of irritation darkens his face; he is her lover, her knight, her comforter still. Let none of us say that gallantry has gone out of the world.

Manners on the Road

But we do miss in modern life and in our manners on the road, a certain air of gracious courtesy which was once our American boast. It lingers strangely enough in our more primitive localities and in our towns remote from centres, but in the core of commercial towns we cannot claim that there is the spontaneous attention to women which womanhood accepts as a compliment, and delights in as a homage to the sex. Formerly no woman, for instance, was ever permitted to stand in a public conveyance, the men usurping the seats and shrouding their oblivious countenances behind the convenient blankets of obliging newspapers.

To-day, in New York at least, it is the exceptional young man who rises to give a seat to a woman, young or old. The pretty girl stands but little more chance of this small courtesy than the elderly woman. The youth composedly retains his seat, strong in the panoply of privilege, for has he not paid for it? Old gentlemen, trained in a more gracious school, are held by the customs of their breeding, and rise to offer a place to the laundress with her basket, the woman with her child in her arms, or the lady of their own station with equal courtesy.

The "Rudest Place" in America

New York is, however, the rudest place on the continent, and around her ferries and at Brooklyn Bridge at the rush hours women are hustled and crowded and shoved and pushed and well-nigh trampled upon, as if the men who do this were savages from Dahomey. San Francisco, on the contrary, treats women with a polished courtesy reminiscent of those days of '49, when the rough miners and the crowd of gentlemen adventurers in search of gold welcomed every woman of whatever degree as if she had been a queen. A young officer, long on the frontier in hard service, seeing no woman's gentle face, hearing no woman's tender voice, sprang from his horse as he passed through a hamlet on his return to civilization and kissed the hem of a woman's apron hanging on a line to dry. Here was gallantry. Such gallantry is first cousin to that famous gallantry of Sir Walter Raleigh, who spread his cloak in the road that Queen Elizabeth might walk to her palace dry shod.

Instances of Gallantry

Instances of gallantry are not wanting, sporadic as it may be, but beautiful as lilies and shining as stars, and we see them in unexpected hours and places. For example, I sat one hot day in a street car and saw a woman, large and clumsy, red-faced, panting, and shabbily dressed, trying to climb, encumbered by crutches, into her place. The conductor, unaided, could not succeed in settling her comfortably, but two gentlemen hastened to her assistance, saying, "Take your time, madam, we can all wait for you; don't be worried."

A few weeks ago, in a train that plies between Jersey City and Newark, an Italian peasant woman with a babe in her arms and another tugging at her skirts, encumbered, too, with a great nondescript bundle tied up in a newspaper, found herself baffled in getting her children and her belongings out of the car at a wayside station. Time pressed, up rose a lad with college-student in every line of his cultured face and prosperity elegant clothing and manliness in the fine, swift c of his deed. Grasping a child and the bundle, h "Follow me, madam," and handed the poor wom the grace of a cavalier, lifting his hat to her polite returning to his seat with the utter unconscious one who had done nothing remarkable. If galla on the wane, where shall we find reasons to explai

In the stubborn competitions of trade, women not only stand side by side with men, but are acc taking places that men formerly filled. The little ing typewriter has its army of young girls, who m late it with dexterity and earn their own live These young women, neat, smiling, business-lik their work and earn their wages side by side wit They ask no favors, they not only scorn gallantri for their own self-respect and safety must be stric personal, asking an cepting no concessi the score of sex. W to-day are doing everything that men c only disqualifications those caused by ph disability. They d blast rocks with dyn nor dig subways, nor scaffoldings to build br nor run railway trains they are doctors, la ministers and journ dentists, barbers, keepers and book a they are in every sh every counting-roo every factory. One m women in this land go every morning to ar factory work. Not a on our hands, a shoe o feet, a garment o bodies, a viand on our t that some woman's fi have not touched shaped. You stand paper mill, a silk m cotton mill, and you rows and rows and ro girls at the loom, stan hour by hour, mana wheel and belt and k and doing work that in lier days, when the h loom was the care of the at home, was never con ted to women's hands. M ern inventions, ap science, skilled labor sh by women, and the unp leled multiplication of ficial needs, with the aggregations of wealth the land, have change face of industry, and cannot expect men to gallant to women who are conspicuously not depend who are conspicuously equal to maintaining themsel and who absolutely crowd out their brothers, by d the work fully as well as the brothers could, and at remuneration. Is it not a part of the present-day c in the indictment, that in many fields where women the work quite as efficiently, quite as well, they are liberally paid?

A MARKET AT MARSEILLES

Morning and sun, and plenty to do,
Where the ships they come, and the ships they go;
And there's money to earn, and wherever you turn
People are hurrying to and fro.

Something to sell, and something to buy,
And the cheer of a smile in each kindly face,
You could hardly be sad, however you'd try,
In the pleasant glow of the market-place.

How are We to Improve the Situation?

If old-school manners are passing, and it be wel revive them, how should we set about it? Perhaps little more gracious courtesy in our daily life; perh by a more solicitous training of our sons and daught by accustoming our boys to yield seats in public; to when ladies enter a room or leave it; to lift the ha friends on the street; to perform little services as a ma of course; to accompany guests to the door when t take their leave. We should drop the postal card, exc for business purposes, and write the more ceremoni letter. We should insist on a general improvement feminine manners, in according thanks for fav received, in behaving everywhere like ladies—a la being, in Hamerton's phrase, a woman in a high st of civilization.

The Grim Battle with Death—Great Multitudes Surely Doomed Unless Help Comes

By WILLIAM T. ELLIS

In the course of my day's work as a journalist, I have had to witness fire, flood, earthquake and ... I thought I knew something about dreadful ...sters, but nothing that has ever come within my ...onal observation has been at all comparable in ...or with this awful Chinese famine, which is daily ...ing a great harvest of human life. The suffering ... is infinitely greater than at San Francisco, and a ...dredfold worse than that caused by the Japanese ...ine.

...swift and wholesale death were all, it would not ...o bad. Could these famine victims die as men die ...war, the terror of it would be lessened by half. ...th is not the worst; I can watch, unmoved, the ... activity of the coffin-makers, who ply their trade ... within their rice-kitchen enclosures as a necessary ... of the relief work. When a woman pleaded yester- ... with my missionary hostess, on a visit to the camp, ... the gift of a coffin in which to bury her husband ... had died in the morning, I was not particularly ...ck with the pathos of it.

...he reason why the fact of death seems such a lesser ..., is simply that the hunger-cry of the freezing and ... starving is all about me. ...isten! Can you hear the ...ldren crying? Do you ...member how the noise ...de by that sick baby af- ...ted you last summer? Here ...one camp, all to be heard ...the same instant, are hun- ...ds of babies crying, cry- ..., crying for food that ...nes not. I am warmly ...d, but I shiver as I walk. ...ese babies have only a few ...ters between them and ... winter's blasts, as they ... on the bare earth, and ...y are hungry. They ...not philosophize about hunger as their parents do ...d endure it with grim stoicism; nature taught them to ... when in want or in suffering, and nature designed ...t their needs should be met. But this thin wail, ...ich writes itself on your mind like sound upon a ...onograph cylinder, is all in vain. There is no food; ...ere is no warmth.

To-day I saw a mother and a babe whose only home ...s a three feet screen of rushes, so scant as to be ...sily seen through, piled up on end to form a wind- ...eak. That was all. On three sides, the spot on ...ich they crouched had not even this futile shelter. ...ost of their neighbors had at least one mat, three feet ... four in measurement, to keep off the wind or the rain ...ould it come. This little family had not even that ...uch. There was only the frozen earth underneath, ...e handful of rushes to the windward, nothing on three ...les and nothing above. The mother had received a ...wl of food, which she was devouring ravenously. ...he babe at her bare breast had been given its portion ... a small bowl; no other attention was paid to it by ...e famished mother, who did not even heed the passage ... some foreigners, and showed no interest whatever ...hen I drew near and tried to photograph the abject ...ure.

The temptation is almost irresistible to pile incident ...pon incident. An hour spent among the huts—rarely ...ore than four feet high, made only of reeds or mat- ...ng, through which the biting wind whistles at will— ...rnishes a score of stories. In one hut I counted eight children under six years of age, and no adult; the older ones were trying to hush the feeble whimperings of the wee infants. Doubtless there was more than one family represented; probably such of the parents as survive were off seeking food. I wished that this spectacle, in all its heartrending pitiableness, could be transported for one hour to Broadway or Fifth Avenue, the result would be a stream of gifts that would quickly alleviate the worst of this famine, and abolish such scenes as I had witnessed a few rods back, where the occupants of three huts in a row were engaged in picking over a few handfuls of green leaves—"sweet grass" we call it in America—to convert them into food.

Camping Amid the Dead

All around the Chinkiang camp the graves and fields are now raw earth, having been denuded of almost every blade of grass and weed for use as food or fuel. For where uncooked rice is given out, as at Nanking, there must be fire to cook it, and naturally people who have no money for food have none for fuel.

The incidental wants of the famine sufferers suggest harrowing phases of the situation. Here is a woman who pleads with you to give her some vessel that will hold food; she has broken her rice bowl, and even though she can get to the relief line, she has no means of carrying away the food. While making the rounds of the Chinkiang camp with Mrs. J. W. Paxton, of the Southern Presbyterian Mission, who, though not a physician, was ministering, by means of simple remedies, to the suffering of numerous patients out of the many who thronged her, there drew near a man bearing a baby in his bosom, a poor, scrawny, unwashed, unconscious little invalid, for whom he does not know how to care now that its mother has been taken. His case is so dire that Mrs. Paxton takes him aside secretly to impart directions for reaching the missionary hospital; the location of the latter she dare not make known to the mass, lest they overwhelm it. Out of sight of the crowd, I put my hand into my pocket; instantly the man with the unconscious babe wrapped inside his own clothes, drops on his knees beseeching help, with an abjectness of pleading that is simply unendurable. Scores of these sufferers have knelt to me for help, as to every other foreigner, and it is really too much for me, since the officials, fearful of trouble, plead with us not to bestow individual alms.

What may be said of another case which confronted Mrs. Paxton at the same moment, a woman scarcely out of girlhood, whose heart had been filled with glad anticipations of the coming of her firstborn, but who could only look forward in terror to bringing forth a child that could scarcely live to call her mother amid surroundings far meaner than those of Mary, the Nazareth maiden, when her hour came at Bethlehem? Only the frozen ground for a bed, a mat shelter, in which there would scarcely be room for an attendant friend, even on her knees, and not a shred of clothing or a spark of fire to make welcome the new life into the world. Multiply the lot of this young woman many hundredfold, and you have one of the minor aspects of the suffering in the famine camps.

So Weak They Cannot Eat

Of the many who crowded about Mrs. Paxton yesterday seeking relief in their illness, there were oh! so many whose complaint was that they cannot eat food when they get it—loss of appetite on the part of the famishing! Poor creatures; they do not know that the beginning of the end has come, and that they are entering upon one of the last stages of starvation.

To-day I am in Nanking, the ancient capital of China. There are more refugees here than at Chinkiang, as there are more at Yangchow than here, and more at Tsinkiangpu than at all three of these places combined. The Chinese officials in charge of the relief distribution at this place told me that they are feeding fifty-five thousand homes, each with an average membership of seven or eight persons.

There are three camps of refugees here, all outside of the city walls. Other refugees, in groups or single huts, are scattered all about the wall and canal, and even inside of the city itself. Three facts about all these encampments will probably strike every visitor forcibly. First is the diminutive size of the huts. They are actually no higher, and frequently no wider, than the average kennel of a collie dog. The dwellers cannot stand in them, of course, nor yet enter them stooping, they must literally crawl in. Being open at one end, the people crowd to the closed end, to be as far away from the wintry blasts as possible

The second fact is the unsubstantial character of the huts. The best of them are made of cheap woven matting, and a fortunate refugee will carry on his back as many as four or five oblong strips of this, which gives him a hut about five feet wide, nearly four feet high, and eight feet deep. Through every inch of these walls the piercing wind can find their way, and when the expected rain comes it will filter through quite readily. The fortunate have only one or two sheets of this matting, others have none, and endure their lot beneath the open sky with only the sun to warm them. There they crouch, covered only by their inadequate rags, while I, dressed as warmly as ever as I was dressed in my life, suffered from the penetrating cold. Some children that I noticed were buried in leaves and scraps of straw which had been saved from the fire for this purpose. The third fact is the great number of old women and little children who huddle in the doorways of thes improvised shelters, or wander spiritless about the camps.

The Government's Dole

It is to be borne in mind that this is not the famine district; the worst is ahead of me. These are only refugees who have had the foresight, enterprise and strength to flee from their homes in the devastated district to these walled cities, where their numbers command attention. The government is feeding these, after a fashion. They are supposedly receiving a daily average of one and a-quarter cents for each adult and ane cent for each child.

It should be further remembered that the government has guaranteed to give each sufferer thirty cash a day—about one and a-half cents. Because of China's immemorial corruption, not all of this will reach the needy; but, thanks to the vigorous measures of the Shanghai Committee and the vigilance of the missionaries, the "squeezing" is being kept down to an extraordinary
